Survey of interstate crime - conducted by special Senate subcommittee (page 437).

Reorganization Plans

SUMMARY

The President submitted 27 reorganization plans to Congress in 1950. Twenty of the plans went through; six were rejected by the Senate, one was killed by the House.

The plans were designed to change the administrative set-up of a variety of departments and independent agencies of the Executive Branch of the government. The President drew up the reorganization plans and then submitted them to Congress for consideration. The plans, in general, consolidated functions of scattered agencies or abolished unnecessary functions.

60 Days To Examine

Congress had 60 days to examine each plan. If it was opposed by a Congressman, the Congressman introduced a resolution to reject it. The resolution was then submitted to either the House or the Senate Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Department for hearings.

If the resolution passed either house, the plan died. If the 60 days passed without final action on a rejecting resolution, then the plan became effective automatically.

12 Non-controversial

Of the 27 plans submitted, 12 were non-controversial. No rejecting resolutions were introduced, and the plans became effective at the end of sixty days. Eight rejecting resolutions were voted down by the house concerned, and those plans also went into effect in 60 days. The other seven rejecting resolutions were passed by one house, and those plans died.

Provisions

Here is a brief summary of all 1950 reorganization plans, and the action on them taken by Congress:

BACKGROUND

Major efforts to reorganize the Executive Branch of the federal government began in 1912. That first study of government reorganization was followed by two in 1923, and by three others; in 1932, 1937 and 1939. In the immediate post World War II years, Presidents Roosevelt and Truman submitted several reorganization plans to Congress.

These past attempts met with varying success, and in 1947 Congress decided a thorough investigation by experts should be made of the entire Executive Branch. The sporadic reorganization tries were dropped. and Congress turned the entire problem over to a Commission on the Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government (Hoover Commission) under the chairmanship of former President Herbert C. Hoover.

The Commission submitted extensive findings and recommendations in 1949. Congress then passed the Reorganization Act of 1949 (Public Law 109, 81st Congress) authorizing the President to submit reorganization plans for consideration by Congress.

President Truman sent seven plans to Congress in 1949. Six plans became effective after 60 days, although some of the six met with opposition. One plan was rejected by the Senate. (For additional background on governmental reorganization, see CQ Almanac Vol. V, p. 554 ff.).

Previous Lobby Activity

The general aims of the reorganization plans—economy and efficiency in government—were endorsed everywhere. But when the revamping got down to specific agencies, many groups said the recommended changes were not truly in the interest of good government.

This tendency had a wide variety of groups opposing one plan or other. For example:

About a month before release of the 1950 reorganization plans, the Citizens Committee for the Hoover Report said: "Vested interests appear more anxious to 'save their own skins' than they are to save the taxpayer a possible quarter of a billion dollars."

Robert L. L. McCormick, research director of the Citizens Committee told the Senate Expenditures Committee, "We are under pressure to modify our position on 15 of the 21 reorganization plans submitted to Congress by the President this year. If we yield on one, we open the door on all the others."

Pressures on streamlining the government were not all leveled at particular plans. A big share of the reorganization requests pouring in on Congressmen were simply for putting into effect all Hoover report recommendations.

Spearhead of this drive was the Citizens Committee for the Hoover Report. Reorganization News, its monthly publication, printed the query from an Illinois housewife on S 2213 "to take the Post Office out of politics". "If there is no opposition, why on earth do our elected representatives need to be prodded? Do we have to write to Washington about every reorganization item? What are they there for?"

Commented Reorganization News: "Traditionally, Congress bends its sails to the winds of public opinion. Most Congressmen honestly believe that they are 'there' for the very purpose of being prodded. They want and need to hear from citizens—on every issue."

On the overall progress of reorganization, the Hoover Report publication said, "Controversy is to be expected wherever change is contemplated. One of the finest byproducts of the Reorganization program, in fact, is the impetus it has given to public thought and discussion on problems of government management."

Petitions Gathered

Another group carrying the torch for reorganization was the U.S. Junior Chamber of Commerce. Ten days after introduction of Truman's first 21 plans, the Junior Chamber presented Congress with petitions signed by 3 million people in 1,800 communities requesting efficient and economic operation of the government.

The petitions asked reorganization along lines of the Hoover report recommendations. The Junior Chamber rated the Truman plans a "good beginning" but amounting to "only a fraction" of the reorganization to be done.

The Kalamazoo Junior Chamber of Commerce (Mich.) sent Congressmen questionnaires asking to what extent they favored the Hoover recommendations and if they thought "much of the value of the recommendations is being lost because of the method and order" in which the recommendations were presented for legislative action.

General Support

Generally, the Citizens Committee for the Hoover Report gave general endorsement to 23 of the Truman plans, refusing to back four plans because the Hoover findings were "not specific" regarding them. These were Plans Nos. 12, 17, 24 and 27.

Plan 12, the Citizens Committee stated, "conforms to the Commission's general philosophy on organization" but it "raised issues which are not wholly organizational, but are matters of national, political and economic policy".

The other plans, the Citizens Committee said generally conform with the Hoover recommendations, though "most of these plans are by no means complete" and did not include all the changes the Commission advocated.

(Specific lobby stands on all individual plans which met with opposition appear in the section devoted to that plan in the following narrative.)

ACTION ON PLANS

Plan No. 1

In line with Hoover Commission recommendations, the first six reorganization plans of 1950 centralized in six department heads the functions of as many Cabinet departments. Of these, Plan No. 1 transferred to the Secretary of the Treasury all functions scattered throughout the Department, except the functions of hearing examiners and except the operations of the Coast Guard, which becomes a part of the Navy in time of war or when the President so directs. Plan No 1 also authorized the Secretary to delegate functions; to appoint an Administrative Assistant Secretary, with the approval of the President, under the classified civil service, and to make those transfers of records, property, personnel, and funds which were required to carry out this plan.

The plan would have shifted to the Secretary the powers scattered among the (1) Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, (2) Bureau of Internal Revenue, (3) Bureau of Customs, (4) Bureau of Narcotics, (5) Bureau of the Mint, (6) Bureau of Engraving and Printing, (7) Fiscal Service, (8) United States Secret Service, and (9) United States Coast Guard.

Two disapproving resolutions were introduced March 31, (S. Res. 246 and S. Res. 247.) Res 246 was favorably reported on April 25 by the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments and was adopted in the Senate by a vote of 65 to 13 on May 11. Reorganization Plan No. 1 was thereby rejected.

COMMITTEE

The Senate Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Department April 11 turned to the resolutions calling for disapproval of Plan No. 1. Opposition to the proposal was expressed by Treasury Secretary John Snyder. Snyder sent the Committee a statement stating his view that "the national banking system would not long remain intact, strong, and vigorous without leadership by the Comptroller of the Currency, which has no other function than its supervision and administration." He declared he saw no need for this "new channel of authority" in the Treasury Department.

Sen. A. Willis Robertson (D Va.), author of one of the rejection resolutions (S Res 246) and Homer E. Capehart (R Ind.), author of the other (S Res 247), also registered their opposition to the Plan. Robertson said April 11 it would "relegate the Comptroller to messenger boy status." Capehart recommended disapproval of the Plan because it would not serve public interest. Sen. Burnet R. Maybank (D S.C.) said the Banking and Currency Committee, of which he was chairman, had voted without dissent to recommend rejection of the Plan.

The case for the President's Plan was presented April 12 by Frederick J. Lawton, Director of the Bureau of the Budget. He said he felt that "the line of responsibility running from the President to the Secretary of the Treasury to the Comptroller of the Currency should be clearly drawn." He stressed the Plan stemmed directly from recommendations of the (Hoover) Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government. Robert L. L. McCormick, research director of the Citizens Committee for the Hoover Report, said the entire Government reorganization program would be "wrecked" if the Currency Comptroller was not put under control of the Treasury Department.

Opposition to the Plan also came from spokesmen for the National Association of Supervisors of State Banks and the American Bankers Association. D. Emmert Brumbaugh, chairman of the legislative committee of the former group, said April 11 the Plan would be the first step toward nationalization of banking. ABA spokesmen, who included F. Raymond Peterson, ABA president and Robert V. Fleming, contended April 12 the Plan would make the Currency Comptroller a "captive" of the Treasury Department.

The Robertson resolution rejecting Plan No. 1 was approved on an 8-3 vote April 17, in effect putting the Committee's stamp of disapproval on the plan. Opposing the resolution, and therefore supporting the plan, were Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.), Edward L. Leahy (D R.I.) and William Benton (D Conn.). Those voting for the resolution were: Clyde R. Hoey (D N.C.), Herbert R. O'Conor (D Md.) Joseph R. McCarthy (R Wis.), Irving M. Ives (R N.Y.), Karl E. Mundt (R S.D.), Margaret Chase Smith (R Maine), Andrew F. Schoeppel (R Kan.), and Committee Chairman John L. McClellan (D Ark.)

DEBATE

The Senate killed Plan No. 1 May 11 by voting 65-13 for Robertson's S Res 246. Robertson told the Senate that opponents of the Plan feared it would "tend to disrupt confidence in our national banking system."

William Benton (D Conn.) blamed opposition to the Treasury reorganization on "a national pressure campaign" by the banks and said, "the banks never want any change," McClellan also joined Robertson in support of his resolution. In the final tally, 29 Democrats and 36 Republicans united to support the measure—in effect, to reject the Plan—and 13 Democrats and 3 Republicans aligned themselves against it.

LOBBY STANDS

Disagreement over Plan 1 brought sharp cleavage. The dispute, over bringing the semi-independent Comptroller of the Currency office completely under departmental control, found Secretary of Treasury John W. Snyder openly opposed to the Truman proposal.

Banking groups all went on record against the Plan, and for continuation of the "dual control" system which they said had worked well for 68 years.

The New York State Bankers Association told members "The American Bankers Association in Washington is exerting every influence at its command to save the independence of the Comptroller's office" and called Plan 1 "a direct challenge to an independent banking system."

One fear expressed by banking interests was that Plan 1 was another move nearer to nationalization of banking.

Support for Plan 1 came from a Salt Lake City banker, Walter E. Cosgriff, president, Continental National Bank and Trust Company, wrote to Congressmen saying that the plan eventually will bring "definite benefits" to national banks. "The Office of the Comptroller of the Currency is, in my opinion," he stated, "one of the most arbitrary and dictatorial bureaus existing in the Government today and . . . any action which would inject new life or new management into this bureau should be immeasurably beneficial to all concerned...

"The writer is fully aware of the fact the American Bankers Association as such has gone on record as opposing this change. This is, in the writer's opinion, due to the fact that the Office of Comptroller of the Currency is very careful to cultivate certain highly placed officials in the American Bankers Association but I am also sure that this fine treatment does not apply to the great majority of banks under the jurisdiction of this office."

Other organizations which, however, opposed Plan 1 were: American Bankers Association, state and national bank divisions; Reserve City Bankers Association; National Asso-

In accord with Hoover Commission recommendations, Plan No. 2 transferred to the Attorney General all functions of all other officers of the Department of Justice and all functions of all agencies and employees of such Department. This centralization of authority was not applied, however, to the functions vested in hearing examiners, nor to the functions of Federal Prison Industries, Inc., of the Board of Directors and officers of the Federal Prison Industries, Inc., or of the Board of Parole.

Plan No. 2 authorized the Attorney General to delegate functions, to transfer "records, property, personnel, and unexpended balances" of funds required by reorganization, and to appoint an Administrative Assistant Attorney General under the classified civil service, with the approval of the President. The plan also authorized the President, by and with the consent of the Senate, to appoint an additional Assistant Attorney General in place of the office of Assistant Solicitor General which was abolished.

No resolution of disapproval was introduced on this plan. A favorable report was submitted to the Senate May 19. The Plan became effective on May 24.

Plan No. 3

This plan vested in the Secretary of Interior responsibility for all operating divisions of the Department except for the functions of hearing examiners, the Virgin Islands Corporation, and its officials. The plan authorized the Secretary of Interior to delegate functions, to appoint an administrative Assistant Secretary from the Civil Service subject to the approval of the President at a salary of $14,000 a year, and provided for the appointment of an additional Assistant Secretary of the Interior by the President subject to confirmation by the Senate. Reported favorably by the Senate Committee on Expenditures May 10, Plan No. 3 became effective May 24, no resolution of disapproval having been filed against it.

Plan No. 4

Reorganization Plan No. 4 provided for reorganization of the Department of Agriculture; for the transfer of all the functions then vested in other officers, employees, and agencies of the Department of Agriculture to the Secretary, except the functions conferred on hearing examiners, corporations, boards of directors and officers of such corporations, and the Advisory Board of the Commodity Credit Corporation; established two additional Assistant Secretaries to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate; and authorized the establishment of the office of an Administrative Assistant Secretary under the classified civil service.

Committee

A resolution of disapproval (S. Res. 263) was introduced in the Senate and referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. The Committee reported the resolution of disapproval favorably on May 16, 7-5. The majority of the Committee said that the plan contained an unwarranted delegation of authority to the Secretary on a permanent and continuing basis without restriction or restraint as to how and when it would be exercised.

DEBATE

The Senate May 18 killed the President's Reorganization Plan 4. The resolution of disapproval (S Res 263) was adopted by voice vote. No defense for the plan was offered on the floor. Though 49 senators were required to register opposition to any plan, here is the way the Agriculture reorganization was defeated:

A quorum call showed 64 Senators present, and Spessard L. Holland (D Fla.), a sponsor of the resolution, moved its adoption. The question was put and the response was a chorus of "yea" votes. Only one "no," from Harley M. Kilgore (D W.Va.) was heard. John J. Sparkman (D Ala.), presiding officer, then declared the resolution was approved by a legal majority.

LOBBY STANDS

Testifying for the plan were Budget Director Frederick Lawton and Agriculture Secretary Charles F. Brannan, but Plan 4 drew opposition from all other groups testifying before the Senate Expenditures Committee.

Seven of eight members of the Hoover Commission task force on agriculture, on which the Commission's recommendations were based, appeared before the committee in strong opposition to Reorganization Plan No. 4. The chairman of the task force, H. P. Rusk, dean of the College of Agriculture of the University of Illinois, stated that the task force in studying the operations of the Department of Agriculture "found that a well-coordinated organization could not be secured by merely shuffling the existing units" and that Reorganization Plan No. 4 "offers no directive in support of any efforts the Secretary may make toward adoption of the basic administrative grouping of functions recommended by the Commission."

Also against Plan 4 were the National Cotton Council, the National Grange, the American Farm Bureau Federation, and the National Council of Farmer Cooperatives.

AFBF said Plan 4 would give "wide discretionary powers to the Secretary . . . without providing legislative guidance" on how reorganization was to be effected.

AFBF said the Hoover Task Force statement in opposition to Plan 4 emphasized that "Pressures from many groups, both within and out of the Department, would face a Secretary considering reorganization."

Plan No. 5

This plan, which became effective May 24, 1950, provided for the reorganization of the Department of Commerce. The plan transferred to the Secretary of Commerce all department functions except those of hearing examiners of the Civil Aeronautics Board, the Inland Waterways Corporation, and the Inland Waterways Corporation Advisory Board. It authorized the Secretary to delegate functions, to appoint an Administrative Assistant Secretary from the classified civil service and to make necessary transfers of records, property, personnel, and funds necessary to carry out the plan.

H. Res. 546, by Joseph R. Bryson (D S.C.) disapproving the plan was reported unfavorably by House Expenditures Committee, May 2. The resolution was rejected by the House May 18 on voice vote after little discussion.

S. Res. 259, by Alexander Wiley (R Wis.) disapproving plan No. 5, was reported, 7-4, by the Senate's

XUM

Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments without recommendation May 16. The resolution was rejected by the Senate May 23, by a vote of 29 to 43 (49 affirmative votes being necessary to approve) the plan thus becoming effective May 24. (see p. 541 for vote)

LOBBY STANDS

Status of the Patent Office was the controversial part of Plan 5, centralizing Department of Commerce power. A National Association of Manufacturers spokesman said the proposed powers for the Secretary of Commerce "would enable him for political or some other motive to jeopardize administration of the Patent Office".

From various sources has come a "determined attack upon our patent system" said NAM. Its spokesman called the U. S. patent system "the best in the world".

Although the Department of Commerce favored Plan 5 in its entirety, the part that would change the status of the Patent Office was opposed by:

St Louis Bar Association, Executive Committee, Patent, Trademark and Copyright Section, National Association of Manufacturers, Patent Law Association of Chicago, Patent Law Association of Pittsburgh, Cleveland Patent Law Association, Patent Law Association of Los Angeles, American Patent Law Association, National Council of Patent Law Associations, American Bar Association, United States Trade-Mark Association, New York Patent Law Association, Connecticut Patent Law Association, National Patent Council, Commerce and Industry Associations of New York, Inc.

Plan No. 6

Plan No. 6 authorized the Secretary of Labor to delegate functions; to transfer records, property, personnel, and unexpended appropriations; and to appoint an Administrative Assistant Secretary from the classified civil service. Its major purpose was to vest greater administrative responsibility for operation of the Department directly in the Secretary, in accordance with the recommendations of the Hoover Commission in its report on General Management of the Executive Branch. Chief target of the Plan was the Wage and Hour Division which was in the Labor Department but functioned semi-independently.

The House Expenditures Committee voted to deliver to the House an adverse report on a resolution (H Res 522), by Wingate H. Lucas (D Tex.) calling for rejection of the Plan.

The Committee took this action after several days of hearings on the Lucas resolution. Support for the Plan — and hence opposition to the resolution — came March 30 from Robert L. L. McCormick, research director of the Citizens Committee for the Hoover Report. Roland Jones, Jr., representing the American Retail Federation, urged rejection of the Plan. He said administration of the Wage-Hour Act required an "impartial", independent bureau chief.

Minority views in the House Committee report said the transfer would place responsiblity for administering and enforcing a regulatory statute affecting employers and employees in the hands of one whose basic duty was to promote the interests of employees.

The House later upheld the Plan by rejecting the resolution to kill it. The Senate Committee reported favorably on Plan 6 even though no resolution opposing it had been introduced. The Plan became effective automatically May 24.

Plan No. 7

This plan, submitted March 13, would have transferred Interstate Commerce Commission functions relating to (1) appointment and supervision of personnel; (2) distribution of business among personnnel or administrative units; and (3) use and expenditure of funds to the Chairman of the ICC. The Chairman would, however, have been governed by general policies of the Commission authorized by law. Appointment by the Chairman of heads of administrative units would have been subject to Commission approval, and full-time, regularly employed personnel in the Commissioners' offices (other than the Chairman's) were exempted from the Budget estimate revision and distribution of appropriated funds were reserved to the Commission.

COMMITTEE

The House Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Department held hearings April 24 and 25 on H Res 545, by Robert Crosser (D Iowa), to reject the plan. The House Committee, however, voted to disapprove the resolution and, in effect, approve Plan 7.

Spokesmen for both railway labor and management were among those urging the House Committee to reject the plan. A. E. Lyon, executive secretary-treasurer of the Railway Labor Executives, testified April 24 the reorganization "could easily result in a reversal of the basic and traditional policy of keeping the Commission entirely free from partisan and political influences"

J. C. Gibson, vice president of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway, and spokesman for the American Association of Railroads, the same day said "the plan impairs the independence of the ICC and opens the way for executive domination of that agency which has always been and should continue to be a bipartisan arm of the Congress".

Appearing April 25 in opposition to the proposed ICC reorganization were R. Granville Curry, past president of the Association of ICC Practitioners; Edgar S. Idol, general counsel, American Trucking Associations, and Giles Morrow, general counsel, Freight Forwarders Institute.

Harold Leventhal, representing the Citizens Committee for the Hoover Report, testified in support of the Plan.

Gibson, again acting as AAR spokesman, also went before the Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, which was also studying Plan 7. He urged rejection of the ICC Plan, as did C. A. Miller, vice-president of the American Short Line Railroad Association. Frederick J. Lawton, director of the Bureau of the Budget, appeared April 24 in support of the Plan.

Unlike the House group, the Senate Committee voted 6-5 May 9 to disapprove the Plan and report favorably S Res 243. The resolution had been introduced by Edwin C. Johnson (D Colo), (who later also introduced resolutions opposing Plans 8, 9 and 11, which called for similar changes in the FTC, FCC and FPC. Johnson said all the Plans were "basically unwise" and "repugnant" to the American system of checks and balances. He said the Plans would turn all the commissions into "one-man" agencies).

DEBATE

On May 17, the Senate took up Johnson's resolution opposing Plan 7 as well as his resolution against Plan 11, to reorganize the Federal Communications Commission.

The three hours the Senate took to make a final decision were highlighted by a fiery attack on the proposal by John L. McClellan (D Ark.), Expenditures Committee chairman. At one point, he accused the President of using the reorganization proposals to make a "grab" for power. He said they were a distortion of the work of the (Hoover) Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government.

"The whole purpose of these plans," McClellan insisted, "is to concentrate more and more power . . . in the chief executive of this nation."

Supporters of the proposals, led by Scott W. Lucas (D Ill.), William Benton (D Conn.)and Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) argued in vain that the President was proposing no more for the agencies than Congress had already approved for other commissions. Lucas also quoted Dr. Robert L. Johnson, chairman of the Citizens Committee for the Hoover Report, as having said the proposals conformed to the general recommendations of the Hoover commission.

But Plan 7 was killed by the Senate when it adopted, 66-13, the disapproving resolution. On the vote, 33 Democrats and 33 Republicans opposed 11 Democrats and two Republicans. (See P. 540).

LOBBY STANDS

Plans 7, 8, 9, and 11, changing structure of the Federal Interstate Commerce, Trade, Power and Communications Commissions, were all opposed. Plan 7 drew most opposition.

Railway Labor Executives' Association and Association of American Railroads said the ICC change would put too much power in the hands of the commission chairmen. American Bar Association said Plan 7 would make all ICC examiners "subject to politics rather than to civil service laws".

Other organizations against Plan 7 were:

Colorado Motor Carriers Association.
American Short Line Railroad Association.
American Bar Association.
Association of American Railroads
Association of Interstate Commerce Commission Practitioners
American Trucking Associations, Inc. (Its executive committee voted 3 to 1 against Plan 7, saying it was a "step in the right direction" but fearing judicial processes might be subject to political influence.)
National Association of Motor Bus Operators
Freight Forwarders Institute
Transportation Association of America
Indiana State Chamber of Commerce
Central Territory Traffic Conference (operating in Indiana, Ohio, Michigan, Illinois, and Wisconsin)
Railway Labor Executives Association
National Industrial Tariff League
National Council of Private Motor Truck Owners

Plan No. 8

This plan which affected the Federal Trade Commission transferred functions relating to (1) appointment and supervision of personnel; (2) distribution of business among personnel or administrative units; and (3) use and expenditure of funds, subject to certain limitations, to the Chairman of the FTC. Budget estimate revision and distribution of appropriated funds were reserved to the Commission.

The plan was submitted March 13.; it became effective May 24, although it was the subject of a disapproving resolution (S Res 254) by Sen. Edwin C. Johnson (D Colo.). Johnson's arguments were similar to those he advanced in opposition to Plan 7, but the Senate Committee voted down his resolution May 9 on a 4-7 vote. On May 19 the Senate turned down the resolution 34-37. (See p. 540).

Plan No. 9

This plan transferred functions relating to (1) appointment and supervision of personnel; (2) distribution of business among personnel or administrative units; and (3) use and expenditure of funds, subject to certain limitations, to the Chairman of the Federal Power Commission. Budget estimate revision and distribution of appropiated funds were reserved to the Commission.

The plan was submitted March 13, it became effective May 24.

Sen. Johnson also introduced a resolution (S Res 255) disapproving Plan 9. Again his arguments paralleled those against Plan 7. The Senate Committee rejected his resolution 4-7 on May 9, and the Senate affirmed this action May 19 on a 37-36 roll-call vote with a majority of 49 votes required to kill a plan. (See p. 540).

Plan No. 10

This plan which affected the Securities and Exchange Commission transferred functions relating to (1) appointment and supervision of personnel; (2) distribution of business among personnel or administrative units; and (3) use and expenditure of funds, subject to certain limitations, to the Chairman of the SEC. Budget estimate revision and distribution of appropriated funds were reserved to the Commission.

The plan was submitted March 13; it became effective May 24. No resolutions in opposition to Plan 10 were introduced.

Plan No. 11

This plan which affected the Federal Communications Commission would have transferred functions relating to (1) appointment and supervision of personnel; (2) distribution of business among personnel or administrative units; and (3) use and expenditure of funds, subject to certain limitations, to the Chairman of the FCC. Budget estimate revision and distribution of appropriated funds were reserved to the Commission.

Again, opposition stemmed from a resolution (S Res 256) by Sen. Johnson. He supported his resolution before the Senate Committee April 24. The Committee disapproved the resolution on a 5-7 vote May 9, but reported the resolution anyway.

Plan 11 was then rejected by the Senate when it voted 50-23 May 17 to approve Johnson's resolution. (See p. 540.) Twenty-four Democrats and 26 Republicans voted for the resolution; 15 Democrats and 8 Republicans voted against it. (For debate and Committee testimony, see Plan 7, above.)

Plan No. 12

This plan, the most controversial one submitted, proposed to transfer certain National Labor Relations Board functions relating to (1) appointment and supervision of personnel; (2) distribution of business among personnel or administrative units; and (3) use and expenditure of funds, subject to limitations to the Chairman of the NLRB. This Plan also would have transferred to the Chairman certain duties assigned by law to the General Counsel. In the exercise of these duties, the Chairman was to be governed by general policies of the Commission authorized by law. Budget estimate revision and distribution of appropriated funds were reserved to the Commission.

XUM

The Plan was submitted March 13. The Senate Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments reported favorably S Res 248 to disapprove Plan No. 12 on April 24. The Senate adopted the resolution on May 11, by a vote of 53-30, thus disapproving the Plan.

Further action was granted in the House, as follows:

HOUSE COMMITTEE

The House Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Department held hearings on two resolutions (H Res 512 and H Res 516) calling for rejection of Plan 12.

The first resolution was sponsored by Rep. Ralph E. Church (R Ill.), who died March 21 as he was testifying in its behalf before the House Committee. The next day the Committee substituted a similar resolution (H Res 516) by Clare E. Hoffman (R Mich.).

Gerard D. Reilly, Washington labor relations attorney, urged rejections of the Plan March 22 and told the Committee there should be an even greater separation of powers between the NLRB and its general counsel than existed. Reilly, who as special counsel to the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee in 1947, helped write the Taft-Hartley law, said the President's Plan would create greater, instead of less, confusion. By adding the counsel's prosecuting functions to the Board's present judicial functions, the NLRB would be overwhelmed with confusion and delay, Reilly argued.

Another witness, G. Maynard Smith, an Atlanta, Ga., labor relations attorney, questioned legality of the Plan on the ground that the change, by executive order, would in effect amend the Taft-Hartley law. William B. Barton, director of employer-employee relations for the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, urged the Committee to "discard Plan No. 12 in its entirety".

Reps. Chet Holifield (D Calif.) and Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr. (D-Lib N.Y.) defended the Plan before the Committee, as did the five members of the NLRB who lined up solidly in its support. Paul M. Herzog, NLRB chairman, March 23 presented a unanimous statement from the Board, asserting the division of powers had led to confusion and conflict in the administration of the labor laws.

Plan 12 was supported in a report submitted March 29 by the House Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. Split evenly on party lines, the Committee recommended the House take unfavorable action on H Res 516 calling for rejection of the President's Plan.

In a jointly-submitted expression of its views, the Republican minority asserted that the Plan would give the five-man NLRB prosecution as well as judicial functions and would destroy its capacity to act as an impartial tribunal.

The majority said the Board's existing setup was a departure from existing general administrative procedure in the government. It has been demonstrated to the Committee, the group declared, "that the two-headed nature of this agency with its parallel but dissimilar policy determinations has led to a disrupted internal agency structure. Moreover, the resultant division of responsibility has led to confusion among the agency personnel, litigants and the general public".

The NLRB general counsel was given autonomous authority under the Taft-Hartley labor law. The Republican minority contended the President's NLRB reorganization Plan was part of a "purely political campaign" against the law "which has been carried on with unflagging energy". Even more separation was needed between functions of the NLRB and its general counsel, the minority said.

SENATE COMMITTEE

The Senate Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments April 3 opened hearings on a resolution (S Res 248) by Sen. Robert A. Taft (R Ohio), calling for disapproval of Plan 12. Taft was the first witness.

On the witness stand, Taft delivered a stinging blast against the proposed NLRB changes. He called the President's Plan "political" and said it was designed to "nullify" the Taft-Hartley law. However, Taft conceded that the labor relations law was "deficient" in that it "does not spell out the responsibilities" of the general counsel and the five-man NLRB.

Gerard D. Reilly repeated his earlier testimony before the House Committee. He said that instead of making the NLRB an "efficient tribunal" it would overwhelm it with duties "which should be performed elsewhere" and would "discredit its standing as a judiciary body."

Lambert H. Miller, a counsel for the National Association of Manufacturers, urged the Committee April 5 to reject the President's Plan, on the grounds it would undermine public confidence in the NLRB. Hoyt P. Steele, of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce's labor relations committee testified that the Plan would restore the "unfair and inequitable" NLRB administration of "pre-Taft-Hartley days."

Committee Chairman John L. McClellan (D Ark.) and Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) clashed in a brief argument April 5 over Humphrey's observation that the "weight of evidence" of the report by the Hoover Commission inclined toward the Truman Plan. McClellan maintained he had been a member of the Commission and that the subject of the NLRB counsel's authority had not been discussed by that body.

Labor Undersecretary Michael J. Galvin April 3 read the Committee a statement by Labor Secretary Maurice Tobin supporting the Plan. Tobin's statement said existing divided responsibility "can hamper efficient processing of cases, can cause widespread confusion and can result in disagreements as to powers and policies."

Robert N. Denham, then NLRB general counsel, April 6 warned the Senate Expenditures Committee that a flood of lawsuits and "utter chaos" might result if the proposed NLRB reorganization were to go into effect. Humphrey demanded to know whether Denham's prediction of a flood of lawsuits was a veiled threat. Denham denied any such implication but said many parties adjudged guilty in NLRB suits would, if the agency is reorganized, seek to test the legality of the findings.

Earlier the same day, NLRB Chairman Paul Herzog, presented — as he had previously before the House Committee — the board's unanimous support for the President's Plan. Herzog denied Taft's charge that the suggested revamping would make him (Herzog) the "czar" of the NLRB.

On April 17 the Senate Committee voted 9-4 to approve the Taft resolution, thus disapproving Plan 12.

DEBATE

A combination of Republicans and Southern Democrats killed Plan 12 May 11. The vote was 53-30 to approve the Taft resolution calling for rejection of the plan. (See p. 540.)

Action on the anti-reorganization measure was forced May 10 by the same Republican-Southern Democratic coalition which effected final defeat of the NLRB plan. These Senators suddenly sidetracked the pending FEPC bill (S 1728) and agreed, 50-22, to a motion by Taft to make his resolution the order of business.

Majority Leader Scott W. Lucas (D Ill.), leading the fight for FEPC, objected bitterly to the Taft motion. He said he had promised that all dissenting resolutions on reorganization plans would receive consideration before the May 24 deadline.

A coalition of 35 Republicans and 18 Democrats, mostly from the South or borderline states, voted against the NLRB plan. Twenty-five Democrats and 5 Republicans voted for it. Taft contended the President sought to veto the Taft-Hartley labor law, which first established the independent general counsel's office.

But Millard E. Tydings (D Md.) won Taft's admission that in 1949 he "reluctantly agreed to" abolish the independent status of the counsel as a part of a series of amendments to the Taft-Hartley act. These were passed by the Senate when it rejected President Truman's request for outright repeal of the Taft-Hartley law, but were not brought up in the House.

Taft continued arguing that Plan 12 was political and said it would make "a real labor dictator" of the NLRB chairman. Irving M. Ives (R N.Y.), among those who upheld the proposed Plan, said statements that it was an attempt to repeal the Taft-Hartley act were without foundation. McClellan sided with Taft, saying that the President's Plan would destroy "a vital part" of the Taft-Hartley law by eliminating the separation of judicial and prosecuting functions. Humphrey argued for the Plan, saying the present NLRB setup is a "sawed-in-half administrative monstrosity."

LOBBY STANDS

The CIO gave "unequivocal support" to Plan 12, and stressed its stand "is grounded on sound principles of government administration" and not on its estimate of Robert N. Denham, NLRB general counsel, whom "the CIO vehemently opposes" because of his "animus towards organized labor."

CIO's arguments for Plan 12 held that the "dual administration" of the present NLRB setup "is unworkable". This structure, contended CIO's president Philip Murray, "has enabled a single individual to exercise unparalleled, unbridled administrative power."

MACHINISTS

International Association of Machinists weekly publication asserted "Lobbyists for the National Association of Manufacturers and the big business corporations are out again in full force, rounding up employer partisans in Congress in an attempt to block President Truman's plan to reorganize the National Labor Relations Board . . . Lobbyists representing General Electric Corp., General Motors, Chrysler and the National Assn. of Manufacturers," The Machinist said May 4, "have been hard at work for the past three weeks mobilizing opposition to the President's plan. They have concentrated their campaign on the Senate."

AFL Position

The American Federation of Labor's President William L. Green said, "We do not consider (Plan 12) any part of labor's fight to repeal the Taft-Hartley Act." He said the Plan was "justified entirely on the grounds that it promotes efficiency and harmony in the administration of an act in which inefficiency and disharmony has heretofore prevailed to the confusion and detriment of organized labor in the processing of cases before the Board." AFL "urgently advocates" Plan 12 as a means of accomplishing Hoover report objectives.

United Mine Workers Journal also reported industry "lobbying". Plan 12 "revitalized the money-getting lobbyists to dupe American business for a larger take," said the UMW paper. "As a first step, the alleged 'Committee for Constitutional Government' addressed a circular to the members of Congress, 4,000 editors and other anti-union 'opinion-molding leaders'."

Referring to CCG's plea for contributions to bring in $250,000 in April and $150,000 monthly thereafter, UMW Journal said, "Here is an example of big-time finance, big industrial lobbying that warrants investigation by the House lobby-investigating committee."

Opponents Listed

Opponents of Plan 12, and their statements, were:

The Committee for Constitutional Government said that President Truman having failed in efforts to defeat the Taft-Hartley Act, "now tries through a fraudulent use of the Reorganization Act to do immeasurable injury" to the T-H law by Plan 12. The statement went with a Willford I. King article, "Using Herbert Hoover as a Cat's Paw". Truman sought to use "the prestige of Herbert Hoover" to solidify his "hold" on labor unions, asserted King.

Other moves by CCG included promotion of the book, "Why the Taft-Hartley Law?" and appeals for contributions. A CCG circular advised its readers to contact Congressmen on Plan 12 and to "have your company buy and distribute to stockholders, supervisory workers, thoughtful, home-owning employees and community opinion-molders, John T. Flynn's 'The Road Ahead'."

General Electric's Employee Relations News Letter suggested Hoover was not called before hearings on Plan 12 because he "would repudiate paternity of this offspring (the NLRB change) which for obvious political reasons has been laid at his door".

The Chamber of Commerce of the U. S. opposed all efforts to revise the Taft-Hartley Act "except as experience may show improvements are needed in the public interest". The labor law forbade NLRB to act as both prosecutor and judge, said C. of C., but Plan 12 would "abandon this separation of powers".

The NLRB change would "effect no economies" and would "emasculate the Taft-Hartley Act" and "further overload with prosecution functions a Board which already has too much to do in its judicial capacity. It would return us to the days of the Wagner Act," declared the National Chamber Board of Directors.

The National Association of Manufacturers' counsel Lambert H. Miller told the Senate Expenditures Committee that Plan 12 would re-establish NLRB "in the historically discredited role of prosecutor, jury and judge in labor relation controversies."

Further, NAM contended the plan was no part of the Hoover report because it proposed "basic and substantive" legal changes. NAM wasn't contending "the present arrangement is perfect in all respects", its counsel said, but felt the "principle of a separation of functions" is so sound it should not be abolished "without the most careful consideration".

NAM News said the fate of Plan 12 "has become the No. 1 labor issue in the present session of Congress"

The National Cotton Council of America wrote Congressmen in opposition to Plan 12. The NLRB change would merge the prosecution and judicial functions and "recreate the vicious situation existing under the Wagner Act", said the Council. Other contentions were that Plan 12 would not produce economy and that it was not part of the Hoover report.

"Submission of this plan under the mask of the Hoover Commission's recommendations prostitutes the Reorganization Act of 1949," wrote the organization.

Other Opponents

Other organizations opposing Plan 12 were the:

Detroit Board of Commerce
Associated General Contractors of America, Inc.
(Assistant Managing Director said, "substantial majority" of the 5,500 membership opposed Plan No. 12.)
National Association of Manufacturers
American Retail Federation.
National Independent Meat Packers Association.
National Retail Dry Goods Association.
United States Chamber of Commerce.
Foremanship Foundation.
Associated Retail Bakers of America.

Gerard D. Reilly, appearing "not in behalf of any particular clients" but as a lawyer with background in administrative law. Reilly served as special counsel to the Senate Labor Committee while it wrote the Taft bill which became part of the Taft-Hartley Act. He testified at hearings on Plan 12 that he was registered under the Lobby Law for General Motors, General Electric, and the Foremanship Foundation.

Plan No. 13

This Plan which affected the Civil Aeronautics Board transferred functions relating to (1) appointment and supervision of personnel; (2) distribution of business among personnel and administrative units; and (3) use and expenditure of funds, subject to certain limitations, to the Chairman of the CAB. Budget estimate revision and distribution of appropriated funds were reserved to the Commission.

This Plan was submitted March 13; it became effective May 24, no opposing resolutions were submitted.

Plan No. 14

This Plan, which became effective May 24, 1950, centralized in the Secretary of Labor authority to prescribe uniform labor standards for all Government departments concerned in general conformity with the Hoover Commission's recommendations. The Plan was reported favorably by the Senate Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments May 10. No opposing resolutions were submitted.

Plan No. 15

This Plan transferred functions relating to public works in Alaska and in the Virgin Islands from the General Services Administration to the Department of the Interior. It was designed to consolidate functions formerly vested in the General Services Administration with other programs lodged in the Department of the Interior relating to the long-range interests of inhabitants of Alaska and the Virgin Islands. The Plan, through centralization of such functions in a single agency, was intended to reduce duplication of effort and facilitate administration.

No resolution of disapproval was submitted in the Senate, but a Senate committee filed a favorable report on the Plan May 10 to the effect that it was in general conformity with the purposes and recommendations of the Hoover Commission, and would bring about economy and efficiency. Since no action was taken in the House or the Senate to disapprove the Plan, it became effective on May 24.

Plan No. 16

This Plan transferred federal financial assistance to local public-school districts and for water-pollution control from the General Services Administration to the Federal Security Agency. Plan No. 16 was reported favorably by the Senate Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Department May 10, and, in the absence of a resolution expressing disapproval, became effective May 24.

Plan No. 17

This Plan transferred non - federal public works advance planning programs and the management and disposal of certain war public works from the General Services Administration to the Housing and Home Finance Administrator.

A resolution of disapproval (S Res 271), by George D. Aiken (R. Vt.), was introduced in the Senate, and hearings were held May 16. Proponents of the resolution said the Plan would effect no economies or efficiencies. They said that it would be demoralizing to shift the programs to a new environment for the relatively short period of time remaining before the liquidation of the programs.

Advocates of the Plan maintained that all functions transferred under the Plan were closely related to the activities of the Housing and Home Finance Agency, and that consolidation of such functions would be in the interest of economy and efficiency.

The Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments reported the resolution of disapproval to the Senate without recommendation May 18. It was rejected in the Senate by a vote of 29-43 on May 23, and the Plan, therefore, took effect on May 24. (See p. 541.)

Plan No. 18

This Plan transferred the following functions to the General Services Administrator:

(a) Responsibility for leasing (except post offices) and assignment of general - purpose space from other agencies to the General Services Administration.

(b) Excess of space not needed by post offices to the General Services Administration.

(c) Operation, maintenance, and custody of leased and Government owned buildings to the General Services Administration (excludes post office buildings predominantly occupied by the postal service).

A resolution of disapproval (S Res 270) was introduced in the Senate by Olin D. Johnston (D. S.C.), and hearings were held May 16. The basis for opposition to the Plan was the effect it would have on custodial employees of the postal service. These employees would be placed under the less liberal provisions of the Civil Service Classification Act of 1949, as compared to the Postal Classification Act of 1945.

The resolution of disapproval was reported to the Senate May 18 without recommendation, and was rejected in the Senate by a vote of 7-69 May 23, the Plan becoming effective July 1, as provided in the Plan. (See p. 541.)

Two resolutions of disapproval (H Res 539 and H Res 541) by Thurman C. Crook (D. Ind.) and Harold C. Hagen (R. Minn.), were introduced in the House to disapprove Plan No. 18. The first was reported unfavorably by the House Committee on Expenditures. The House did not act on it.

LOBBY STANDS

The President's proposal to shift responsiblity for operation of some post office buildings to the General Services Administration drew fire from postal employees who would be doing the same work under a different boss.

The National Association of Post Office Maintenance Employees said the shift proposed in Plan 18 would bring financial loss to employees transferred and "a severe blow to their morale". The loss, it said, would arise from difference in pay scales in the Post Office Department and GSA. Transferred workers would not suffer salary cuts, but would have a lower ceiling on maximum pay in grade.

For Plan 18 were the Post Office Department and the General Services Administration. Against Plan 18 were the:

National Association of Postal Supervisors,

National Alliance of Postal Employees,

American Federation of Government Employees,

National Association of Post Office Maintenance Employees,

Member of national legislative committee, American Federation of Labor,

Government Employees Council (AFL),

National Postal Transport Association, and the

Plan No. 19

This Plan, which became effective May 24, transferred the Bureau of Employees Compensation, the Employees Compensation Appeals Board, and the necessary personnel, property, records, the funds related thereto from the Federal Security Agency to the Department of Labor. The Plan was reported favorably by the Senate Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments May 10. No opposing resolutions were introduced.

Plan No. 20

This Plan transferred from the Secretary of State to the Administrator of General Services a number of functions which had no connection with foreign affairs, but bore a close relation to the archival and records functions of the General Services Administration. The functions transferred were as follows:

1. The receipt and preservation of the original copies of bills, orders, resolutions, and votes;

2. The publication of acts and joint resolutions in slip form and the compilation, editing, indexing, and publication of the United States Statutes at Large, except such functions with respect to treaties and other international agreements;

3. The certification and publication of amendments to the Constitution of the United States and the preservation of such amendments;

4. Certificates of appointment of the electors of the President and Vice President and certificates of the votes of such electors for President and Vice President; and

5. The collection, copying, arranging, editing, copy reading, and indexing of the official papers of the Territories.

Two functions were abolished by the Plan: The duty of the Secretary of State of procuring copies of all statutes of the several States, and his duty of publishing Executive proclamations and treaties in a newspaper in the District of Columbia.

The Plan was submitted March 13, it became effective on May 24. No opposing resolutions were introduced.

Plan No. 21

This Plan provided for the establishment of a Federal Martime Board and Maritime Administration in the Department of Commerce, to which were transferred all of the functions of the United States Maritime Commission, as follows:

To the Federal Maritime Board:

(a) To the Chairman: Executive and administrative functions of present Chairman (including functions transferred by Reorganization Plan No. 6 of 1949 — see CQ Almanac, Vol. V., 1949, p. 564).

(b) To the Board: Regulatory functions over rates, services, practices, tariffs, rules, and other matters.

(c) Subsidy awards, hearings, sales, assignment, or transfer of subsidies.

To the Maritime Administration:

(a) The administration of subsidy agreements made by the Board.

(b) Administration of the operating programs, such as ship construction, charter, operation, and sale.

The functions transferred to the Maritime Administration would be vested in the Secretary of Commerce with authority to redelegate such responsibility to the new Administrator or any other subordinates. The Maritime Commission was abolished and a three-man Federal Maritime Board was created, with the Maritime Administrator as chairman.

The Maritime Commission had been the target of severe criticism by the Comptroller General. The House Expenditures Committee investigated and generally seconded the charges made by the Comptroller General. See (p. 616).

Sen. Owen Brewster (R Maine) introduced S Res 265 disapproving Plan 21. The resolution was reported without recommendation May 18 by the Senate Committee. It was rejected by the Senate May 19 by a roll-call vote of 14-59, and the Plan thus became effective May 24, (see p. 541).

LOBBY STANDS

Typical of opposition to the proposal to end independent status of the Maritime Commission was the statement of Leigh R. Sanford, president of the Shipbuilders Council of America.

The "greatest threat" to the welfare of the country's shipbuilding ship-repairing industry and the merchant marine, he said, was in the proposal to wipe out the commission as an independent agency and "enter its functions in a subordinate bureau of the Department of Commerce."

Also opposing Plan 21 were the
Shipbuilders Council of America,
Mississippi Valley Association,
National Industrial Traffic Association
Chamber of Commerce of the U. S.
American Waterways Operators Association.
Association of American Railroads, and the Transportation Association of America.

Plan No. 22

This Plan, submitted May 9, transferred the Federal National Mortgage Association from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to the Housing and Home Finance Agency.

The Plan provided for an effective date 60 days beyond the minimum of 60 allowed for disapproval.

Sens. Walter F. George (D Ga.) and Harry P. Cain (R Wash.) introduced S Res 299 disapproving Plan 22. The resolution was reported without recommendation by the Senate Committee July 5. The Senate rejected the George-Cain resolution 30-43 on roll-call vote, and the Plan became effective Sept. 7, (see p. 541).

Plan No. 23

This Plan submitted, May 9, transferred from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to the Housing and Home Finance Administrator all functions of RFC with respect to the financing of the pre-fabricated housing industry, including the financing of large-scale modernized site construction. No resolution of disapproval was introduced in either the Senate or House. Plan 23 was reported favorably by the Senate Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments June 26, and became effective Sept. 7, since it provided for an effective date of 60 days beyond the 60-day disapproval period.

Plan No. 24

The purpose of this Plan, submitted May 9, was to place the Reconstruction Finance Corporation within the framework of the Department of Commerce. The Corporation would have continued to be administered by its own Board of Directors and officers but would have been subject to the "supervision, co-ordination, and policy guidance" of the Secretary of Commerce.

The Plan was a digression from the recommendation of the Hoover Commission that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation be placed in the Department of the Treasury.

However, dissenting views were included in the Hoover Commission report on the Treasury Department. Three Commissioners agreed with the majority that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation should be placed within one of the departments of the executive branch, but took the position that it should be located within the Commerce Department, as this plan would have done. Their dissent arose from a different interpretation of "major purpose." The minority view was that the primary function of RFC was the "promotion of foreign and domestic commerce and trade," a function of the Department of Commerce, rather than a strictly financial or "money" undertaking as an end in itself, as was the apparent basis for the majority recommendation.

S Res 290, expressing disapproval of the Plan, was introduced by Senator J. W. Fulbright (D Ark.) June 1. Reported without recommendation by the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments June 26. The resolution was adopted in the Senate July 6, thus defeating the Plan.

For its part, the House later rejected June 30 a resolution (H Res 648), by Clare Hoffman (R Mich.), disapproving Plan. Details of both House and Senate action follow.

COMMITTEE

The Senate Committee held hearings June 14 and 15 on S Res 290, disapproving Plan 24. Secretary of Commerce Charles Sawyer supported the Plan, but other witnesses testified against it, including two Democratic Senators, John L. McClellan and J. William Fulbright, both of Arkansas.

Sawyer asserted transfer of the RFC to his department would make possible "effective coordination" of government aids to business. "The nonfinancial programs to promote and foster business," he said, "are concentrated in the Department of Commerce and it is with these programs that the central financial operations of the RFC need to be coordinated." He said under terms of the reorganization proposal, he would not have the power to force the corporation to follow his policy guidance. The proposal, he contended, could only "lay down general policy framework."

In reply to Sawyer's testimony, McClellan, the Committee chairman, decared, "If that's the only effect of this Plan, it is just a scrap of paper. I can't see where we would gain either efficiency or economy." Fulbright, sponsor of the disapproval resolution, disagreed with Sawyer's contention that he would not be able to force his policy on the newly located RFC. "It would be a slight move toward destruction of our traditional system of checks and balances. There may be a worldwide trend in that direction, but I am not willing to contribute to it."

Robert L. L. McCormick, research director of the Citizens Committee for the Hoover Report, said the Plan ran "directly counter" to the recommendation of the Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government that the RFC be transferred to the Treasury Department. McCormick said the Hoover Report had "placed major emphasis upon a full-dress review of the RFC's operations by the Congress" such as was then being conducted by a Senate Banking Subcommittee headed by Fulbright (see page 646). He urged rejection of the Plan for the time being.

C. Francis Cocke, chairman of the American Bankers Association's committee on federal legislation, told the Senators June 15th ABA opposed the Plan on the grounds it might give the Administration power to use government loans for political purposes. He said the ABA feared that "any future secretary" could use his power over the RFC to accomplish some political objective not in keeping with the best interests of business and the national economy. Harold V. Amberg, vice president and general counsel of the First National Bank of Chicago, also urged defeat of the Plan.

RFC Director Harvey Gunderson spoke out against the President's proposal, urging Senators to keep the RFC Board of Directors operating on a bipartisan and independent basis Eugene Meyer, chairman of the board of the Washington Post, and former chairman of the RFC said "the broad power of loaning money should not be in any executive department."

The Senate Committee then reported the resolution June 21 without recommendation. Meanwhile in the House, hearings similar to those in the Senate had been held on H Res 648, by Clare E. Hoffman (R Mich.), disapproving Plan 24. The House Committee turned down the resolution June 20 and recommended to the House, in effect, that Plan 24 be allowed to become law.

DEBATE

In the Senate July 6, both Republicans and Democrats joined in assailing Plan 24, which had a lone defender in Francis J. Myers (D Pa.).

Myers said rejection of the Plan would be a "substantial blow" to small business and he noted that the transfer was one of the key points in President Truman's recently enunciated small business program. Andrew F. Schoeppel (R Kan.) called the Plan "unsound and untimely", while Homer E. Capehart (R Ind.) said he could not understand why the Plan was submitted while the Senate Banking Committee was engaged in investigating the lending agency.

S Res 290, disapproving the Plan, was then passed on voice vote, and Plan 24 was dead.

The House had declined June 30 to support a motion to kill the Plan. The opposing resolution was lost when the House voted 46-22 on standing vote not to consider the resolution further.

LOBBY STANDS

Plan 24 was opposed by the Association of Reserve City Bankers and American Bankers Association. The groups argued that the RFC was an emergency agency which should be abolished or left independent and dissolved as soon as possible.

The Citizens Committee for the Hoover Report also opposed Plan 24, saying it did not follow Hoover Commission recommendations. The Committee suggested the RFC should remain independent pending further Congressional study of its function.

Plan No. 25

This plan transferred the functions of the National Security Resources Board (NSRB) to its Chairman, with full power of delegation by him; made the NSRB advisory to the Chairman; and added a Vice-Chairman of the Board, to be appointed by the President.

In submitting the plan, the President stated that the role of NSRB is to provide staff assistance in "the coordination of military, industrial, and civilian mobilization." His message indicated that this high-level interdepartmental committee which included seven Cabinet Secretaries (of State, Treasury, Defense, Agriculture, Commerce, Interior, and Labor Departments), could not "possibly supervise or approve the Board's extensive and detailed activities (although they) must accept ultimate responsibility"; urged making the Board advisory, as was done in 1949 with both Munitions and Research Development Boards; and proposed a Vice-Chairman to help carry the heavy workload.

The Plan became effective on July 9, inasmuch as no resolution of disapproval was introduced in either the House or Senate. There was some opposition in Committee and therefore no favorable report was submitted as was done in regard to other Plans against which no resolutions were filed.

Plan No. 26

After rejection of Plan No. 1, the President submitted Plan No. 26 May 31, repeating the provisions of Plan No. 1 providing for reorganization of the Treasury Department. It exempted, however, the functions of the Comptroller of the Currency. The proposed transfer of the functions of the Comptroller to the Secretary was the factor that had brought about rejection by the Senate.

In view of elimination of the basic opposition to Plan No. 1, and since previous hearings had covered the situation, the Committee reported Plan 26 favorably without waiting for the expiration of the 60-day period required under the Reorganization Act. Since no disapproving resolution was introduced, Plan 26 became effective July 31.

Plan No. 27

Plan No. 27 would have constituted the Federal Security Agency as a Department of Health, Education, and Security, but would have retained the semi - independent status of the United States Public Health Service and the Office of Education. However, Plan No. 27, like Plan No. 1 of 1949, among other differences from the Hoover Commission recommendations regarding these activities, made no provision for the establishment of a United Medical Administration to consolidate the Public Health Service with other Federal medical activities. The Plan was rejected by Congress when the House adopted H Res 647, by Clare Hoffman (R Mich.), expressing disapproval of the proposal, July 10. The Senate Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments had expressed its disapproval of Plan No. 27 July 10 by approving S Res 302, by Robert A. Taft (R Ohio), disapproving the Plan, but the Senate had not taken action when the House approved H Res 647.

BACKGROUND

The Plan for the new department, whose secretary would have become the 10th member of the Cabinet, was similar to the 1949 Plan in that each proposed to vest the new governmental arm "essentially with the same duties and authority as are now vested in the Federal Security Administrator." In 1949, the President proposed to put the functions in a Department of Welfare. But the Senate turned him down. (CQ Almanac, Vol. V, p. 561ff.) In 1950 he changed the title as well as some details of organization of the department.

Much of the opposition to the proposal in 1949 stemmed from fear among some Senators that the Plan would give a boost to the Administration's national health insurance scheme. They anticipated the new secretary would be Oscar Ewing, the Federal Security Administrator, who also was the leading advocate of prepaid medical and hospital care.

In his message transmitting the Plan, the President said it "is designed to meet the major objections which were raised in opposition to the 1949 Plan . . .

"A principal criticism of the 1949 Plan was that, in centralizing all statutory authority in the secretary, as recommended by the (Hoover) Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government, the Plan threatened in matters of health and education unduly to subordinate professional judgment to non-professional domination . . .

"Under the presem Plan, the surgeon general and the commissioner of education retain all the statutory authority and duties now vested in them. The Public Health Service and the Office of Education remain intact as statutory entities with statutory functions."

The new Plan provided for Presidential appointments of the surgeon general, the commissioner of education and the commissioner of social security, all subject to Senate confirmation.

COMMITTEE

The House Expenditures Committee heard testimony of a number of witnesses, including Ewing. Spokesmen for the CIO, the National Farmers Union, the American Veterans Committee, the American Council on Education, and the Army and Navy Union lined up in support of Plan 27. But Robert L. L. McCormick, representing the Citizens Committee for the Hoover Report, told the Committee plan 27 conflicted with recommendations of the Hoover Commission.

The American Medical Association and the American Dental Association also opposed the plan, saying they favored a special Department of Health which would be headed by a doctor or dentist.

Hoffman, Taft Proposals

The House Committee, however, voted June 20 to reject H Res 657, by Clare Hoffman (R Mich.), which would have quashed Plan 27. This action, in effect, endorsed Plan 27. The Committee reported the resolution unfavorably June 23, with a minority report endorsing the resolution. The minority report was signed by Hoffman, R. Walter Riehlman (R N. Y.), W. L. Pfeiffer (R N. Y.), Harold R. Lovre (R S. D.), Robert F. Rich (R Pa.), Ralph Harvey (R Ind.), and Charles A. Halleck, (R Ind.).

After similar hearings in the Senate Committee, a resolution (S Res 302) by Robert A. Taft (R Ohio) opposing the plan was reported favorably on a 6-3 vote.

Praise, Denunciation

At its hearings, the Senate Executive Expenditures Committee heard two days of praise and denunciation of the new department proposal. The praise came first from Ewing and Budget Director Frederick J. Lawton. Ewing said the Plan would provide a bulwark against communism and other totalitarian ideologies by providing a better means to fight ill health, inequality of educational opportunity and individual insecurity, upon which the "isms" grow. Lawton said that health, education and security activities "are vital to the well-being and future of the nation" and that they "need and deserve a voice in the cabinet."

Sen. Taft contended that in any such department as the one envisaged, the health service should be "practically autonomous." He said that under the proposed set-up health would be "dominated by welfare."

Dr. Louis H. Bauer, chairman of the board of trustees of the American Medical Association, said the AMA did not object to the Plan as it affected security and education but did not want public health included in it.

Dr. Robert E. S. Young, representing the Association of American Physicians and Surgeons, said his organization feared the elevation of Ewing, to whom he referred as "Mr. Socialized Medicine."

Dr. Harold E. Gale, spokesman for the American Dental Association, said one-man control of health, education and social insurance would provide too great a temptation to make political use of public funds.

The Plan also was opposed by Mrs. Ben B. Baylor Jr., for the American Association of University Women. "The cause of education," she said, 'will not be strengthened by placing the U. S. Office of Education . . . in an agency whose chief concern is social security."

DEBATE

Hoffman lead opposition to Plan 27 in the House. Envisaging Ewing as the probable secretary of the new department, Huffman, author of the rejection resolution, said doctors, in the event of adoption of the Plan, would fall "under the orders of a master politician."

In vain, Rep. John W. McCormack (D Mass.), Rep. Chet Holifield (D Cal.) and other Administration stalwarts argued that health insurance was not involved in the Plan. They asserted it was a "smokescreen" put out to "befog the situation". McCormack charged the Republicans with continually seeking to block progress.

But the Republican reaction to the charge was phrased by Charles A. Halleck who told members the vote would "put you on one side or another on the issue of socialization of medicine."

The House then voted 249-71 on roll call to approve the Hoffman resolution, thus killing Plan 27. (See p. 560) It was the only reorganization proposal rejected by the House in 1950.

After the House acted, Sen. Taft moved July 26 that his resolution opposing Plan 27 in the Senate be laid aside indefinitely.

LOBBY STANDS

Groups supporting Plan 27 were:

American Federation of Labor, American Parents Committee, Congress of Industrial Organizations, National Farmers Union, National Child Labor Committee, American Veterans Committee, American Association of Social Workers, Association of Schools of Public Health, Army and Navy Union, American Association of University Women, Co-operative League of America, American Council of Education, Americans for Democratic Action, and Jewish War Veterans.

Against Plan 27 were:

American Legion, American Medical Association, American Dental Association, and Citizens Committee for the Hoover Report.

Un-American Activities Funds

H Res 482

The House passed a resolution (H Res 482) authorizing the expenditure in 1950 of $150,000 by the House Committee on Un-American Activities. The money was in addition to $200,000 already received from the 81st Congress in 1949. (See CQ Almanac, Vol. V, Page 674.) No Senate action was needed on the bill.

The House Administration Committee approved the bill March 23, 1950. The House debated it briefly March 23. Arthur G. Klein (D N.Y.) spoke against the measure, saying he did not approve of the "circus methods" of the Committee. Barratt O'Hara (D Ill.) criticized what he said was the Committee's failure to investigate "the seedy fringe of the extreme right".

Passage came after Chairman John Wood (D Ga.) said Fascist groups as well as those designated Communist-front organizations would be probed. In addition, he said the group planned to survey subversive activities in Hawaii, and to preapre a list of one million names of suspect persons.

The final vote was 348-12 on roll call (see P. 556).

The dozen Representatives voting against the new grant of money to the Committee were: John A. Blatnik (D Minn.), Earl Chudoff (D Pa.), Isidore Dollinger (D N.Y.), Helen Gahagan Douglas (D Calif.), William J. Green Jr. (D Pa.), Jacob Javits (R N.Y.), Arthur Klein (D N.Y.), Vito Marcantonio (ALP N.Y.), Hugh B. Mitchell (D Wash.), Barratt O'Hara (D Ill.), Adam Clayton Powell (D N.Y.), and Roy W. Wier (D Minn.).

FEPC Act

HR 4453 S 1728

SUMMARY

The House approved a voluntary Fair Employment Practice Commission bill (HR 4453) Feb. 23. The Senate, however, failed to complete action on its compulsory FEPC bill when moves to shut off debate on the measure failed June 19 and again on July 12.

Legislation to set up a permanent agency to bar discrimination in employment was approved by both House and Senate committees in the first session (1949). Similar proposals had been before the previous four Congresses.

In the first session of the 81st Congress, extensive hearings were held by a House Education and Labor Subcommittee. HR 4453 was reported Aug. 2, 1949. A Senate Labor and Public Welfare Subcommittee held no hearings but approved S 1728, which was reported Oct. 7 without recommendation by the full committee.

During the 80th Congress, the Senate committee conducted hearings on a fair employment practices act. (See Almanac, Vol. IV, P. 230 for account of 1948 fair employment action.) The Senate committee split 6-6 on whether to recommend the bill. Provisions of the Senate and House bills, as reported in 1949, were nearly the same. In committee the House bill underwent minor changes from the version introduced by Adam C. Powell, Jr. (D N.Y.). (CQ Almanac Vol. V. P. 455.)

Rules Group Block

The Rules Committee declined to clear the House bill. So early in 1950 Chairman John Lesinski (D Mich.) of the Education and Labor Committee said he would resort to one of the rules which made it possible for a committee chairman to bypass the Rules Committee in such circumstances. But a Southern Democrat-Republican coalition on the Rules Committee tried to change the House rules. This move was blocked. (See P. 383).

Then the bill was taken away from the Rules Committee under the new procedure, and sent to the House floor. After long debate, a voluntary FEPC bill was substituted for the original compulsory plan, and was passed.

No Senate Action

Senate Administration forces tried to get action on the Senate bill, but failed. A decision on a motion to take up the measure was blocked by a threatened Southern Democrat filibuster. A cloture petition was voted on, but pro-FEPC factions failed to get the necessary two-thirds vote. After two such failures, the bill was allowed to die. Republican plans to substitute a voluntary FEPC bill were never brought before the Senate.

Votes

The House took 15 roll-call votes in January and February in connection with the FEPC bill. Most were delaying tactics on the part of bill opponents. Each roll call took 30 to 45 minutes. Under the existing parliamentary situation, lost time worked to the advantage of the anti-FEPC forces.

Significant votes in the House (See P. 550) were:

Howard W. Smith (D Va). questioned the motion by John Lesinski (D Mich.) to call up the bill. The House voted to call up the measure 287-121 on roll-call vote. Voting to call up the bill were 142 Democrats and 144 Republicans; opposing it were 106 Democrats and 15 Republicans.

An amendment was offered which would substitute for the compulsory FEPC bill a voluntary measure. The substitute carried on roll-call vote 222-178. For substitution were 118 Democrats and 104 Republicans; opposed were 128 Democrats and 49 Republicans.

The vote on Feb. 23 on final passage of the voluntary FEPC was 240-177. For the bill were 116 Democrats and 124 Republicans; opposed were 134 Democrats and 42 Republicans.

(For House votes on the proposed rules change, closely related to the FEPC bill, see P. 544.)

Crucial Senate Votes

The Senate took two roll-call votes while debating whether to take up the FEPC bill. Both votes were on petitions by Scott W. Lucas (D Ill.) to invoke cloture stop debate on his motion to take up the bill. (Sixty-four "yes" votes were needed under the rules to invoke cloture.) The first try failed June 19 on roll call 52-32. For cloture were 19 Democrats and 33 Republicans. Against were 26 Democrats and six Republicans.

On the second try, July 12, cloture again failed, this time 55-33. No individual votes were changed from the June ballot. For cloture were 22 Democrats and 33 Republicans; opposed were 27 Democrats and six Republicans. (See Page 542 for votes).

Provisions

The Senate bill (S 1728) and the original House bill (HR 4453) as approved by the House Education and Labor Committee were identical. The bills provided the following:

1. Declaration of policy, stating that Congress finds discrimination in employment because of race, religion, color, national origin, or ancestry: (a) infringes on principle of freedom and equality of opportunity, (b) is destructive of the integrity and dignity of the individual, (c) forces large segments of the population into substandard living conditions, (d) foments industrial and domestic strife, (e) deprives the Nation of full productive capacities, (f) hurts domestic and foreign commerce, and (g) damages our moral, economic, social, and political life and our international relations.

2. Declares it is the national policy to protect the right of people in the U.S. to employment without discrimination.

3. Forbids employment discrimination by employers (including the Federal Government) and by labor organizations, and defines unlawful employment practice as: (1) employer's refusal to hire, or his discharge of, or on-the-job discrimination against an individual because of race, religion, color, (2) utilization of hiring agencies which practice discrimination, (3) classification by a labor group of its membership in a way to limit any individual's job opportunities, (4) discrimination against any person by an employer or labor organization because he has opposed unlawful employment practice. The bill applies only to interstate commerce.

4. Exclude from operation of the act labor unions or employers of fewer than 50 persons; states or municipalities; religious, fraternal, social etc. corporations not organized for private profit; employers of aliens outside U. S., and its territories and possessions.

5. Sets up a Fair Employment Practice Commission of five members, appointed by the President, and confirmed by the Senate. Commissioners serve five-year overlapping terms at $17,500 a year, with $20,000 for the chairman.

6. Empowers the Commission to investigate written charges of complainants; to attempt to eliminate any discriminatory practices by conference, conciliation, and persuasion; and if that fails to issue cease-and-desist orders. The Commission can turn the case over to a local government agency where local statute permits.

7. Requires judicial approval to make Commission orders legally enforceable, and provides for judicial review in circuit courts for persons ruled against by the Commission.

8. Provides for enforcement of Commission orders to federal agencies and persons holding contracts over $10,000 with government agencies.

House-Approved Version

The version of HR 4453 which finally passed the House provided the following:

1. Finds that discrimination in employment because of physical disability, race, creed, political affiliation, sex or color is contrary to the principles of freedom and equality of opportunity upon which this nation is built, deprives the United States of the fullest utilization of its capacities for production and defense and burdens, hinders and obstructs commerce.

2. Creates a five - member, bi - partisan Fair Employment Practice Commission to be appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, for five - year staggered terms at a salary of $12,000 a year.

3. Instructs the Commission to make comprehensive studies of discrimination; cooperate with interested public and private agencies; publish reports; confer with employers and unions; investigate complaints; and make specific recommendations to the interested parties for the elimination of any discrimination.

4. Empowers the Commission, in the course of its investigation, to hold hearings, subpena witnesses and take testimony under oath.

5. Restricts enforcement of Commission decisions to conference, conciliation and persuasion.

6. Exempts from the act employes of the Atomic Energy Commission, or any contractor of the AEC, or members of organizations cited by the Attorney General as Communist-front.

7. Provides that absence in organizations of persons of a particular race, etc., shall not be evidence of discrimination.

8. Specifies that persons who lack qualifications for a job need not be employed in spite of his disqualifications.

9. Directs the Commission to make a study of discrimination in the Federal Government.

Party Stands

Democrats: "We call upon the Congress to support our President in guaranteeing . . . . the right to equal opportunity of employment."

Republicans: This right of equal opportunity to work and to advance in life should never be limited in any individual because of race, religion, color or country of origin. We favor the enactment and just enforcement of such federal legislation as may be necessary to maintain this right at all times in every part of this Republic."

HOUSE

The FEPC bill was reported by the House Education and Labor Committee Aug. 2, 1949, but the Rules Committee declined to take any action on the measure the rest of that session. (CQ Almanac Vol. V., p.455). On Jan. 13, 1950, the Rules Committee held hearings on the bill. No action was taken; further hearings were set for a later date.

After the apparent deadlock, Chairman John Lesinski (D Mich.) of the Educational and Labor Committee, announced that he would call up the bill under the 21-day rule on Jan. 23. Under this rule, bills which have been approved by one committee but which have languished for 21 days in the Rules Committee without action may be called up for debate by the chairman of the committee which gave the bill original approval.

Rule Abolition Sought

Eugene Cox (D Ga.), second ranking Democrat on the Rules Committee, then pushed through the group his resolution providing for the abolition of the 21-day rule. He was backed by southern Democrats who sought to throw out the rule before Lesinski could use it on the FEPC bill.

Cox's resolution, after a week of political maneuvering, came up for vote Jan. 20. It was defeated on roll-call vote 183-236 with both parties splitting on the issue (vote p. 544). (For details of the fight over the 21-day rule, see p. 383.)

That left the 21-day rule still in effect. So on Jan 23, the fourth Monday of the month, Lesinski was ready to call up FEPC.

But before the Jan. 23 session started, Speaker Sam Rayburn (D Tex.) announced that he would recognize some other committee chairman—one with a less controversial bill to be called up. Rayburn indicated he would give the nod to John Kee (D W.Va.) of the Foreign Affairs Committee. The "atmosphere" of the House, Rayburn said, was not right for the FEPC bill.

Kee, however, said that his bill (increasing United States contributions to several international organizations) was not quite ready to be debated on the floor. Rayburn then said he would call on J. Hardin Peterson (D Fla.), chairman of the Public Lands Committee.

Peterson had two bills pending under the 21-day rule. One was for Alaska statehood (HR 331); the other was for Hawaii statehood (HR 49). He said he was willing to lead off with Alaska.

Delaying Tactics Start

But despite the advance notice that FEPC would not get top priority, anti-FEPC delaying tactics began as soon as the House convened. Purpose was to drag out debate so that Alaska and Hawaii could not be settled and FEPC given its turn.

Clare E. Hoffman (R Mich.) and John E. Rankin (D Miss.) both asked for a quorum call. Reading the names took, as usual, more than a half hour. Then the House Clerk started reading the President's tax message (See p. 577).

After a few paragraphs William M. Colmer (D Miss.), Rules Committee member, asked for another quorum. After the roll was read again and the tax message resumed, Rankin once more asked for a quorum call. He got it.

The tax message was again interrupted when James C. Davis (D Ga.) made a point of no quorum. Rayburn counted the House, however, and announced that a quorum was present.

When the President's message was finished, both Lesinski and Peterson rose and called out to the Speaker.

Peterson was recognized, and he called up the Alaska statehood bill.

Immediately Colmer moved to adjourn. The motion was rejected on a standing vote 17-145. Then Hoffman made a point of no quorum. The roll was read again.

When Peterson started to explain his bill, he was interrupted by Rankin who complained that the clocks in the House chamber were not co-ordinated. He suggested the Speaker do something about it right then. Rayburn declined. Peterson continued.

He was soon interrupted again by members seeking to place the blame for the treatment of the FEPC bill. Then George W. Andrews (D Ala.) asked for a quorum call, but was turned down. L. Mendel Rivers (D S. C.) soon made the same request and succeeded in getting another roll call.

John Bell Williams (D Miss.) moved for adjournment. The motion lost on standing vote 78-169. Peterson moved that debate on Alaska statehood be stopped. His motion carried on roll call 373-25. (See vote, P. 552).

Hawaii Bill Raised

Peterson still had the floor, however, so he called up his Hawaii statehood bill. Both should be considered, he said, before either should be voted on. The House then debated Hawaii statehood, FEPC, and the 21-day rule until Majority Leader John W. McCormack (D Mass.) moved for adjournment.

Vito Marcantonio (ALP N.Y.) asked for a roll call vote on the motion, saying that a vote to adjourn was a vote against FEPC. He called for the House to stay in session through the evening until FEPC came up. He didn't get the necessary support, however (one-fifth of the members present must support a request for a roll-call vote before it is ordered), and a teller vote was ordered. Members filed by the tellers to be counted, but their names were not noted. The motion to adjourn carried 167-109. Use of the 21-day rule was postponed until the second Monday in February.

And action Feb. 13 under the 21-day rule was circumvented when the House Jan. 26 agreed not to meet on that date — in observance of Lincoln's birthday.

Discharge Petition Filed

FEPC supporters attacked the problem from other angles, however. Franklin D. Roosevelt Jr. (D-Lib N. Y.) filed a discharge petition. If 218 names (a majority of the House) could have garnered, the FEPC bill would have been brought up automatically.

That move ran into trouble when some Republicans reportedly declined to sign it. After about 75 names had been collected, Adam C. Powell Jr. (D N.Y.) accused Roosevelt of introducing the petition purely for political reasons. So long as it was Roosevelt's petition, Powell said, Republicans and many Democrats wouldn't sign. Roosevelt then offered to withdraw his petition if Powell could get more signatures on one of his own.

On Jan. 25 Powell filed his own FEPC discharge petition. Roosevelt promptly signed it and urged other Democrats to do the same. He said Jan. 26 that almost no Republicans had signed.

Second Rules Try

Earlier, on Jan. 24, Adolph Sabath (D Ill.) forced another vote on FEPC in the Rules Committee. It lost by a tie, 5-5. For it were Sabath, Ray J. Madden (D Ind.), John McSweeney (D Ohio), James J. Delaney (D N.Y.), and Christian A. Herter (R Mass.). Opposed were Eugene Cox (D Ga.), Howard W. Smith (D Va.), Colmer, John E. Lyle, Jr. (D Tex.) and Clarence J. Brown (R Ohio). Leo E. Allen (R Ill.) and James W. Wadsworth (R N.Y. were absent.

Brown then moved for reconsideration, leaving a chance to bring it to another vote when the absentees returned.

Calendar Wednesday

Next move by FEPC proponents was to take advantage of a "Calendar Wednesday" Every Wednesday, according to House rules, the roll of committees is called alphabetically and the chairman of each may call up any bill his committee has approved. This procedure is almost always dispensed with by a two-thirds vote.

On Jan. 25 the two-thirds majority could not be raised to skip over Calendar Wednesday. So by voice vote, Calendar Wednesday was held.

First committee called was Armed Services. Acting for the chairman, Paul J. Kilday (D Tex.) called up HR 3205, a bill to extend one year the time for making application for terminal-leave pay.

Following Armed Services, it would have been the turn of Brent Spence (D Ky.), chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee, then Tom Murray (D Tenn.), Civil Service and Post Office; John L. McMillan (D S.C.), District of Columbia Committee; and then Lesinski of the Education and Labor Committee. Debate was continued on terminal leave application. The bill was passed by voice vote, and the House adjourned.

Calendar Wednesday was in order again Feb. 1. When the House convened, James C. Davis (D Ga.) immediately demanded a quorum call. As usual, the reading of the House roster took more than half an hour. John Bell Williams (D Miss.) then moved that Calendar Wednesday be dispensed with. He also asked for another quorum, again to defeat his motion 104-271.

The alphabetical list of committees was called and Spence, chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee, was given first chance to call up a bill. He picked HR 6743 to set up a $1 billion federal fund to buy federal home-loan bank securities and a $750 million federal fund to provide loans to the Federal Home - Loan banks.

L. Mendel Rivers (D S.C.), asked for a quorum call. Debate — usually rigidly controlled in the House— strayed to FEPC, the H-bomb, potato price support, John L. Lewis and Republican and Democratic shortcomings.

Davis forced another quorum call. Then he asked for and got his third roll call of the day. He tried it again, but a quick count of the House by the chairman showed a quorum present.

Then the House got down to business and passed the home-loan bank measure on voice vote. That wound up the day's work and the House adjourned.

Recurrent Calendar Wednesday

Calendar Wednesday next came up Feb. 9. FEPC supporters didn't have a chance, however, as a Post Office rate bill was called up by Tom Murray (D Tenn.). The entire day was spent on that measure.

Next chance was on Feb. 15. The District of Columbia Committee was first on the Calendar Wednesday list.

XUM

When the House convened, Davis started the parade of roll calls by making the point of order that a quorum was not present. The roll was called. A routine request to dispense with a search for absent members by the sergeant-at-arms was objected to by Davis. This necessitated a vote on dispensing with the search —even though an ample quorum had appeared on the first call. The search was dispensed with 257-82 on roll call vote.

Then James P. Richards (D S.C.) moved to adjourn. On another roll call vote the motion was rejected 97-236. John Bell Williams (D Miss.) moved to dispense with Calendar Wednesday. On a division (standing) vote the motion failed 18-94. As a quorum obviously was not present, Williams was given a quorum roll call.

Ed Gossett (D Tex.) moved adjournment. He lost on division vote 69-91. He then demanded a roll call vote and it was ordered. His motion failed again 109-218. Oren Harris (D Ark.) asked for another quorum call.

Marcantonio then accused both Democrats and Republicans of aiding the anti-FEPC filibuster by failing to stay on the floor between roll calls. But the roll was again read and a quorum found present. Tom Pickett (D Tex.), however, objected to dispensing with search for members. A division vote on the motion to dispense carried 126-17. Pickett immediately objected to the vote on the ground that a quorum was not present. Clare Hoffman (R Mich.) moved adjournment.

The motion to adjourn was rejected 126-198 on roll call. Then, going back to the motion to dispense with a search by the sergeant-at-arms, a division vote was taken. It carried 138-6. William M. Colmer (D Miss.) objected to the vote on a point of no quorum. So, a roll-call vote was taken, the motion to dispense with the search carried 243-86.

McMillan Recognized

Finally the House got down to business, and the Speaker ordered a call of the committees under Calendar Wednesday procedure. Hoffman, Howard W. Smith (D Va.) and Colmer tried to get the floor on parliamentary inquiries and motions to adjourn, but Speaker Sam Rayburn (D Tex.) refused to recognize them. Instead he gave the nod to D. C. Committee Chairman John L. McMillan (D S.C.).

McMillan called up a bill (HR 6670) to incorporate the Girl Scouts of the United States. Discussion of the bill was punctuated by remarks on FEPC; "Oregon — the Epic of the Beaver State"; Stromboli and its effects on Girl Scout movie fans; husbands who desert wives; and the chances of Washington's Farewell Address being read in the House, as per tradition, on Feb. 22, the next Calendar Wednesday.

Spokesmen for both factions agreed tentatively not to use delaying tactics the following week during reading of the Farewell Address. Then they passed the Girl Scout bill on voice vote and adjourned.

Third Rules Try

On the following day FEPC was again brought up in the Rules Committee. The committee, since the summer of 1949, had declined to put the bill on a regular House calendar—thus blocking floor debate of the measure. Both Democrats and Republicans split on the bill, and a 6-6 tie vote left it in the pigeonhole.

Voting to approve the bill were Christian Herter (R Mass.), Clarence J. Brown (R Ohio), James J. Delaney (D. N.Y.), Ray J. Madden (D Ind.), John McSweeney (D Ohio), and Chairman Adolph J. Sabath (D Ill.). Opposing the bill were Leo E. Allen (R Ill.), James W. Wadsworth (R. N.Y.), Eugene Cox (D Ga.), Howard W. Smith (D Va.), William M. Colmer (D Miss.) and John E. Lyle, Jr. (D Tex.)

Lesinski Gets Floor

Lesinski's turn finally came Feb. 22. When the House was called to order, the anti-FEPC forces started a delaying action. If they could have forced the House to adjourn before debate was completed on the bill, it would have had to lay over for many months while Lesinski again awaited his alphabetical turn.

It was after 5 p. m. before Lesinski could even get the floor. Lengthy roll calls and debate ate up the intervening time. The day's session lasted 15 hours. Seven roll-call votes were taken and three quorum calls were made. Each took more than half an hour. Several teller votes were demanded, and, by walking slowly past the tellers, opponents could also drag out that "time-saving" vote procedure. Here are the parliamentary moves used by both factions (actual debate on the bill, carried on between moves, follows this list):

PARLIAMENTARY ROADBLOCKS

Tom Murray (D Tenn.) and John Rankin (D Miss.) made a point of no quorum. The roll was read.

John Bell Williams (D Miss.) demanded that the Journal of the previous day's proceedings be read in full. Ordinarily it is skipped over. The Journal was read.

Donald W. Nicholson (R Mass.) made a point of no quorum. The roll was read.

John McSweeney (D Ohio) read Washington's Farewell Address — an annual custom in the House on Feb. 22.

Eugene Cox (D Ga.) moved that the House adjourn in memory of Washington. The motion was rejected on roll call vote 127-278.

Dwight Rogers (D Fla.) moved that Calendar Wednesday be dispensed with. The motion was rejected on roll call 121-285.

J. Vaughan Gary (D Va.) made a point of no quorum. The roll was read.

James C. Davis (D Ga.) objected to dispensing with the search for absent members by the Sergeant-at-Arms. A motion by Majority Leader John W. McCormack (D Mass.) to dispense with the search carried on roll-call vote 290-115.

Robert L. F. Sikes (D Fla.) moved adjournment. His motion was rejected on roll-call vote 127-284.

Lesinski Calls Up Bill

John Lesinski (D Mich.), chairman of the Labor Committee, was only then recognized, despite the fact several FEPC foes were shouting for recognition. Lesinski called up the FEPC bill.

Tom Pickett (D Tex.) made a point of order that Lesinski had not been authorized by the committee to call up the bill. He was overruled by the Speaker.

Howard W. Smith (D Va.) asked for a vote on whether to consider the bill. The House voted for consideration on roll call 287-121.

Lesinski asked unanimous consent to dispense with reading of his 22-page bill.

Smith of Virginia objected, and the bill was read.

Smith, after the bill had been read and discussed briefly, moved that the House, then sitting as the Committee of the Whole, rise without further action. The Chairman ruled the motion out of order.

Smith appealed the ruling. The Chairman was upheld on a division (standing) vote 123-77 and on a teller vote (members filing past "tellers" to vote), the decision again was upheld, 143-83.

Paul W. Shafer (R Mich.) moved adjournment. The motion was ruled out of order while the House was sitting as the Committee of the Whole.

Shafer moved the Committee rise. He lost on division vote 105-167 and on tellers 107-179.

Shafer, after intervening debate, again moved the Committee rise. He lost on division vote 113-180 and on tellers 118-161.

Rankin moved that the Committee rise and recommend to the House that the enacting clause of the bill be stricken out. This would have invalidated the bill. He lost on division 101-161 and on tellers 106-163.

Unanimous Consent Asked

Adam C. Powell, Jr. (D N.Y.) asked unanimous consent that all debate on the Steed substitute close at 10:15 p. m. William M. Colmer (D Miss.) objected.

Powell moved that debate on the substitute close at 10:15 p. m. He lost on a division 143-149, and on tellers 140-167.

Shafer moved the Committee rise. He lost on a division 142-164, but won on tellers 172-165.

Smith moved the House adjourn. His motion was rejected on a roll-call vote, 165-239.

Lesinski moved the House again take up the FEPC bill. Smith again called for a vote on whether to consider the bill. It carried 271-133 on roll call.

McCormack moved that debate on the McConnell substitute end at 2:30 a. m. The motion carried on division 192-64.

Andrew J. Biemiller (D Wis.), when the McConnell substitute had been approved, demanded an "engrossed" copy of the bill (a printed copy with all amendments in place). As several hours are needed to print a bill, the House could not complete action on the bill that morning.

McCormack asked unanimous consent to adjourn until Friday, Feb. 24. John F. Kennedy (D Mass.) objected.

McCormack moved that the House adjourn until noon Thursday, Feb. 23. The motion carried.

Debate

Actual debate on the measure was carried on between strategic moves. Lesinski supported the bill with the following arguments:

1. Job discrimination is a widespread, serious problem. 2. Democratic principles demand it be stopped. 3. Discrimination costs at least $15 billion annually. 4. Court decisions show the bill is constitutional. 5. Areas of the greatest discrimination are least able to prohibit the practices. 6. Wartime FEPC worked in the South. 7. No special privileges are conferred; an employer is not required to hire anyone not qualified for the job. 8. Small, intimate companies are exempt. 9. Social equality is not the concern of the bill; or is segregation—except on the job. 10. The bill does not outlaw prejudice, but outlaws the acts that prejudice leads to. 11. The bill is supported by both political parties and all major church groups.

The opposition arguments, as summed up by Joe L. Evins (D Tenn.) were:

1. The bill is unconstitutional and a violation of the Bill of Rights. 2. The law would be unenforceable, because it would be unacceptable to the public. 3. It would disrupt business and labor unions, result in chaos, social and economic unrest and perhaps bloodshed. 4. The bill would "establish a set of intangibles beyond the power of the government to interpret and administer except by mass coercion and by the total usurpation of the rights of our individual citizens". 5. The bill compels discrimination in favor of a certain class, color, etc.

Substitutes Offered

Substitute bills were then introduced by Samuel K. McConnell Jr. (R Pa.) and Tom Steed (D Okla.). The McConnell bill was identical with HR 6841, previously introduced by him. The Steed bill was similar to HR 6668, introduced by Brooks Hays (D Ark.). Both provided for an FEPC but for voluntary compliance only.

After several amendments providing for certain exemptions were added to both substitutes, the Steed bill was rejected and the McConnell bill tentatively agreed to on voice vote. Among the amendments agreed to in the early morning hours was one by Robert Hale (R Maine) barring job discrimination because of political affiliation, and another by Ben F. Jensen (R Iowa) providing that the anti-discrimination act does not apply to persons who are members of an organization cited by the Attorney General as Communist or Communist-front.

Final Action

After formal approval to the substitution of the McConnell bill for the Powell bill was voted on roll call, 222-178, the House adjourned. Final approval of the bill was blocked at that time by a demand by Andrew J. Biemiller (D Wis.) to see a printed copy of the bill with all amendments in place.

The copy had been prepared by noon Feb. 23, and the House took up final passage. A motion to recommit the bill to the Committee for further study was defeated 177-239 on roll call. Final approval came on a 240-177 roll-call vote.

AMENDMENTS AGREED TO

To Powell Bill

Samuel K. McConnell (R Pa.)—Substitute for Powell bill an FEPC without enforcement powers. Division 236-63.

To McConnell Substitute

John W. Heselton (R Mass.)—Specify that the FEPC shall use conferences, conciliation and persuasion in cases of violation. Division 186-54.

Sam Hobbs (D Ala.)—Specify that a person lacking qualification for a job need not be employed. Division 149-91.

Dwight Rogers (D Fla.)—Bar discrimination on account of sex. Voice.

Howard Smith (D Va.) — Provide that attendance at hearing on violations may be required within the U. S. District Court area in which the hearing is held. Division 211-116.

William M. Colmer (D Miss.)—Exempt the AEC or AEC contractors from compliance with the act. Voice.

XUM

Robert L. F. Sikes (D Fla.)—Specify that the mere absence of individuals of any race, etc., from employment shall not be evidence of discrimination. Voice.

Charles E. Bennett (D Fla.)—Bar discrimination because of physical disability. Voice.

Robert Hale (R Maine)—Bar discrimination because of political affiliation. Voice.

Ben F. Jensen (R Iowa)—Provide that the act does not apply to persons who are members of an organization cited by the Attorney General as Communist or Communist-front. Voice.

Kenneth B. Keating (R N.Y.)—Provide that not more than three Commissioners shall be members of the same political party. Voice.

To Steed Substitute

Colmer—Provide that a contractor for the AEC may refuse to employ aliens. Division 182-105.

Hobbs—Specify that a person lacking qualification for a job need not be employed. Division 178-81.

Tom Pickett (D Tex.)—Provide that a church not be required to hire persons of other religions. Division 197-74.

Burr P. Harrison (D Va.)—Provide that a religious organization not be required to hire atheists. Voice.

Monroe M. Redden (D N.C.)—Employment of a person of a particular race, etc., shall create a presumption that such a race, etc., is not discriminated against. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Tom Steed (D Okla.)—Substitute an FEPC without enforcement powers. Offered to Powell bill. Voice vote.

L. Mendel Rivers (D S.C.)—Allow any state to elect to be exempt from the act. Offered to McConnell substitute. Rejected on division 118-126 and on teller 134-134 with the chairman voting "no".

Laurie C. Battle (D Ala.)—Declare it is the policy of the United States to "persuade the person charged to eliminate" discrimination in employment. Offered to Steed substitute. Voice.

SENATE

Debate

The Senate Labor Committee had finished action on the Senate FEPC bill (S 1728), identical with the House measure, in 1949 and had sent it to the floor without recommendation for approval or rejection (CQ Almanac Vol. V, P. 455).

On May 2 the Senate Democratic Policy Committee decided to call up the bill for debate May 8. Southern opponents promised a filibuster. They said they would have two chances to talk the bill to death: First, when Majority Leader Scott W. Lucas (D Ill.) moved to consider the bill, and, second (if the first talkathon failed), when the bill was actually considered.

Lucas said he would try to stop a filibuster by use of the cloture rule. In order to cut off the usually unlimited Senate debate, two thirds (64) of the Senators had to vote to do so. (For background on Senate cloture rule, see CQ Almanac Vol. V, P. 583).

Lucas formally moved May 8 that the Senate take up the FEPC bill. An actual filibuster did not materialize at that time. For the first two days, FEPC supporters took more time than did opponents. But the threat of a filibuster remained.

Opening Arguments

Elbert Thomas (D Utah) opened debate explaining the stand of bill supporters:

"In the United States, which is today, of course, a democracy depending on private property, and, because of the type of money we have, a dollar democracy, the right to a job is probably the greatest factor connected with any other one thing in the national life. It is the source of all liberty. It is the source of nearly all rights under democracy."

Irving Ives (R N.Y.) told the Senate the FEPC bill was modeled after New York's state FEPC Act. He said: "The fact remains that, since the enactment of the New York law, discrimination in employment in the State of New York has diminished very materially. And the further fact remains that among those for whose principal benefit the law was enacted no responsible person has complained of any lack in its enforcement. And the final fact remains that these same New Yorkers are among those most active and most enthusiastic in support of S 1728."

Richard B. Russell (D Ga.) led off for the anti-FEPC forces. He said: "I say that the issue presented by the pending motion involves the integrity of our parliamentary procedure. If we are to set a precedent of taking up bills of far reaching consequences and doubtful constitutionality without hearings and without recommendations of a committee of this body to guide us in our deliberations, without any opportunity for a Senator to present amendments to the committee, we will plunge the Senate into confusion and will change the whole character of our processes."

Lister Hill (D Ala.) listed the "many ill and evil effects" of the bill, including:

"It would deny to the employer the right to hire, promote or discharge employees upon the basis of their efficiency, merit or faithfulness.

"It would subject the employer to investigation, harassment, fines and penalties, to be determined by a Commission located in Washington."

On May 10 Robert A. Taft (R Ohio) moved that the Senate take up S Res 248 disapproving one of the President's reorganization plans. Taft's resolution was put to vote. It carried on roll call 50-22, so FEPC was temporarily dropped. (For details of reorganization plan debate, see P. 362).

The Senate returned to the Lucas motion to take up FEPC on May 12, debated it briefly and then dropped it again until May 15.

Lucas Seeks Cloture

Debate continued with both sides sharing the floor. On May 17 Lucas filed a cloture petition and left it pending. Only 16 signatures are needed before such a petition can be filed, but Lucas secured 40 names—14 Democrats and 26 Republicans. The petition stated that the following Senators moved to bring to a close the debate on the motion to take up FEPC. It was signed by:

Lucas, Francis J. Myers (D Pa.), Brien McMahon (D Conn.), Matthew M. Neely (D W.Va.), Elbert D. Thomas (D Utah), Dennis Chavez (D N.M.), William Benton (D Conn.), Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.), Herbert H. Lehman (D N.Y.), Harley M. Kilgore (D W.Va.), Theodore Francis Green (D R.I.), Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.), Edward L. Leahy (D R.I.), Glen Taylor (D Idaho), Homer E. Capehart (R Ind.), Bourke B. Hickenlooper (R Iowa), Forrest C. Donnell (R Mo.), Charles W. Tobey (R N.H.),

Robert A. Taft (R Ohio), William F. Knowland (R Calif.), Kenneth S. Wherry (R Neb.), Homer Ferguson (R Mich.), William E. Jenner (R Ind.), Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.), Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr. (R Mass.), Edward J. Thye (R Minn.), H. Alexander Smith (R N.J.), Robert C. Hendrickson (R N.J.), Margaret Chase Smith (R Maine), George D. Aiken (R Vt.), Irving M. Ives (R N.Y.), John W. Bricker (R Ohio), James P. Kem (R Mo.), Owen Brewster (R Maine), Hugh Butler (R Neb.), Harry Darby (R Kan.), Andrew F. Schoeppel (R Kan.), Joseph McCarthy (R Wis.), Arthur V. Watkins (R Utah), and Edward Martin (R Pa.),

Debate during the week was lengthy, but did not develop into a genuine filibuster. Both factions had their say, and FEPC was frequently set aside for other bills. Russell B. Long (D La.), promised however, that he "would be here fighting this legislation morning, noon and night—all night if need be—from now until the end, whenever that might be, six days, six weeks or six months from now."

Principal debaters during the week were:

Olin D. Johnston (D S.C.),—"It is apparent that the proponents of the legislation are not interested in the welfare, well-being and success of the minority races in the Southern States but that they are directing the legislation at the South for political purposes. They are simply using the Negro in the South as a political football."

Walter F. George (D Ga.) — "I hope there will be no unseemly contest here between Republicans and those on this side of the aisle who call themselves Democrats, and who belong to the Democratic Party, over the authorship of this particular bill. Let us concede it to the Communists."

Spessard L. Holland (D Fla.) — "They argue that because eight states have seen fit to adopt FEPC laws such legislation must be good for the nation as a whole. They ignore the fact that 19 sovereign states have voted it down conclusively, and that many other states, including of course southern states, have refused to give the matter sufficient consideration even to bring it before the legislatures."

James O. Eastland (D Miss.) — "Speaking for the State of Mississippi, there is certainly no discrimination in employment in that state because of race, color, or national origin. In all the hearings which are talked about, there will not be found a scintilla of proof that there is discrimination in Mississippi or in any other state of the deep South. I deny most emphatically any statement that there is discrimination in my state based on race or color."

Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) — "Two thirds of the people in the world are colored. So long as men and women and children of color are discriminated against in the United States, so long as they are denied equal opportunities the colored people of the world have a right to suspect our professed friendship for them and to look upon our international efforts for world understanding and democracy with suspicion."

Cloture Refused

Lucas asked for a vote on cloture May 19. The motion to shut off debate was rejected 52-32 — 12 votes short of the necessary 64.

Southern Democrats, who had threatened a filibuster on the motion to take up FEPC, cast 20 negative votes. They were joined by six other Democrats and six Republicans — five of them from the West. For cloture were 33 Republicans and 19 Democrats. (For vote lineup, see P. 542).

Lucas promised that his cloture move would succeed when absent Senators returned, but Republicans pointed out that Garrett L. Withers (D Ky.) did not vote, but announced against cloture, so that if all absentees had voted, anti-FEPC forces would have had 33 votes — enough to stand off the entire rest of the Senate. Republicans challenged Lucas to induce one of the "no" voters to change his mind.

Kenneth S. Wherry (R Neb.) said 78 1/2 per cent of the Republicans voted for cloture, "and only 36 1/2 per cent of the Democrats voted for cloture." He also said that under the old cloture rule requiring approval of two thirds of the Senators voting, cloture still would have failed. Wherry concluded:

"Today's vote in the Senate shows that the Republican Party is the party of the great emancipator, Abraham Lincoln, and that the Republican Party is the only agency through which equal opportunity for legislation of this kind can be guaranteed to the voters of the United States of America."

Lucas conceded that the Democratic Party was split on the subject of civil rights, but blamed failure of the move to consider FEPC on the GOP-sponsored cloture rule enacted last year. Now, he said, the rule won't be broken in one thousand years.

President Truman flatly rejected May 25 any suggestion of a "voluntary" Fair Employment Practices Commission. He turned thumbs down at a new conference on any idea of a compromise.

Lucas said he would drop his attempt to take up FEPC for a short time while the Senate considered other legislation. Then, on June 5, he withdrew his motion to take up the bill — which had technically remained the pending business in the Senate.

Minority Leader Kenneth S. Wherry (R Neb.) protested withdrawal of the motion and asked for another try at cloture. Lucas replied that it was obvious that the necessary number of cloture votes could not be obtained at that time. Lucas promised the Senate that "before this session shall end we shall get another vote on the measure".

Second Cloture Vote

On June 13 Lucas announced he would introduce another motion July 10 to take up FEPC, and at the same time would file a cloture petition. He said he was making the early announcement so that all Senators would have a month to arrange to be present for the vote.

The motion and petition were introduced. A vote was taken on cloture July 12 after brief debate. Again Administration forces failed to halt debate. The roll-call vote on invoking cloture was 55-33, this time nine votes short of the necessary two-thirds majority (vote P. 542).

The weeks between votes failed to produce any converts for either side. A few Senators who had not voted the first time added their votes, but the outcome was not changed. In addition to those voting, three Senators announced that they favored the bill. They were Glen Taylor (D Idaho), Harry P. Cain (R Wash.) and Charles W. Tobey (R N.H.). Garrett L. Withers (D Ky.) sent word that he would have voted "nay". Not indicating their stands were Harry Darby (R Kan.), Sheridan Downey (D Calif.), Herbert R. O'Conor (D Md.), and Claude Pepper (D Fla.). Since Southern forces, aided by six Republicans, had at least 34 "no" votes available, the cloture petition could not have carried even if all absentees had voted "yes".

Wayne Morse (R Ore.) blamed failure of cloture on the new debate-stopping rule sponsored by Minority Leader Kenneth S. Wherry (R Neb.). Morse said the new rule, requiring a two-thirds majority of the Senate membership, could never halt a Southern filibuster. He asked that the cloture rule be changed to require only a majority vote of all Senators present. Wherry replied that his rule was not at fault. Even under the old cloture rule, he said, the debate could not have been stopped (the old rule required a two-thirds vote only of Senators present and voting). Wherry blamed defeat of the cloture motion to Democratic politics. He pointed out that 78 per cent of the Republicans voted to end debate, while only 42 per cent of the Democrats went along.

The Senate then dropped FEPC indefinitely.

LOBBY STANDS

Organizations backing the FEPC bill and other civil rights measures—minority groups, labor unions, church groups, civil liberties organizations, fraternal orders, professional associations— exerted pressure on Congress through a series of legislative actions during the year. Flat opposition to FEPC was less vocal, although several national organizations criticized the bill.

The lobby groups were active during the House fight on the Cox resolution to restore to the House Rules Committee the legislation—blocking power it had lost in 1949 (see p. 383). The defeat of the Cox motion was considered to be a significant victory achieved by FEPC supporters.

Among organizations which opposed the proposed rules change in 1950, and partly for reasons directly relating to the parliamentary needs of the FEPC and similar bills, were AFL, CIO, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Americans for Democratic Action, American Veterans Committee, Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, New York Council for a Permanent FEPC, International Association of Machinists, National Community Relations Advisory Committee, and Jewish War Veterans of the U.S.

Lobby groups kept up their pressure throughout the parliamentary angles culminating in House passage of the bill, and then turned to the Senate. Bill supporters protested repeatedly when other measures were put ahead of FEPC on the Senate timetable. At that time Congress had intended to adjourn at the end of July, and many groups thought the bill would be lost in the legislative jam of the last few weeks in the session.

Pressure was maintained during the Senate attempts to shut off a filibuster threatened by Southern Senators. When FEPC failed in the Senate, the lobby groups set their sights on the 82nd Congress.

FEPC Backers

One large group of organizations, backing FEPC, held a National Emergency Civil Rights Mobilization in Washington Jan. 15-17. This group, together with the National Council for a Permanent FEPC, issued several lists of organizations which participated in the Mobilization or otherwise cooperated. A "partial" list, on a joint letterhead of the Council and the Mobilization, follows:

African Methodist Episcopal Church
Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority

Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity
Amalgamated Cothing Workers of America (CIO)
Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen of America (AFL) American Civil Liberties Union

American Council on Race Relations
American Federation of Labor
Americans for Democratic Action
American Friends Service Committee
American Jewish Committee
American Jewish Congress
American Unitarian Association
American Unitarian Youth
American Veterans Committee
Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith
Association of Catholic Trade Unionists
Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters (AFL) Catholic Interracial Council
Catholic War Veterans
Central Conference of American Rabbis
Church League for Industrial Democracy
Committee of Racial Equality
Common Council for American Unity
Congregational Christian Churches (Council for Social Action)
Congress of Industrial Organizations
Council Against Intolerance in America
Delta Sigma Theta Sorority
Evangelical and Reformed Church, General Synod
Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America
Fraternal Council of Negro Churches in America
Girl Friends, Inc.
Hotel and Restaurant Employees and Bartenders International Union (AFL) Improved Benevolent & Protective Order of Elks of the World
Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers of America (CIO) International Brotherhood of Teamsters (AFL) International Ladies Garment Workers Union (AFL)
Japanese-American Citizens League
Jewish Labor Committee
Jewish War Veterans of the United States
Kappa Alpha Psi
League of United Latin American Citizens
Methodist Church, General Conference
Methodist Federation for Social Action
Methodist Ministers' Union
National Alliance of Postal Employees
National Association for the Advancement of Colored People
National Association of Colored Graduate Nurses
National Association of Colored Women
National Baptist Convention, U.S.A.
National Bar Association
National Community Relations Advisory Council (of Jewish organizations)
National Council of Catholic Women
National Council of Jewish Women
National Council of Negro Women
Nation Council of Student Christian Associations National Farm Labor Union (AFL)
National Medical Association
National Negro Insurance Association
National Negro Funeral Directors Association, Inc.
National Religion & Labor Foundation
National Supreme Council of Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite Masons
National Urban League
National Women's Trade Union League of America
Negro Newspaper Publishers Association

Omega Psi Phi Fraternity
Phi Beta Sigma Fraternity
Postwar World Council
Presbyterian General Assembly
Sigma Gamma Rho Sorority
Students for Democratic Action
Supreme Lodge Knights of Pythias
Synagogue Council of America
Transport Workers Union of America (CIO)
Union of American Hebrew Congregations
Unitarian Fellowship for Social Justice
United Automobile Workers of America (CIO)
United Council of Church Women
United Hatters, Cap and Millinery Workers' International Union (AFL) United Mine Workers of America
United Packinghouse Workers of America (CIO)

United Steelworkers of America (CIO)
United Transport Service Employees Union (CIO)
Women's International League for Peace and Freedom
Workers Defense League
Workmen's Circle
Young Men's Christian Association, National Board
Young Women's Christian Association National Board

The above list did not include five organizations whose names appeared on an earlier list: American Council for Human Rights, Catholic Labor Alliance, National Council on Civil Rights, National Lawyers Guild and New York Council for a permanent FEPC.

A number of other organizations took action in behalf of the FEPC bill, but were not included in the lists above, either because they did not seek to join, or because they were not permitted to (the Mobilization excluded those unions which were on trial within the CIO or about to be thrown out of CIO, and political organizations), or for other reasons.

Among organizations whose representatives testified generally in behalf of FEPC, and not listed above, were:

Natl. Union of Marine Cooks and Stewards
Intl. Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union
United Public Workers of America
United Electrical Workers
Intl. Union of Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers
Natl. Citizens Council on Civil Rights
Assn. on American Indian Affairs, Inc.
Negro Railway Labor Executives Committee (which includes The Assn. of Colored Railway Trainmen and Locomotive Firemen, Colored Trainmen of America, Dining Car and Food Workers Union, Intl. Assn. of Railway Employees, and Southern Assn. of Colored Railway Trainmen and Firemen)
Socialist Party
Socialist Workers Party

Among other groups taking action in favor of the legislation were:

New York Board of Rabbis
Americans United for World Organization
March on Washington Movement
Natl. Congress on Home Missions
Natl. Conference of Christians and Jews
Natl. Consumers League
Retail, Wholesale and Department Store Union

Opponents of FEPC

Flat opposition to passage of FEPC came from:

Natl. Economic Council, Inc.
American Assn. of Small Business
American Council of Christian Churches of California
Toledo Small Business Assn.
Associated Retail Bakers of America
Wagner Baker Corporation, Newark, N. J.
Southern States Industrial Council

Other organizations commented unsympathetically in their publications:

Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers—". . . virtually no consideration has been given to the position of the employer and debate has been largely on emotional grounds."

Natl. Lumber Manufacturers Assn.—"FEPC, which would turn over to Washington bureaucrats the right to determine who should work for whom and where, is claimed by the opponents to be striking at the very foundation of our freedom."

Steuben Society of America—"Steuben News", publication of the Society, carried column by Rep. William Lemke (R N. D.) attacking FEPC. Copies went to Congressmen.

Spiritual Mobilization, Los Angeles—"Faith and Freedom", monthly publication of this religious movement, carried article by Frank Chodorov, "Federalized Race Prejudice", attacking the measure. Copies went to Congressmen.

Opposition to FEPC was also expressed by Negroes in at least three pieces of literature sent to Congress. These were an editorial in the Houston, Texas, "Negro Labor News", transcripts of radio broadcasts by W. H. Lewis of the Southern Leadership Institute, Meridian, Mississippi. and a mimeographed message containing a statement attributed to the publisher of the Newark, New Jersey, "Telegram". The mimeographed message was unidentifiable as to source.

However, most Negro newspapers have continued to campaign heavily for passage of FEPC.

People's Lobby, Inc. — Told civil rights advocates they "are trying to bamboozle people" and asked that they "work for an economy of abundance". The Lobby quoted the report of the President's Civil Rights Committee:

"In a world forever tottering on the brink of war, civil rights will be precarious at best. In a nation wracked by depression, and widespread economic insecurity, the inclination to consider civil rights a luxury, will be more easily adopted."

People's Lobby Executive Secretary Benjamin C. Marsh said it is futile to try to secure civil rights "in an economy in which economic rights are denied the masses of the people".

Earlier FEPC action detailed in Congressional Quarterly yearbooks:

For 1945: Pp. 143, 167, 286-7, 453, and 578.
For 1946: Pp. 26, 171, 307, 495-6, 500, 701-2, and 707.

House Rules Change

H Res 133

The Administration won a major victory early in the session when a move by Southern Democrats to increase the power of the House Rules Committee was blocked.

The Southerners, led by Rep. Eugene Cox (D Ga.) attempted to restore to the Rules Committee its old power to block any bill by refusing either to approve or reject it. Cox ranked second in the Rules Committee behind octogenarian Chairman Adolph Sabath (D Ill.).

Prior to Jan. 3, 1949, the Rules Committee could block any bill simply by refusing to act on it. All legislation has to go through that Committee, which gives each bill a spot on the House calendar. The only way to get blocked legislation loose then was via a discharge petition signed by 218 members, or by taking advantage of a "Calendar Wednesday". The discharge petition is a cumbersome device that is seldom successful unless the bottled-up measure has tremendous House support. Calendar Wednesday is almost always dispensed with by unanimous consent and would be effective only when the committee backing the bill happened to be next on the alphabetical list. (See glossary.)

On Jan. 3, 1949, the House approved a new "21-day rule" to ease the task of dislodging bills from the Rules Committee (CQ Almanac Vol. V, p. 577.) Under the rule, a resolution providing for consideration of a committee-approved bill would be sent to the Rules Committee where it would be given a spot on the House calendar. But if the Rules Committee refused to act for 21 days, the chairman of the original committee approving the bill could call up the resolution providing for floor debate any second or fourth Monday in the month.

FEPC in Fight

The Education and Labor Committee reported a Fair Employment Practices Commission bill Aug. 2, 1949. It then went to the Rules Committee. Rules declined to report it. So Chairman John Lesinski (D Mich.) of the Education and Labor Committee said early in the 1950 session that he would call for consideration of the bill under the 21-day rule on Jan. 23. (See p 375.)

In a surprise move Jan. 13, Cox asked for a vote in the Rules Committee on H Res 133, which would restore to the committee its old power. On a 9-2 vote the resolution was approved. Opposing it were Chairman Sabath and Ray J. Madden (D Ind.), John McSweeney (D Ohio) was absent.

The resolution originally had been introduced by Cox March 7, 1949. It had been referred to the Rules Committee but no action had been taken.

After Cox's resolution was approved by the Rules Committee, Chairman Sabath indicated that he would not report the resolution formally until the three-day limit was up and then would not call it up for action until the seven-day limit expired. Consequently the opportunity would remain open for FEPC to be called up and acted on before Cox's rule change could be considered.

Parliamentarian Gives Advice

On Jan. 17, House Parliamentarian Lewis Deschler was called into a closed session of the Rules Committee for consultation. He was asked if there was any legal means of taking control of the resolution away from Sabath. He said a little - known rule provided that the member "designated by the Committee on Rules" may control the resolution. William M. Colmer (D Miss.) then moved that the committee direct Cox to take the rule change to the floor.

Sabath immediately pounded his gavel (so hard that reporters waiting outside the committee room could hear it) and declared the meeting to be adjourned. Then he stalked out of the room, saying to reporters, "The meeting's adjourned. We took no action." But other committee members stayed behind and voted on Colmer's resolution — Cox presiding. The vote was said to be 7-2 for it. Sabath and Cox then held a parley in the House chamber. Following the talk, Sabath formally reported the resolution to the House.

Cox took the floor and explained that he was "stepping aside" with the understanding that Sabath would call up the resolution for action Jan. 19, or in Sabath's absence, he (Cox) would be authorized to call it up. Sabath retorted that the committee action putting Cox in charge of the resolution was "a violation of the rules of the House", and added that he had promised Cox only that he would allow him (Cox) to call up the resolution only if he (Sabath) were out of town.

Martin, Rayburn Positions

Minority Leader Joseph W. Martin Jr. (R Mass.) said a meeting of Republicans showed they were for the rules change, but didn't think it should be voted on until after FEPC had been considered. On Jan. 18, Speaker Sam Rayburn (D Tex.) announced that the Democratic factions had agreed to vote Jan. 20 on the resolution. The Republicans met and agreed they wanted a rule change, but did not want to vote Jan. 20 and appear to be blocking the FEPC bill coming up Jan. 23. So Martin announced that GOP strategy would be to vote to adjourn Jan. 20 before a vote on the rule could be taken. Then the Republicans could support FEPC Jan. 23 and be ready to take up the rule any time.

Votes on Resolution

Cox's resolution came up Jan. 20. Martin immediately moved to adjourn. His motion was defeated 161-255 on a party-line roll call.

Then after Speaker Rayburn and Republican spokesman Leo Allen (R Ill.) both said the issue at hand was the future of the entire Truman program, the Administration scored its victory — the resolution was rejected 183-236 on roll call. On the showdown, 171 Democrats, 64 Republicans and one American - Laborite defeated 98 Republicans and 85 Democrats. (See vote chart p.544.)

Hatch Act Amendment

HR 9023—P. L. 732

SUMMARY

President Truman Aug. 25 ended an 18-month controversy when he signed into law HR 9023, amending the Hatch Political Activities Act to soften penalties imposed by that Act on federal employes who participate in partisan political activity. The Act originally proscribed all such activity by government workers and gave the Civil Service Commission no choice but to fire anyone who violated it. Under the new section, the CSC has discretion to punish minor violations with minimum 90-day suspensions instead of outright dismissal. But the Commission, in such cases, must agree unanimously to the lesser penalty.

HR 9023 passed both the House and Senate on voice votes. The House acted July 27 and the Senate Aug. 9.

HR 9023 was the second such bill passed by the 81st Congress. The first measure, HR 1243, had much broader provisions and was vetoed by the President on June 30, 1950. No attempt was made to override the veto; instead HR 9023 was introduced at once, carrying only those provisions said he approved.

Provisions

As enacted, the legislation also:

Required the CSC to transmit annually to Congress the names of all persons against whom action was undertaken under the Hatch Act, with a statement of facts in the case, and the penalty imposed.

Authorized the CSC to reopen and reconsider all cases of removal under the Act and permit a change of penalty if the violation involved would not have warranted removal under the amended version of the Act.

Made the distribution by mail of anonymous campaign literature a crime punishable by a year in jail or a $1,000 fine or both.

HOUSE

The original measure was introduced in February, 1949, at the beginning of the first session, by Rep. Hugh B. Mitchell (D Wash.). It provided essentially the same thing as the finally-enacted HR 9023 — simply an authorization for the CSC to punish offenders with a penalty short of firing and permission for old cases, where the offender was fired, to be reopened under the amended version of the Act. The measure was approved by voice vote Feb. 9, 1949, and sent to the Senate. (CQ Almanac, Vol. V, P. 593)

SENATE

Committee

The Senate Rules and Administration Committee approved HR 1243 June 2, 1949, with amendments, providing 1. that punishment under the Act could not be less than 15 days suspension without pay, and providing 2. that federal employes living in Washington, D. C., and its Virginia and Maryland suburbs, or in towns made up mostly of government employes (such as Oak Ridge, Tenn.) might participate fully in local politics and run for office without restrictions. (The Act originally permitted participation by federal-employe residents of these areas in local politics but the CSC interpreted this to mean such participation might be on an independent, nonpartisan basis only.)

Debate

Action on the amended bill in the upper chamber came shortly after the second session of the 81st Congress opened. On Jan. 19, 1950, the Senate took up the legislation and ultimately passed it on voice vote after several amendments had been offered from the floor and all agreed to. In addition, the Committee amendments also won acceptance.

The bill was opposed on the floor by Robert A. Taft (R Ohio) who said it was a Democratic move to kill the Hatch Act. The short suspension provided for minor violations he said, "is just a slap on the wrist and would absolutely nullify the Hatch Act". Answering Taft, Sen. Warren G. Magnuson (D Wash.) recited instances of past firings for minor violations. He insisted "there should be some flexibility in this matter".

AMENDMENTS AGREED TO

Among amendments added on the Senate floor was one, designed to meet Republican objections to the bill, that raised the minimum suspension period from 15 to 60 days. This amendment, sponsored by Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.) was adopted by voice vote.

Guy Cordon (R Ore.) — Provide that violation must not be willful if minimum penalty is to apply and require, in addition, that the Civil Service Commission must report to Congress monthly on all action on violations. Voice vote.

Joseph R. McCarthy (R Wis.)— Provide penalty for persons sending campaign material through the mails anonymously. Division vote.

CONFERENCE

The House - Senate conference labored more than three months in reconciling the differing versions of the bill. Conferees were Reps. Burr P. Harrison (D Va.), Chase Going Woodhouse (D Conn.) and Karl M. LeCompte (R Iowa) and Sens. John C. Stennis (D. Miss.), Guy M. Gillette (D Iowa) and Andrew F. Schoeppel (R Kan.). Finally they produced a compromise report May 4. Its provisions:

1. Granted authority for the Civil Service Commission by unanimous vote to impose a lesser penalty than dismissal for violation of the Hatch Act, provided the penalty were not less than 30 days suspension without pay. The Senate requirement that the violation must not be willful was eliminated.

2. Required the CSC to prepare for the President, for transmission to Congress, an annual report on cases where the Hatch Act penalty was less than dismissal, and authorized either chamber to call for the testimony submitted in any case.

3. Authorized the CSC to continue to decide whether or not federal employes in the vicinity of the national capital might participate in local politics, but if it so decided, participation might be on a partisan as well as nonpartisan basis.

4. Publication and distribution of anonymous campaign literature would be made a criminal offense, punishable by a fine of $1,000 and one year in jail, or both.

HOUSE ADOPTS REPORT

The House adopted the conference report on HR 1243 late May 4 by a roll-call vote of 203 to 140. In the House debate, most arguments revolved around the Maryland - Virginia provisions.

Rep. Harrison led the fight for approval of the conference report. He said that the bill was aimed particularly at letting federal employes in Virginia and Maryland participate in partisan politics on the local and county level.

The Virginian pointed out that the original law provided political activity by such persons only on a nonpartisan basis. But "it only bears the name nonpartisan", he said.

Republican Minority Leader Joseph W. Martin (R Mass.) attacked the measure on the ground that it "practically puts the (Hatch) Act out the window". It leaves to the Civil Service Commission, he declared, "complete control of the political parties of the areas adjacent to Washington".

Rep. Lansdale G. Sasscer (D Md.) told the House that in some areas of Maryland and Virginia as many as 96 per cent of the population works for the federal government and that "they should have the right to participate in politics on the local level".

But on the other hand, Rep. Herman P. Eberharter (D Pa.) criticized the bill as "special legislation" which applied to federal employes of the Virginia - Maryland area but not to the federal employes who worked and lived "in my Congressional district" or the Congressional districts of most of the other members of the House.

When the bill was first put to a vote, Eberharter demanded a division, or standing, vote that showed a one-man margin for the bill. The vote was 57 to 56. This was questioned as not showing a House quorum and a roll-call automatically followed.

SENATE ADOPTS REPORT

In the Senate, the conference report was adopted June 21 on a roll-call of 42 to 32. Voting was along party lines, with the Democrats solidly in favor of the bill.

Only two Republicans, Sens. William F. Knowland (Calif.) and Andrew F. Schoeppel (Kan.) voted for it. Sen. Kenneth McKellar (D Tenn.), who previously indicated he opposed the measure, did not vote.

Robert A. Taft (R Ohio), who led the attack on the bill when it previously had passed the Senate, also led the fight against the conference report, John C. Stennis (D Miss.) was manager for the report.

Taft contended the measure would "emasculate" the Hatch Act. He declared the CSC "can find that in no case does the offense warrant removal" of the offender from office. Further, he argued, the political party to which a suspended offender belonged could take care of him or her during the 30-day suspension. Adoption of the report, he declared, will mean "there no longer is a Hatch Act".

For the compromise, Stennis argued it is "designed simply to vest the members of the Civil Service Commission with some discretion repecting the penalty in minor cases". A. Willis Robertson (D Va.) countered Taft's attack with the assertion that "none can escape proper punishment" under terms of the conference measure. He pointed out it would take a unanimous vote of the CSC to impose a suspension, rather than outright dismissal, in the case of any offense. Harry Flood Byrd (D Va.) joined with Brien McMahon (D Conn.) in arguing for adoption of the report on the ground it placed the offense and punishment for it "somewhat in accord with common sense".

VETO

On June 30, President returned HR 1243 to Capitol Hill, without his approval.

The President said in his veto message he was in accord with all but two provisions of the bill. Those objectionable, he said, were:

1. The provision "extending additional privileges to federal workers in certain areas" by permitting them to engage in partisan politics on a local level.

2. And the provision giving "statutory right to Congressional committees to obtain records containing testimony or other evidence relevant to charges and allegations of violations of the Hatch Act".

As for the first, the President said he would endorse a move to permit federal employes to participate "completely and actively" in selection of local officials, but, he added, "there is no valid reason" to confine the extension to Maryland and Virginia and to areas where federal employes predominate in the population.

The second objectionable provision, he said, encroached on "the long recognized prerogative of the Chief Executive to maintain in confidence those papers and documents" which he declines to disclose, in the public interest.

No effort was made in Congress to override the veto.

FINAL ACTION

To meet the President's objections, House Majority Leader John W. McCormack (D Mass.) immediately introduced — on June 30 — HR 9023, which embodied provisions of HR 1243 the President had said he liked. Those that provoked the veto were omitted. Thus, the bill 1. modified penalties for minor infractions of the Hatch Act and 2. required an annual report to Congress on the cases of these minor offenders. However, the provision of HR 1243 prohibiting the mailing of anonymous campaign literature was also omitted.

The bill was passed by the House late July 27 by voice vote.

On Aug. 9, the Senate gave voice approval to HR 9023, after it had gone through a brief parliamentary procedure of substituting the contents of its own slightly differing measure (S 3873) for that of the House bill. This had the effect of adding to HR 9023 the stipulation that no suspension under terms of the bill could be for less than 90 days, and the provision from HR 1243 banning anonymous campaign literature.

The House agreed to the Senate amendments Aug. 10 without objection.

LAW ENACTED

The President signed the measure Aug. 25 and it became Public Law 732.

Navajo-Hopi Indian Aid

S 2734 - P.L. 474

SUMMARY

On its second try, the 81st Congress passed a bill authorizing an economic rehabilitation program for the Navajo and Hopi Indian tribes in the Southwest. The program, to run for ten years, has as principal objective improvement in the schools, roads, reservations and irrigation projects of the 94,000 Indians affected. A total of $88,570,000 was authorized to be appropriated for the program over the course of the ten years.

Congress enacted a similar bill (S 1407) at its first session, but encountered a Presidential veto because the bill would have substituted state laws for tribal laws. After the veto, the Senate drew up S 2734, substantially the same bill but lacking the provision drawing White House disapproval. The upper chamber passed this substitute measure just before adjournment; the House never did act upon S 2734 in 1949.

At the second session, however, the House approved the Senate-passed measure, but changed it slightly, sending the bill to conference. It emerged April 5, the House passed the conference report by voice vote, and the Senate followed suit April 10, sending the bill to President Truman, who signed it April 19.

Funds to get the program under way were voted in the omnibus appropriation bill. (See page 113).

Provisions

1. Authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to undertake a ten-year rehabilitation program starting July 1, 1950, for some 90,000 Navajo and 4,000 Hopi Indians on U. S. reservations. Funds for the program are to be appropriated during the decade span. A ceiling of $88,570,000 was set, and roughly broken down as follows:

Soil and water conservation, $10 million; irrigation works, $9 million; survey of resources, $500,000; development of industrial enterprises, $1 million; off-reservation employment, $3.5 million; resettlement of Indians on the Colorado River (Ariz.) reservation, $5,750,000; roads, $20 million; communications systems, $250,000; water supplies, $2.5 million; revolving loan fund, $5 million; medical and hospital services and equipment, $4,750,000; schools, $25 million; housing, $820,000; and service facilities, $500,000.

2. Provides that the federal government shall bear about 80 per cent of the burden in paying Social Security benefits to Navajos and Hopis on their reservations.

3. Gives employment preference on projects under the program to Navajo and Hopi Indians.

4. Authorizes the Secretary of Interior to make loans to Navajos and Hopis for "productive purposes".

5. Permits Indians to lease lands owned by the tribe or its members for 25 years, with option of renewal for another 25 years.

6. Authorizes a tribal constitution for the Navajos.

7. Makes available for purposes designated by the Tribal Council tribal funds now on deposit or hereafter deposited.

8. Instructs the Secretary to consider recommendations of the tribal councils in administering the bill.

BACKGROUND

An almost identical bill (S 1407) was passed by Congress at its first session. (See CQ Almanac, Vol. V, p. 602.) But President Truman "with reluctance" vetoed the measure. He said the reason was particularly a section extending state civil and criminal laws and court jurisdiction over the tribal jurisprudence. Truman said such a substitution of state and federal laws for Indian laws might possibly injure the Indians' rights to inherit personal property such as cattle, sheep, tools and utensils.

"The descent of this property upon death is a matter which is now governed by their tribal practices and customs . . . Section 9 might be construed as abrogating these practices and customs . . . and imposing upon these Indians a system governing the descent and distribution of personal property which they neither want nor understand," he said. Similarly, Indian water rights might seem to be transferred by the bill from federal jurisdiction to state courts "where there is much less assurance of protection for Indian rights," he declared.

Truman's second major objection was to a contradiction between sections 6 and 9. Section 6 would grant to the Navajos the right to adopt a tribal constitution which "shall authorize the fullest possible participation of the Navajos in the administration of their affairs," a provision which the President termed "one of the most liberal self-government clauses ever written for an Indian tribe." He declared that it would be inconsistent to enact both section 9 and 6 because "if either is to be accepted as meaning what it says, the other must be viewed as mainly rhetoric."

Following the veto the Senate passed an amended version (S 2734) on Oct. 18. Features criticized by the President were dropped. Passage was blocked in the House on Oct. 19, however, when Robert W. Kean (R N. J.) objected to a unamimous consent agreement to take it up.

HOUSE

The House Public Lands Committee reported the Senate-passed measure Jan. 16.

House debate on Feb. 21 was opened by Reps. J. Hardin Peterson (D Fla.) and Toby Morris (D Okla.), both favoring the bill. Rep. Wesley A. D'Ewart (R Mont.) spoke in support of it, but then offered the amendment which would have restored some of the provisions transferring Indians from tribal to state laws that brought the Presidential veto in 1949.

Opposing the D'Ewart motion, Peterson said "There is a lot of merit in the amendment . . . but I am sure it would run into a veto." A similar point was made by Morris, who was joined in opposition to the amendment by Rep. Antonio M. Fernandez (D N. M.).

When a division vote on the D'Ewart move was taken, the amendment apparently passed, 27-23. Peterson asked for tellers, with a confirming vote of 35-28.

Several minor amendments changing certain language in the bill were approved, and the Committee of the Whole which had been considering S 2734 arose to lay the measure before the House proper for final action.

At this point, however, Fernandez secured both a quorum and a separate roll-call vote on the D'Ewart amendment. It was rejected 143-196. (Vote p. 552.)

The rest of the bill was then passed by voice vote.

AMENDMENTS AGREED TO

John P. Saylor (R Pa.) — Minor changes in the wording of the bill. Voice vote.

J. Hardin Peterson (D Fla.) — Two minor changes in the wording of the bill. Voice vote.

AMENDMENT REJECTED

Wesley A. D'Ewart (R Mont.) — Subject Indians to state laws instead of tribal laws on matters of school attendance, malfeasance or misfeasance in public or tribal office, embezzlement or misappropriation of funds, regulation of automotive traffic, marriage and divorce and elections. Roll-call vote, 143-178.

CONFERENCE

The measure went to conference, where Senators and Representatives cleared up the principal difference between their respective bills: the extent to which the federal government should assume Social Security payments for the Indians. The figure was ultimately set at 80 per cent, figured according to House methods.

In short order, the conference report was approved by the lower chamber on voice vote April 6, and the Senate passed it unanimously and without debate April 10.

LAW ENACTED

President Truman signed the measure into law on April 19, saying: "The passage of this Act is an important milestone in our Government's administration of Indian affairs. It represents a carefully developed plan for dealing with the unsolved economic problems which have delayed the social advancement of this large segment of our Indian citizens. For these Indian groups it also represents a significant forward step in self-government — a principle to which the American people are deeply devoted. The enactment of this bill in its present form is a source of much gratification to me."

After tracing the history of the measure's vetoed predecessor, Truman said: "The present bill . . . will help the Indians achieve greater economic stability, will provide better educational opportunities, and will lead to the improvement of their health." He called the provision giving the Navajo Tribal Council greater control over tribal funds "helpful" and noted the program "also authorizes the Navajo Indians to adopt a Constitution, which would enable them to exercise broad powers in the management of their own affairs."

Truman Urges More Funds

Truman assured the Council "of my continued interest in their efforts toward economic and social advancement. I particularly invite their attention to Section 8 of the bill which states the intention of the Congress that the Tribal Councils and the Indian communities affected by this program shall be kept informed and shall be consulted as the program develops. I also wish to assure the members of both the Hopi and the Navajo tribes that their religion and social customs will be fully respected in accordance with this Nation's long-established laws and traditions."

Truman said the bill "has been too long delayed. It is my sincere hope that the Congress will promptly appropriate the full amount requested in my 1951 budget to initiate this program." Truman had asked $12 million in cash for the first year of the program, and $6 million in contract authorizations to put the plan into operation.

Electoral College Amendment

SJ Res 2

SUMMARY

Northern Democrats joined in an unusual party split with Republicans in the House to kill a proposed constitutional amendment which would have eliminated the present electoral college system of naming Presidents and Vice Presidents. The House vote came on July 17, nearly six months after the Senate had approved the measure by a margin of three votes over the needed two-thirds majority, 64 to 27. The House roll call was 134-210.

The proposed constitutional amendment would have changed the system of electing the nation's two top officials by having all presidential candidates share the electoral vote of each state proportionately to the number of popular votes they received. The candidate receiving the most electoral votes, providing he got more than 40 per cent of them, would be elected. If none of the candidates received 40 per cent of the electoral votes, the House and Senate jointly would elect a President and Vice President from among the two top men for each office.

Under the present system a candidate receiving a bare majority of the vote in each state receives that state's full electoral vote, the total of its two Senators and members of the House. Under the present system it is possible for a President to win election without actually winning the majority of the popular vote.

(CQ Almanac Vol. V., p. 592 for background).

SENATE

Committee

In the early days of the first session of the 81st Congress Sen. Henry Cabot Lodge (R Mass.) introduced the joint resolution. It was sponsored by 10 other Senators.

The Senate Judiciary Committe approved the bill 6-2 June 30, 1949. (See CQ Almanac Vol. V, p. 592 for listing of 10 other sponsors and for detail on Committee report).

The measure then lay inactive until the second session.

Debate

SJ Res. 2 was passed by the Senate Feb. 1 after several amendments were rejected, and one, by Scott W. Lucas (D Ill.) was agreed to. The Lucas amendment provided that Congress should choose the President if no candidate polled more than 40 per cent of the total electoral votes.

Rejected were amendments by William Langer (R N.D.) and Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) providing for even more direct election of Presidents. They would abolish electoral votes and give the nod to the candidate receiving the largest popular vote. Langer also went a step farther and called for direct, nation-wide presidential primaries. The Langer amendment was rejected 31-60 on roll call; the Humphrey amendment was voted down 28-63 on roll call.

Lodge Gives Reasons

In support of his bill, Lodge told the Senate:

1. "The amendment would make practically impossible a situation in which a candidate having a majority of the popular vote would fail to receive a majority of the electoral votes."

2. A splinter party would not be able to control the whole vote of a state by swinging its balance of power from one major party to the other.

3. The resolution "gives a very practical and workable approximation of a mathematical reflection of the popular vote."

4. It obviates the chance of a "free-wheeling" elector opposing the popular will.

Ferguson, Taft Opposed

Most opposition to the proposed amendment came from Homer Ferguson (R Mich.) and Robert A. Taft (R Ohio). Ferguson urged that the electoral vote by state blocs be retained, but wanted the combined House and Senate to pick the President if no candidate received a majority of the electoral votes. His amendment to that effect was rejected on roll call 20-71.

Ferguson opposed the Lodge bill because:

1. "Dividing up a state's electoral votes among all candidates would result in multiple parties."

2. "Multiple parties at the presidential level would soon build up slates at the Congressional level."

3. "Under the resolution, states would lose immediately their control over their electoral vote."

4. "Eventually all presidential elections would be federalized."

5. "The plurality provision will result in more, not less, minority presidents."

One Party States

Taft said he would support direct popular vote for President, but opposed the Lodge bill because "it would give a tremendously disproportionate weight to one-party states." He said that a state in the solid south would swing almost all its electoral votes to the Democrats; while in Ohio, for instance, close elections would mean that most Ohio votes cancelled each other. Lodge answered that under the present system no minority vote counted, but would count along with other votes in other states under his proposed system.

AMENDMENTS AGREED TO

Scott W. Lucas (D Ill.) — Provide that if no candidate has at least 40 per cent of the total electoral votes, the House and Senate combined shall choose the President from the two candidates having the most electoral votes. Voice vote.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

William Langer (R N.D.)—Substitute amendment abolishing electoral votes and providing for direct popular vote for President and direct primaries. Roll call 31-60.

Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.)—Substitute amendment providing for direct election of President. Roll Call 28-63.

Karl Mundt (R S. D.) — Provide that only two highest candidates in each state shall share the state's electoral votes. Roll call 23-67.

Homer Ferguson (R Mich.) — Count electoral votes by state "blocs"; if no person has majority of all electoral votes, combined House and Senate shall name President from two persons having highest number of electoral votes. Roll call 20-71.

HOUSE

Committee

On July 21, 1949, the House Judiciary Committee approved a similar Joint Resolution (HJ Res 2) by Ed Gossett (D Tex.). (CQ Almanac Vol. V, p 592).

However, the bill became stymied in the House Rules Committee, where Chairman Al Sabath (D Ill.) announced March 9, 1950, it would stay.

Sabath said the Committee had voted to refuse to report it out. An unofficial CQ Poll indicated the vote was 4-7 on reporting out the bill.

Debate

Four more months went by, with no action on the measure. Then, on July 17, 1950, Gossett moved to get the bill on the floor. He made a motion to suspend the rules and bring out the House resolution.

House debate on the measure was led by Gossett and Clifford P. Case (R N.J.). The latter sparked the attack on the bill.

Gossett charged that the present system is "an open invitation to fraud and chicanery." In addition, he said, the electoral college system confines presidential campaigning to five or six principal states which have large electoral votes, and "greatly restricts the field of presidential possibilities."

Case Critical

Case said that "disastrous results" would come of changing the electoral college system. He listed among the consequences of such a change the threat of splinter parties and the undermining of the two-party system. In addition, he said, the change would "reduce the Republican party to impotence; change the Democratic party entirely and deliver it into the control of the conservative southern wing of the party."

Chauncey W. Reed (R Ill.) joined Gossett in attacking the present system of choosing the President. He said the present system is "archaic, unjust and inadequate."

Martin Opposed

Joseph W. Martin Jr. (R Mass.) also attacked the proposed changes in the electoral party system. He said the change which would ensue would go a long ways to destroying the two-party system and allow the Continental system of multiple party control to take hold in the United States.

Final Action

Gossett's motion to suspend the rule and bring up the resolution required a two-thirds vote, and he failed to get it. On a roll call the House voted 134-210 against bringing the bill to the floor, and the constitutional change died for the session.

Coalition Vote

A combination of Northern Democrats and Republicans killed the measure in the House. Eighty-seven Democrats and 47 Republicans voted to bring the bill out of the Rules Committee. However, 116 Democrats, mostly from the North, were joined by 93 Republicans on the winning side.

Internal Security Act

HR 9490—P. L. 831

SUMMARY

The House version of the "Internal Security Act of 1950" was introduced in the House in August, 1950, as a rewrite of Rep. Richard M. Nixon's (R Calif.) original bill requiring Communists and Communist-front organizations to register with the Attorney General, and Rep. John Wood's (D Ga.) bill barring Communists from government and defense jobs. It was passed 354-20 on roll-call vote Aug. 29.

The Senate passed Judiciary Committee Chairman Pat McCarran's (D Nev.) version of the bill, which was a combination of five internal security bills. Approval of the McCarran bill came Sept. 1 on roll-call vote 70-7. The final conference compromise contained all principal provisions of both the House and Senate bills. It was approved by the Senate 51-7 Sept. 20 and by the House 313-20 the same day.

The President vetoed the measure Sept. 22. It was passed over his veto Sept. 22, 286-48 in the House and 57-10 in the Senate, thus becoming Public Law No. 831. (All roll-call votes pp. 543,544.)

PROVISIONS

These are the principal provisions of Public Law 831.

TITLE I —
"Subversive Activities Control Act of 1950"

Nothing in this Act shall authorize censorship or infringe upon freedom of the press or of speech.

Evidence before Congress shows that Communism is a "world-wide revolutionary movement whose purpose is . . . to establish a Communist totalitarian dictatorship . . . throughout the world."

A "Communist — action organization" is one which is substantially controlled by the world Communist movement.

A "Communist-front organization" is one which is substantially controlled by a Communist-action organization, and is primarily operated to aid the "action" organization.

A "Communist organization", as used in the bill, can be either a front or action group.

Registration Required

Officers of Communist organizations must register with the Attorney General.

All members of an action group must register.

Registration must be completed by Oct. 23, 1950, (30 days after enactment of the bill) or within thirty days after an organization has been ordered to register or within 30 days after an organization becomes an action or front group.

Membership lists must include the name, aliases and address of every person who has been a member of an action group or officer of a front group during the year prior to registration.

Registration must include source organization's funds and must be updated each year.

Accurate accounts and records must be kept by Communist organizations.

The Attorney General shall notify each person listed.

A listed person denying membership shall be investigated to determine if he should be kept on the list.

Members not included on the list must register themselves.

Registration lists must be open to the public and registered groups must be listed in the Federal Register.

Control Board Set Up

A five-man bipartisan Subversive Activities Control Board shall be set up, members to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate to serve for staggered three-year terms at a salary of $12,500.

The Board shall, upon application by the Attorney General, determine whether any organization is an action or front group.

The Attorney General must give the Board a "statement of facts" upon which he bases his application.

The Board shall subpoena witnesses and hold a hearing on the matter, the hearing to be public, and each party involved may be represented by counsel, offer evidence and conduct cross-examinations.

Any lawyer guilty of misbehavior which obstructs the hearing, shall be ejected.

Determination of "Action Group"

In determining whether an organization is an action group, "the Board shall take into consideration" the extent to which:

1. its policies are directed by the world Communist movement;

2. its views do not deviate from those of the world Communist movement;

3. it is financially aided by the world Communist movement;

4. it sends members to any foreign country for training in world Communism;

5. it reports to such foreign governments;

6. its leaders are subject to the disciplinary power of world Communism;

7. its operations are secret; and

8. its leaders subordinate allegiance to the United States to allegiance to world Communism.

Determination of "Front Group"

In determining whether any organization is a front organization, "the Board shall take into consideration" the extent to which:

1. it is directed by an action group;

2. it is financially supported by an action group;

3. it is used to further the objectives of an action organization;

4. its policies do not deviate from those of an action group.

A person or group ordered to register may appeal the Board's ruling to the Washington, D. C., Federal Court of Appeals and then to the Supreme Court.

Penalties Provided

Failure of an organization to register may be punished by $10,000 fine; failure of a person to register may be punished by a $10,000 fine and/or five years imprisonment.

Each day of failure to register may constitute a separate offense.

A false statement may be punished by $10,000 fine and/or five years imprisonment.

Defense Jobs, Mailing Specifications

Members of Communist organizations which have been ordered to register may not seek or hold any non-elective office or job with the federal government.

Members of action groups which have been ordered to register may not hold defense jobs.

A list of defense facilities shall be published by the Secretary of Defense.

No employee of the United States or of a defense facility may contribute to Communist organizations.

Members of Communist organizations may not hold or use passports.

Publications of Communist organizations sent through the mail must bear on the envelope the announcement, "Disseminated by . . . . . a Communist organization."

Broadcasts on radio or television by Communist organizations must be preceded by the announcement, "The following program is sponsored by . . . ., a Communist organization."

Certain income-tax deductions will not be allowed Communist organizations or be applied to funds given to a Communist organization.

Security Provisions

It shall be unlawful for any person knowingly to conspire with any other person to perform any act which would substantially contribute to establishment of a totalitarian dictatorship in the United States; provided that this shall not apply to the proposal of a Constitutional amendment.

It shall be unlawful for any government employee to give to a Communist-group member any information affecting the security of the United States.

It shall be unlawful for a member of a Communist group to receive such information.

Holding office or membership in any Communist organization shall not in itself constitute a violation of any criminal statute; and registration under this Act shall not be used in evidence against a person in prosecution for any alleged violation of any criminal law.

Penalty for peace-time espionage increased to $10,000 fine and/or 10-year imprisonment.

Definition of espionage is extended.

Statute of limitations for espionage extended to 10 years.

Any person trained in espionage or sabotage (except during service for the United States) shall register with the Attorney General.

Penalty for violation of security regulations at defense installations set at $5,000 and/or one year in jail.

Section On Aliens

Any aliens shall be excluded from admission to the United States who would engage in activities prejudicial to the public interest; who are anarchists; who are members of a Communist organization; who are members of any totalitarian party; who advocate world communism or totalitarianism; who advocate or teach unconstitutional overthrow of the government of the United States; who write or publish material advocating unconstitutional overthrow of the government of the United States; who are affiliated with any organization that writes or distributes material advocating unconstitutional overthrow of the government; or who would likely engage in espionage or sabotage.

Any alien in the United States who falls into any of the above classes shall be held and deported.

Top diplomatic officials are exempt from the ruling.

Any country which refused to accept a returned alien shall be barred from sending any immigrants to the U. S.

An alien may be deported to any country which has ever had anything to do with the alien, preference of country to be governed by a list of priorities.

No person falling into any of the above classes shall become a naturalized citizen.

If a person naturalized after Jan. 1, 1950, shall in the following five years engage in any of the classes of activities listed above, his citizenship shall be revoked.

Picketing Banned.

Picketing of federal courts or the homes of federal judges, jurors, witnesses or court officers shall result in a $5,000 fine and/or one year imprisonment.

TITLE II — "Emergency Detention Act of 1950"

Any person who probably will commit espionage or sabotage may be detained if the President has declared the existence of an "internal security emergency."

The emergency may be declared in case of invasion, declaration of war or insurrection with the United States in aid of a foreign enemy.

The emergency may be terminated by the President or Congress.

Detention of a person may be terminated when the emergency is ended, when the Attorney General orders it, when the Board of Detention Review orders it or upon a writ of habeas corpus.

The Attorney General must issue a warrant for any person detained.

Detention may be at any place, but not in contact with criminals or under conditions of forced labor.

Each person detained shall be given a preliminary hearing before an officer appointed under the act.

At the hearing, the person must be told the grounds for his detention, be offered counsel and be cautioned that any statement he may choose to make may be used against him.

The person may cross-examine witnesses, introduce evidence.

The Attorney General may decline to furnish information which would reveal the identity of special agents.

The hearing officer may order the person held or released.

Appeals, Review

The person may appeal to a Detention Review Board, a nine - man bipartisan board appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate for staggered terms of three years each at a salary of $12,500 a year.

The Board may review the case, taking into consideration the existence of reasonable ground for detention, including evidence that the person has been trained in espionage or sabotage, has committed espionage or sabotage in the past or is a member of the Communist Party or any group seeking the unconstitutional overthrow of the government.

The person detained shall have all the privileges at the Board hearings that he had at the preliminary hearing.

An order of the Board may be appealed by the person detained to any federal court of appeals and to the Supreme Court.

Evasion of detention may be punished by $10,000 fine and/or ten years imprisonment.

The 1948 Democratic Party platform said:

"We condemn communism and other forms of totalitarianism and their destructive activity overseas and at home. We shall continue to build firm defenses against communism by strengthening the economic and social structure of our own democracy. We reiterate our pledge to expose and prosecute treasonable activities of anti - democratic and un - American organizations which would sap our strength, paralyze our will to defend ourselves and destroy our unity, inciting race against race, class against class and the people against free institutions.

"We shall continue vigorously to enforce the laws against subversive activities, observing at all times the constitutional guarantees which protect free speech, the free press and honest political activity. We shall strengthen our laws against subversion to the full extent necessary, protecting at all times our traditional individual freedoms."

The Republican Party platform in 1948 said:

"We pledge a vigorous enforcement of existing laws against Communists and enactment of such new legislation as may be necessary to expose the treasonable activities of Communists and defeat their objective of establishing here a Godless dictatorship controlled from abroad."

BACKGROUND

The principal section of HR 9490, the registration provisions, stemmed from the so-called Mundt-Nixon bill which passed the House in 1948, but did not see floor debate in the Senate (CQ Almanac Vol. IV, p. 276). The legislation was sponsored by the then - Representatives Richard M. Nixon (R Calif.) and Karl Mundt (R S.D.).

In 1949 Nixon introduced a revised version of the bill into the House, and Mundt and Homer Ferguson (R Mich.) did the same in the Senate. The bills were virtually identical. (See CQ Almanac, Vol. V, pages 598-9.)

The Judiciary Committees of both houses held hearings on the bills. The House reported out a substitute by Chairman Wood, but the Senate Committee approved a combined Mundt-Ferguson bill March 4, 9-1. William Langer (R N.D.) opposed it. Olin D. Johnston (D S.C.) became a co-sponsor of the new measure.

Committee member Harley M. Kilgore (D W.Va.) voted to report the bill; but said he could not support it as it stood. He said: "It is fundamentally a sedition bill, and, in the hands of a prejudiced prosecutor or national administration, can be used against organized labor and in fact against other organizations, whether churches, farm, business, or any of the multitude of legitimate American organizations against which a hostile prosecutor or administration might want to use it."

Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.) expressed his doubts as to the bill's constitutionality, but agreed to send it to the floor.

Langer said the bill sought "to regiment the thinking of the American people and to impair and prevent the free exercise of constitutionally guaranteed freedom of speech and association."

Homer Ferguson (R Mich.) said the new bill changed features which proved objectionable in the 80th Congress. An amendment, he said, specified that mere membership in any Communist organization shall not constitute a violation of the conspiracy provisions. Conspiracy would have to be proven by the acts of individuals, he said.

Threatened As Rider

Republican supporters of the Mundt-Ferguson-Johnson bill charged frequently that the Administration would bury it without a vote, and they made several threats to attach the measure to other bills. On June 30, when only four Senators were on the floor, Mundt moved to call up the bill. Majority Leader Scott W. Lucas (D Ill.) immediately adjourned the Senate and accused Mundt of playing politics with the bill.

Pressure for an anti-Communist bill became stronger as the North Koreans scored their early victories. Chairman Pat McCarran (D Nev.) of the Senate Judiciary Committee took the initiative Aug. 10 and introduced his omnibus bill which contained all major provisions of the M-F-J bill plus four other immigration and anti-espionage bills.

Mundt said the McCarran measure took over the M-F-J measure "lock, stock and barrel."

President's Suggested Alternative

The McCarran bill was not backed by the Administration. Instead, an Administration bill (S 4061) was introduced Aug. 17 at the President's request by Warren Magnuson (D Wash.), Harley M. Kilgore (D W.Va.), Frank P. Graham (D N.C.), Scott W. Lucas (D Ill.), Francis Myers (D Pa.), Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.), Theodore Francis Green (D R.I.), Paul Douglas (D Ill.), Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) and Herbert H. Lehman (D N.Y.).

A similar bill was introduced in the House Aug. 16 by Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.), chairman of the House Judiciary Committee.

The companion Administration measures followed suggestions made by the President in a message to Congress Aug. 8. The bill reaffirmed the intent of Congress as embodied in existing anti-espionage, anti-Red and immigration laws and provided for strengthening of espionage and sabotage laws and extension of the powers of the Attorney General to deal with deportable aliens.

Celler said his bill "protects us against subversives and criminal aliens with all the necessary administrative and judicial safeguards, but at the same time provides for orderly and constitutional process."

HOUSE

Hearings

The House Un-American Activities Committee opened hearings March 21 on HR 7595, Richard M. Nixon's (R Calif.) revised Communist-registration bill, and HR 3903, by Chairman John S. Wood, (D Ga.), which would bar Communists or members of "subversive" organizations from federal jobs and jobs with national defense contractors. Eleven days of testimony were heard.

Peyton Ford, assistant to the Attorney General, asked the Committee March 21 to be cautious in any decisions on the bills. He said that the then-pending court appeals from the New York Communists' trial could result in rulings on Constitutional matters affecting the bills.

Dr. Emerson P. Schmidt, U. S. Chamber of Commerce, told the Committee March 21 that the bills would help "expose the true nature of the Communist policy and programs in action." He suggested they be expanded to include "fascists", Nazis or other agents of foreign powers engaged in similar activities.

Omar B. Ketchum, Veterans of Foreign Wars, asked the Committee to outlaw the Communist Party. He added that the VFW would support the pending bills if a stronger one could not be considered.

Jerry J. O'Connell, National Committee to Defeat the Mundt Bill, said in a statement that the bills carried out "the doctrine of guilt by association" that was "first officially propounded" in the House Un-American Activities Committee. That doctrine, he said, "began the current epidemic of irresponsible charges of disloyalty against wide sections of the American people".

Arthur Garfield Hays, American Civil Liberties Union, said that "Communism and all its works were never at a lower ebb in the American mind than they are today" despite the fact there was no law such as HR 7595. The bill, he said, would send Communists "completely underground where it will be more difficult to combat them".

Benjamin C. Sigal, Americans for Democratic Action, said the bill "seriously curtails rights of free speech and thought". It was a "catch-all" bill, he said, that would trap the innocent and drive the guilty underground.

Dangerous Short-cut

The Rev. Clarence Parker, a Chicago Episcopal minister, testified March 29 in opposition to the bill on behalf of the Civil Rights Congress. He said it was "a dangerous short-cut to thought control and a police state". Asked if he knew his organization had been designated as subversive by the Attorney General and the Committee, he replied, "I am aware of that." Asked if he is or ever has been a Communist Party member, he replied "under protest" that "I am not and never have been a member of the Communist Party." He argued the Nixon bill provided "guilt by association".

Spokesmen for the Society of Friends (Quakers) and the American Veterans Committee said March 30 the legislation might hit them, too. They said on some issues, like civil rights and liberties, they take about the same stand as Communists. As a result, they said they might be charged with violations if the anti-Red bill became law. Spokesmen were Michael Straight, National Chairman, and Leonard Nikoloric, an attorney for AVC, and Harrop A. Freeman, a Cornell University professor, representing the Friends Committee on National Legislation.

Thomas E. Harris, Congress of Industrial Organizations, told the Committee that Communists were steadily losing ground and were no longer a peace - time danger. He added, "The situation certainly does not seem to call for new sweeping anti - Communist legislation, which would not only deny civil rights to Communists but would put at hazard the civil rights of everyone else."

Thomas I. Emerson, Progressive Party, said the bills "mark a sharp break with the tradition of freedom of political expression as it has hitherto existed in the United States"

Communist Testifies

A representative of the Communist Party appeared before the Committee May 2 to oppose HR 7595. Simon W. Gerson, New York legislative chairman of the CP, said the bill "is vague, indefinite, destructive of due process, a bill of attainder and in outright violation of Constitutional guarantees of free speech, free thought and free association." Gerson added that the bill would not block Communism — Communists would simply fail to register and report their activities.

Harry C. Lamberton, National Lawyers Guild, also opposed the bill May 2. Lamberton told the Committee the Guild felt the bill was "a dangerous and far - reaching encroachment on the fundamental liberties of the American people. "

Norman Thomas, long-time leader of the Socialist Party, testified May 3. He said the bill would be a "completely useless tool against trained Communist conspirators."

George D. Riley of the American Federation of Labor told the Committee that the Communist Party could not be curbed under the bill without restricting the rights and liberty of free citizens. He said that each individual organization should keep its own membership free of Communists.

James F. Green, American Legion, and Marvin L. Goldberger, American Veterans of World War II, both supported the Nixon bill. Clarence Mitchell, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and Mrs. Alexander Stewart, Women's International League for Peace and Freedom, opposed it.

(For additional views, see page 398.)

Committee

On August 22 Wood introduced HR 9490 which combined HR 3903 and HR 7595. Major provisions were:

1. The Communist Party would be required to register and give the Attorney General a membership list.

2. Organizations designated by a five - man committee as Communist "fronts" would be required to register their officers and provide financial data.

3. Communists and "front" members would be denied passports.

4. Communist and "front" organizations would be required to label their mail and publications.

5. Communists and "front" members would be barred from goverment or defense project jobs.

This new Wood bill was approved unanimously by the Committee Aug. 22. The Committee report said that more than 10 years of investigation by the Committee and its predecessor had established that the Communist movement was foreign - controlled with the objective of overthrowing free American institutions and substituting a foreign-controlled dictatorship. The movement is, the report said, "an immediate and powerful threat to the security of the United States and to the American way of life."

The bill, the report said, would block the subversive activities of the Communist Party while preserving Constitutional rights.

Debate

The House took up the Wood bill Aug. 29. Wood led support for it. He told the House:

"It is difficult for me to conceive how any person can find any real objections to the provisions of this bill, because while your committee makes no claim that it is a cure-all for the evils which confront us in the infiltration of this cancerous growth on the body politic of the American people, it is, we believe, the nearest approach to the question which we could evolve without infringing upon the liberties and the freedom of thought and freedom of speech of the American people."

Rep. Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.), chairman of the Judiciary Committee, led opposition to the bill before submitting his Administration substitute measure. He said:

"The foundation of this bill is that ideas are dangerous — Communist ideas But it has been fundamental in this country ever since the Alien and Sedition Act of 1798 was allowed to lapse in 1800 that unhealthy ideas are best countered by healthy ones and that suppression of ideas is a grave danger to our national interest. Opinions of Communists are vile, odious, but they only threaten national security when their ideas become acts and they engage in sabotage and espionage.

"Then strengthen our laws against sabotage, espionage, spying — protect our internal security as the President suggested."

Substitute Rejected

Celler's substitute bill, which he said was sent from the White House and which provided for strengthening of anti-espionage and sabotage laws, was supported only by Celler from the floor. After brief debate, the substitute was rejected 55-138 on a standing vote and 64-153 on teller vote.

During general debate on the Wood bill, opponents said it would fail to stop Communism, as Communists would merely go underground; that it would be a form of thought control and would be unconstitutional. Supporters said it was a necessary weapon in the anti-Communist fight; that Communism was a foreign-directed conspiracy; that Communist "dupes" were as dangerous as Communists and that the bill did not violate the Constitution. The bill, supporters said, did not make Communism a crime nor outlaw the Communist Party; it was a registration measure.

Charles Bennett (D Fla.) offered an amendment to make it unlawful for any person to collaborate with a Communist organization in working for the peaceful or violent "overthrow, destruction or weakening" of the U. S. Government. It was rejected on a standing vote 21-82.

Final Action

Final vote on the bill was 354-20 on roll call. Seventeen Democrats, two Republicans and one American Laborite opposed the measure. On the original motion to take up the bill, the vote was 357-1 on roll call. Only Vito Marcantonio (ALP N.Y.), who opposed both the Wood and Celler bills, voted no.

Endorsed Provisions

As passed by the House, the bill undertook to:

Prohibit a government employee from giving information affecting security to any agent of a foreign power or member of a Communist organization.

Prohibit a foreign agent or member of a Communist organization from receiving such information.

Ban members of Communist organizations from government employ in non-elective offices.

Prohibit a member of a Communist organization from seeking such a job without revealing his membership.

Prohibit a government employee from giving money or services to a Communist organization.

Prohibit members of Communist organizations from seeking or holding jobs in defense plants.

Prohibit any defense employees from giving money or services to a Communist organization.

Prohibit a member of a Communist organization from applying for a passport or using a passport.

Prohibit any Communist organization from sending through the mails or transmitting in interstate commerce any publication unless it is labeled as coming from a Communist organization.

Deny income-tax exemptions for contributions to a Communist organization.

Deny Communist organizations certain income-tax exemptions ordinarily extended to organizations.

Establish a five-man Subversive Activities Control Board to determine which organizations are "Communist-action" or "Communist-front" groups and review application of the act.

Require both Communist-action and Communist-front organizations to register their officers with the Attorney General.

Require all members of Communist-action groups to register.

Require a member of a Communist-action group to register even though the organization has not registered after being ordered to do so.

Require a member of a Communist-action organization to register if the organization has registered, but failed to include his name.

Require registrations to be made public.

Require annual financial reports from registered organizations.

AMENDMENTS AGREED TO

Anthony Cavalcante (D Pa.) — Provide that a government employee may be tried for violating the official secrets provisions of the act any time within 10 years after he leaves government employ. Voice vote.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Emanuel Celler (D N. Y.) — Substitute Administration bill for Wood measure. Division 55-138 and teller 64-153.

Henry M. Jackson (D Wash.)—Put war-time sabotage, espionage, and sedition laws in effect when the U. S. is fighting for the United Nations First agreed to on voice vote, then rejected along with Cellar substitute

Charles Bennett (D Fla.) — Ban collaboration with any Communist organization in working for the overthrow, destruction or weakening of the government whether or not by force or violence. Division 21-82.

Cavalcante — Ban a defense or government employer from hiring a known member of a Communist organization. Voice.

John F. Shelley (D Calif.) — Strike out section directing the Subversive Board to take into consideration whether an organization has paralleled the Communist line when judging loyalty of the organization. Division 71-130; teller 65-149.

SENATE

Bill

The Senate Judiciary Committee already had approved five bills on internal security matters. On Aug. 10 Chairman Pat McCarran (D Nev.) wrapped these five measures up into one bill and submitted it to the Senate. It became S 4037. The omnibus measure contained all provisions of the following bills:

1. S 2311 — the so - called Mundt-Ferguson-Johnston bill, a companion to the Nixon bill in the House (see Background and House Hearings.)

2. S 1832 — a bill to authorize the Justice Department to bar from immigration or deport a large variety of "subversive" aliens, including lesser diplomatic employees. Extensive hearings were held on the measure. Several former members of "Iron Curtain" nation embassies said that embassy employees had in the past served as espionage agents for Russia. Representatives of the Departments of State and Justice said that any such activities could be blocked without recourse to stringent bans. This bill had actually been approved by the Committee on secret voice vote Aug. 2 and by the Senate Aug. 9 (See P. 422) But the House did not act.

3. HR 10 — a bill to permit the Justice Department to retain in custody deportable aliens who cannot immediately be shipped out. (See P. 403)

4. S 595 — a measure requiring registration of all foreign-trained spies. It was reported by the Committee May 27. Brief hearings were held.

5. S 3069 — a bill to set up a new bureau of passports and visas in the State Department. No hearings were held. The bill was reported Aug. 2 by voice vote.

Committee

The resulting re-write incorporated in McCarran's bill (S 4037) was approved by the Judiciary Committee Aug. 17 without a hearing. Vote was 9-3. The majority report said the bill closely followed the wording of the five bills upon which it was based.

A minority report, signed by Harley M. Kilgore (D W.Va.) , Frank Graham (D N.C.), William Langer (R N.D.), said that the Mundt-Ferguson-Johnston section of the bill was "unconstitutional in some respects, and will be entirely ineffective. . . ." The sections changing espionage statutes, the Foreign Agents Registration Act and the statute of limitations as it affected espionage law violations were endorsed by the minority.

As reported, the principal provisions of the Committee bill, which became known as the McCarran bill, were that:

Communists, aliens and other aliens defined as subversives would be denied admittance to this country, or deported if already here.

Anti-espionage and sabotage laws would be tightened and extended.

Communist and Communist - front organizations would be required to register; members would be denied Federal jobs and passports.

A new passport and visa section would be set up in the State Department.

Powers of the President to guard defense installations would be extended.

Debates

Senate debate opened Sept. 5. The first days were filled with general discussion. McCarran supported his bill, saying:

"The provisions of the bill have been drafted and redrafted with extraordinary care, and have been subjected to the closest scrutiny, not only by the experts who have assisted the various committees, but by some of the ablest lawyers in the nation, to the end that this legislation not only will be designed to cope with the several phases of the Communist conspiracy in the United States, but will be in thorough accord with our constitutional processes and traditions."

McCarran said the Communist Party and its front organizations were a "clear and present danger to this government". He added that members of Communist-country diplomatic missions were a part of the conspiracy against America.

Herbert H. Lehman (D N.Y.) led opposition to the measure, saying the bill "will not only endanger the basic rights of all our citizens, but will in fact, detract from our internal security."

Lehman said the bill was aimed at the thoughts of Communists, not at their subversive actions. "What died-in-the-wool Communist will run to the nearest registration office to list himself as such and expose himself to the penalties contained in the . . . bill . . . and the Smith Act, under which the 11 top Communist leaders were recently convicted?" he asked.

Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) added that it would be easy for Communist officials to register innocent and respectable persons as members of the party. He also said that persons opposing ECA, the North Atlantic Pact aid to Korea and the FEPC could be accused under the bill of following the Communist line and therefore being Communists.

Karl Mundt (R S.D.) Sept. 6 denied that the bill had been so loosely drawn as to victimize non-Communists. He also denied that the registration provision would drive Communists underground. If Communists do not register, he said, "they will be treated just as is any other person who does not obey the law . . . We cannot operate on the theory that we should not pass a law because a criminal is not going voluntarily to deliver himself into the hands of the law."

Substitute Readied

Harley M. Kilgore (D W.Va.) sought support for a substitute he promised to offer which would allow the government to intern Communists in time of national emergency. Under his substitute, when there was "reasonable ground" to believe a person would engage in espionage or sabotage, he could be interned. He could appeal to a review board and to the Court of Appeals.

When debate continued Sept. 7, Styles Bridges (R N.H.) charged that the Farmers Union has been infiltrated by Communists. He said the McCarran bill would prevent Communists from taking over such an organization. Hubert H. Humphrey (D. Minn.) and William Langer (R. N.D.) protested Bridges statement and said that Farmers Union leaders in their states were fine, non-Communist Americans.

The Senate started amending the bill Sept. 11. All roll-call votes on Page 543.)

Karl Mundt (R S.D.) said he was backing the McCarran bill, but offered a group of amendments which he said would make the registration section identical with the M-F-J bill, a measure which the President had said he would veto. Mundt's amendments were adopted on voice vote.

Lucas Asks Substitution

Then Lucas offered to substitute for the registration provision an impending, but not yet formally offered, "concentration camp" plan by Harley M. Kilgore (D W.Va.), which would allow the Attorney General in time of extreme emergency to hold persons likely to commit acts of sabotage, or espionage. Lucas told the Senate:

"The McCarran bill is a futile thing as it stands. On the other hand the Kilgore bill would lay down the rules in advance, with respect to the detention of individuals who would sabotage the country. . .if opportunity were given them to do so. Registration. . .would do nothing other than confuse the public, create a high degree of chaos and give the Communist group a weapon to further their traitorous acts."

Lucas added that the registration plan could be avoided by Communists, that it would lead to years of court action and that undercover FBI agents would be revealed. Homer Ferguson (R. Mich.) protested that the detention plan would "wipe out all the Constitutional provisions in regard to indictment and trial by jury."

The Lucas amendment was voted down 29-45 on roll call Sept. 12.

Then Lucas tried to add the detention plan to the McCarran-M-F-J registration plan. This was rejected 35-37 on roll call. The close vote encouraged Millard Tydings (D. Md.) to ask for reconsideration of the amendment. And while the motion to reconsider lay pending for several hours, Administration forces tried to round up enough Senators to tip the scales in favor of the Kilgore detention plan.

Kilgore Offers His Substitute

While waiting for a new vote, Kilgore offered his plan plus the President's program of stricter sabotage and espionage laws as a substitute for the entire McCarran bill. It was immediately rejected 23-50 on roll call.

Then Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.), representing a small group of Administration supporters, offered a series of amendments which he said would restrict provisions of the McCarran bill which were so broad they could sweep up the innocent with the guilty. Most of his amendments were rejected without a record vote.

Tom Connally (D Tex.) asked the Senate to drop from the bill a section setting up a new, semi-independent passport and visa section in the State Department. He said the matter needed a great deal of study before it could be properly acted on. His amendment was approved 40-33 on roll call.

Then the Senate agreed to take up Tydings' motion to reconsider Lucas' detention proposal. McCarran took the floor and said he would accept the plan provided certain changes were made which, he said, would make it Constitutional. His charges involved use of warrants, open hearings, appeal procedure, habeas corpus, etc.

Lucas said he would accept McCarran's changes. The compromise met with general approval, and the detention plan was added to the bill on voice vote.

Final Action

Final vote on the bill was taken, and it passed 70-7 on roll call. Voting for the measure were 38 Democrats and 32 Republicans. Opposed were seven Democrats — Frank P. Graham (N.C.), Theodore F. Green (R.I.), Edward Leahy (R.I.), Estes Kefauver (Tenn.), James E. Murray (Mont.), Glen Taylor (Idaho), and Herbert H. Lehman (N.Y.).

The number of the House-passed internal security bill (HR 9490), similar to the Senate measure, was substituted for the Senate number (S 4037). The bill was sent back to the House with a request that a joint conference be held to compromise differences in the two versions.

Endorsed Provisions

General provisions of the final bill as passed by the Senate were:

Communist "action" (Party) organizations must register their membership and reveal their financial backers.

Communist "front" organizations must register their officers and reveal their financial backers.

Literature distributed by action or front groups must be labeled as from a Communist source.

Communists are barred from holding federal jobs or from using passports.

Conspiracy to establish a totalitarian government in the U. S. is made illegal.

Government workers are subject to penalties for passing on secret documents to foreign representatives, and the foreign agent involved is equally liable.

"Subversives" aliens are excluded from immigration or are deportable if already here.

The Attorney General may jail deportable aliens for six months and closely supervise them thereafter.

Minor diplomats are subject to the deportation and exclusion laws.

A three - member Subversive Activities Control Board is set up to name action and front groups and check registrations.

Groups recommended by the Attorney General to be included on the action or front list may appeal to the U. S. Court of Appeals.

Anti - espionage and sabotage laws are tightened and extended.

Powers of the President to guard defense installations are extended.

The Attorney General may place in "concentration camps" likely saboteurs or espionage agents after securing a warrant.

Arrests could be made only in time of invasion of the U. S. or its possessions, declaration of war or internal revolution, and after the President or Congress declares a state of "internal security emergency".

Arrested persons could appeal to a bipartisan board, then to a federal appeals court and to the Supreme Court.

The Attorney General must produce evidence against an arrested person in open court.

AMENDMENTS AGREED TO

Allen J. Ellender (D La.) — Make it illegal to picket a Federal court. Voice vote.

Karl Mundt (R S. D.) — Change registration section in minor ways to make it coincide with Mundt-Ferguson-Johnston bill. Voice.

Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.)— Require Attorney General to swear to and produce facts upon which he bases his request for registration of a certain group. Voice.

Ernest W. McFarland (D Ariz.) — Relieve shipping line from responsibility to carry a deported alien if the alien entered the U. S. legallv on that line. Voice.

Scott W. Lucas (D Ill.) — Add "concentration camp" provision to bill. First rejected 35-37 on roll-call, then modified and agreed to on voice vote.

Spessard Holland (D Fla.) — Amend Kilgore substitute to ban picketing of Federal courts. Voice. (Kilgore substitute later rejected.)

Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.) — Specify that ban on conspiracy to set up totalitarian government not apply to the proposal of a constitutional amendment. Voice.

Tom Connally (D Tex.) — Strike out provision setting up semi-independent passport and visa section in the State Department. Roll-call 40-33.

Lister Hill (D Ala.) — Strike out provision that head of projected visa and passport section have not less than 10 years experience in the Foreign Service and have attained Class 1 rank therein. Agreed to on voice vote, then lost when Connally amendment struck that provision from the bill.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Lucas, Francis Myers (D Pa.), Warren G. Magnuson, (D Wash.), Clinton P. Anderson (D N.M.), Brien McMahon (D Conn.), Herbert H. Lehman (D-Lib N. Y.) and William Benton (D Conn.) — Substitute for registration provision, a "stand - by concentration camp" provision for dangerous subversives in time of extreme emergency. Roll-call 29-45 (later added to the bill in changed form. See Lucas amendment above.)

Harley Kilgore (D W. Va.) — Substitute "concentration camp" program for entire bill. Roll-call 23-50.

Kefauver — Strike out section banning conspiracy to set up totalitarian government in U. S. Standing vote.

Kefauver — Provide that the conspiracy above be accompanied by force and violence before it can be banned. Standing vote.

Kefauver — Provide that restrictions on showing secret documents not apply to organizations whose only connection with the government is through stock held by the RFC. Voice.

Kefauver — Provide that representative of foreign government not be subject to penalty for obtaining secret government document unless his intent is to harm the United States. Standing vote.

CONFERENCE

The House voted 324-9 on roll-call Sept. 14 to go to conference with the Senate over differences in their respective versions of HR 9490.

The conference quickly came to an agreement and filed its report Sept. 19. The final compromise bill contained the principal provisions of the House Wood bill and the Senate McCarran bill plus the Kilgore modifications.

Senate Action

The Senate took up the compromise Sept. 20. McCarran said the final conference bill contained all the provisions in principle of both the House and Senate bills. McCarran said further:

"This is a strong bill. . .This is a thorough bill. . .This is a tough bill. . ., but it is a fair bill. . .; it does not contain any provisions which may properly be designated as thought police, it does not provide for guilt by association, it does not violate the constitutional guaranties of civil liberties." He urged support of the measure.

Herbert H. Lehman (D N.Y.) opposed the measure. He said the registration provisions would drive the Communist Party underground and make Communists harder to catch and convict. He added that to prove a person is a Communist, the FBI would have to reveal its secret agents in the CP: That the Communist Party could register the names of innocent persons and that "almost every liberal in America" would be covered by the definition of front members.

Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.) said the bill was too broad and offered a bill of his own (S 4163) which, he said, would rewrite the detention provisions, keep the anti-espionage provisions and drop the registration plan. William Langer (R. N.D.) also spoke against the bill.

Spessard L. Holland (D Fla.) backed the measure, saying the requirement that a front group must be "substantially directed, dominated, or controlled by Communist-action organizations" would save any innocent liberal organization from prosecution. Mundt and Ferguson also spoke for the conference version.

Final approval was 51-7 on roll-call vote.

House Action

The House also took up the conference bill on Sept. 20. John S. Wood (D Ga.), chairman of the Un-American Activities Committee, told the House: "We feel that we have brought to the two bodies the best legislation of which we are capable in order to approach the subject of strengthening the internal security of this Nation and at the same time preserve the Constitutional rights of all of its citizens."

Abraham Multer (D N.Y.) criticized the measure. He said Hubert E. Howard, chairman of the Munitions Board, felt that the section requiring a listing of vital defense facilities would help spies and saboteurs. Multer also said the bill would weaken existing security laws and asserted that burglary and treason cannot be stopped by requiring all burglars and traitors to register.

Charles A. Wolverton (R N.J.) said the bill was necessary to "protect our sovereign rights" and insisted it be approved.

The House approved the bill 313-20 on roll-call vote. It was then sent to the White House. The President declined to promise either a veto or approval during a Sept. 21 press conference, but said he would act just as soon as he had analyzed the measure.

VETO

The President rejected the bill Sept. 22 in a lengthy veto message. With the message was a personal letter to each Congressman urging him to study the message and support the veto. Truman listed his general objections to the measure as:

"1. It would aid potential enemies by requiring the publication of a complete list of vital defense plants, laboratories, and other installations.

"2. It would require the Department of Justice and its Federal Bureau of Investigation to waste immense amounts of time and energy attempting to carry out its unworkable registration matters.

"3. It would deprive us of the great assistance of many aliens in intelligence matters.

"4. It would antagonize friendly governments.

"5. It would put the Government of the United States into the thought-control business.

"6. It would make it easier for subversive aliens to become naturalized as United States citizens.

"7. It would give Government officials vast powers to harass all of our citizens in the exercise of their right of free speech."

LAW ENACTED

The House acted as soon as the veto message had been read Sept. 22. John S. Wood (D Ga.), chairman of the House Un-American Activities Committee and author of the original House - passed bill, moved to end debate on the veto before debate started. His motion carried on voice vote, and a roll-call vote on the veto was taken immediately. The veto was overridden 286-48 — far in excess of the two - thirds majority needed to reject a veto.

The veto message then was taken up in the Senate. Long speeches supporting the veto were made by Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.), Paul Douglas (D Ill.), Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.), Herbert H. Lehman (D N.Y.), James E. Murray (D Mont.) and William Langer (R N.D.). Langer collapsed after speaking for more than 5 hours and was carried from the Senate chamber on a stretcher. (He was hospitalized, but reported in good condition within a few days).

Purpose of the long speeches, according to the speakers, was to give the people a chance to read the veto message and advise Congress on a course of action. They denied it was a filibuster.

The talking continued all night and into the following afternoon when a vote was taken. Again the outcome was lopsided: 57-10 to override the veto. The bill became Public Law No. 831.

LOBBY STANDS

Communism in the U.S. was the subject of a sustained barrage of mail to Congress. It also brought a host of organizations into united fronts, either to "fight communism" or to "protect civil rights threatened by so-called subversive-control proposals".

Many organizations pledging themselves to oppose communism did not agree that proposed control legislation would accomplish its purpose, or that it would do so without serious loss of American civil liberties.

Other organizations insisted the "clear and present danger" from internal communism made the strict measures mandatory.

Summary Dismissal Of U. S. Employees

HR 7439—P. L. 733

SUMMARY

Congress gave heads of 11 "sensitive" federal departments and agencies power to dismiss civilian employees as bad security risks when it passed HR 7439 after some Members of both houses fought to strengthen safeguards for employees dismissed.

The House passed the bill July 12, 1950, after a bipartisan group failed in attempts to write in a provision for review by the Civil Service Commission of dismissals. Three attempts to provide for review or appeal were defeated, one of them on a teller vote of 96 to 102. A motion to recommit the bill with instructions to provide for a CSC review of dismissals then was rejected on a roll-call vote of 144 to 193. The roll-call vote on the bill was 327 to 14.

The Senate approved the measure without debate Aug. 9, 1950, but not until the Armed Services Committee had reconsidered an earlier action and recommended that the bill be amended to provide dismissed employees with the right of appeal and transfer to non-sensitive agencies.

The House agreed to the Senate amendments Aug. 15, 1950, and the bill was approved by the President Aug. 26. It became Public Law 733.

At hearings and in debate, Congressmen emphasized that the measure did not involve loyalty of employees and that it would not interfere with the loyalty program. The bill was intended to permit dismissal as dangerous to national security employees considered bad risks because of personal weaknesses or dangerous associations.

The bill was introduced at the request of the Defense Department, and representatives of federal agencies appeared at hearings, held by the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee, to support it. Its purpose was approved by representatives of federal employees groups and veterans organizations but some urged an appeal provision to safeguard employees.

Agencies Involved

Suspension and dismissal powers already held by several departments were made uniform and permanent by the measure. The agencies covered were the State, Defense, Army, Navy, Air Force, Treasury (for the Coast Guard), Commerce and Justice Departments and the Atomic Energy Commission, National Security Resources Board and National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics. Together they employ more than a million civilians.

Although the Senate provided appeal and transfer rights — appeals will be considered by the CSC — it curtailed a provision that would have permitted employees suspended as bad security risks to remain on non-sensitive jobs in the same or other agencies. Henceforth, employees separated under the law are entitled to employment in other federal agencies provided the head of the agency has the approval of the CSC.

As it stands on the statute books, HR 7439:

1. Permits heads of sensitive departments and agencies — State, Defense, Army, Navy, Air Force, Treasury (for the Coast Guard), Commerce and Justice Departments and Atomic Energy Commission, National Security Resources Board and National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics— to dismiss civilian officers and employees deemed to be bad security risks; gives the discharged employees the right to appeal to the Civil Service Commission and apply for transfer to non-sensitive agencies; and provides compensation for employees wrongfully suspended or terminated.

2. Stipulates that nothing in the bill impairs authority laid down by the Atomic Energy Act of 1946.

3. Permits the President to extend provisions of the Act to other departments and agencies, and requires him to advise the Armed Services Committees of Congress that he has done so.

4. Makes the security risk provisions uniform for the sensitive agencies by repealing sections of other acts.

Votes

The House passed HR 7439 by a 327-14 roll-call vote on July 12, 1950. (See page 554 for votes.) The Senate passed the measure on July 25 by a voice vote, after making changes in the bill. The House agreed to the Senate's changes on Aug. 15, and sent the bill to the White House, where President Truman signed it into Public Law 733 on Aug. 26, 1950.

BACKGROUND

Six of the agencies whose administrators were given the power of summary suspension of employees considered by them to be bad security risks already were operating under such authority on a temporary basis. Five others covered by the security measure, as finally enacted, were not.

The Secretary of State was empowered to remove such employees by the State, Justice and Commerce Appropriation Act for 1950. The Secretary of Defense had similar powers under the Military Establishment Act of 1950. The Secretaries of the Army, Navy and Air Force were granted such authority by Public Law 808, 77th Congress. The Atomic Energy Act of 1946 granted the power of dismissal to the Atomic Energy Commission.

Added to the list of sensitive agencies by the legislation were the Justice and Commerce Departments, National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, National Security Resources Board and the Coast Guard, under the Treasury Department.

The war-time Public Law 808 was approved Dec. 17, 1942. With respect to its workings since then, the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee on June 26, 1950, noted that " . . . there have been only 375 employees removed from the Departments of the Army, Navy and Air Force on grounds that such employees were security risks. This is less than an average of 54 persons removed a year in the military establishment where the average annual employment has been over a million civilians during this 7-year period. It is clear that the present authority to remove security risks is not abused by the military establishment."

HOUSE

Committee

At the request of the Department of Defense, Rep. Tom Murray (D Tenn.) Feb. 27, 1950, introduced HR 7439, a bill to permit summary dismissal of civilian employees of sensitive federal agencies when the employees are considered bad security risks.

The House Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, headed by Murray, held hearings March 7, 23 and 30, 1950. Representatives of the departments and agencies involved urged enactment of the measure as important to national security. Dan A. Kimball, Under Secretary of the Navy, speaking for the Defense Department, said: "A single act of a disloyal person and a single act of an indiscreet employee can do equal damage to our security in one of these sensitive departments."

Representatives of federal employee and veterans organizations who testified generally indorsed the intent of the bill but some proposed that employees suspended or separated as security risks be permitted to appeal to an authority outside the agency suspending them.

In reporting the bill, Murray said that "in the judgment of the committee, the bill provides an adequate appeals procedure for such employees and grants them appeals rights to which they are not now entitled under present law."

The original bill provided only for review by the head of the agency involved.

The Committee reported the bill to the House June 26, 1950. As it emerged from the Committee, the bill applied to the State, Defense, Army, Navy, Air Force, and Treasury (respecting the Coast Guard) Departments and the Atomic Energy Commission, National Security Resources Board and the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics. It provided that an employee might be fired in the interests of national security if the employee was a chronic drunk, pervert, too talkative, etc. The dismissal was to take effect when the employee had had (a) a written statement of charges, (b) a reasonable opportunity to answer the charges and submit evidence, (c) a hearing upon the employee's request, (d) a review of the case by the department or agency head, and (e) a written statement of the final decision.

Debate

The bill came before the House for debate July 12, 1950. Murray urged support of the bill "because it is an essential measure for the protection of our government at a time when the American people can ill afford to have persons on the federal payroll in sensitive departments and agencies who are security risks."

George P. Miller (D Calif.) offered an amendment to provide for review of the suspensions by the Civil Service Commission on appeal of the person fired. The CSC would have been empowered only to recommend a reversal of the Department head's action. The amendment was rejected on teller vote 96-102. Chet Holifield (D Calif.) and Eugene J. McCarthy (D Minn.) also lost out on attempts to provide for appeals. They pointed out that the existing loyalty program provided for appeals, but others said the amendments would weaken the bill.

The House agreed to amendments adding the Commerce and Justice Departments to the sensitive agencies covered by the bill.

McCarthy then moved that the bill be sent back to the committee with instructions to add provisions authorizing the CSC to review dismissals, recommend reinstatements and also report annually to Congress and the President on progress of the entire program. His motion was rejected 144 to 193 on roll-call vote.

The House went on to pass the bill July 12, 1950, on a roll-call vote of 327 to 14.

AMENDMENTS AGREED TO

Clarence J. Brown (R Ohio) — Add Commerce Department to list of sensitive agencies. Voice vote.

Wingate H. Lucas (D Tex.) — Add Department of Justice to list of sensitive agencies. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Chet Holifield (D Calif.) — Provide for review of all dismissals by an independent board. Voice.

George P. Miller (D Calif.) — Provide for Civil Service review of dismissals on request of fired employee. Reversals could be recommended only. Standing vote 94-94 tie; teller vote 96-102.

Eugene J. McCarthy (D Minn.) — Provide for appeal to the CSC by a fired employee. The CSC would then either confirm the discharge and remove the person from civil-service registers or grant the appellant preference for re-employment in a nonsensitive agency. Standing 21-128.

SENATE

Committee

The Senate Armed Services Committee July 25, 1950, reported the House-passed bill granting heads of 11 departments and agencies concerned with national defense sweeping authority to dismiss employees they adjudged "bad security risks".

The Committee approved the House version of the bill July 20. But it returned to the measure the next day and wrote in a clause giving suspended employees the right to appeal a dismissal to the Civil Service Commission.

Chief advocate of the appeals clause was Sen. Wayne Morse (R Ore.) who contended that without it the bill would grant "police state powers." However, it was on a July 21 motion by Sen. Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.) that the Committee agreed to reconsider the July 20 action. The Committee then adopted an amendment giving the discharged employees the right to appeal to the CSC and apply for transfer to non-sensitive agencies.

(On July 20, Morse had proposed an independent review of decisions of agency heads in dismissal cases, but lost on a 5 to 5 vote. When the Committee later that day voted to report the measure without the appeals amendment, Morse cast the only opposing vote.)

Eliminated Transfer Provision

The measure as it finally came from the Committee also lacked a provision which the House had written in allowing suspended employees to remain on non-sensitive jobs in the same or other agencies, if they got approval of the CSC. Sen. Styles Bridges (R N.H.) objected to this provision which he said would permit sexual perverts, dismissed from their jobs, to stay on in the government in other agencies. The Committee, acting on Bridges' appeal, knocked out the clause. But an amendment proposed by Sen. Lester C. Hunt (D Wyo.) to apply the broad dismissal powers to all 2,000,000 government workers was turned down.

Floor Action

The Senate passed the bill Aug. 9, 1950, after a brief explanation and without debate. It agreed to Committee amendments to permit discharged employees to appeal to the Civil Service Commission for placement in a non-sensitive job in another agency, and to require the President to report to Congress if he added to the list of sensitive departments and agencies.

LAW ENACTED

The House agreed to the Senate amendments Aug. 15, 1950. The bill was approved by the President Aug. 26, 1950, and became Public Law No. 733.

LOBBY STANDS

Federal department spokesmen and officials of organizations who appeared at hearings on legislation for security risk dismissals generally favored the bill's purpose.

However, some representatives of organizations proposed additional safeguards for employees in form of review of security dismissals by authority other than the agencies involved.

James F. Green, chairman, National Americanism Commission of the American Legion, called the bill an essential legal instrument and urged passage "to restore to agency heads a needed measure of protecting our security" and to ". . . aid in restoring a sagging public confidence in our federal agencies."

The House Committee heard or received statements from representatives of several other organizations, including the American Federation of Labor, American Civil Liberties Union, American Federation of Government Employees, National Federation of Government Employees, Government Employees Council and National Federation of Post Office Clerks.

Anti-Spying Bill

HR 4703

SUMMARY

After brief debate and with only two dissenting votes, the House March 15, 1950, passed a bill to broaden existing laws covering espionage, sabotage and subversion, and to increase the penalties for their violation. The bill, HR 4703, was the outgrowth of disclosures of espionage and subversive activities that had resulted in recent years from Congressional investigations and spy trials. However, HR 4703 did not become law because the Congress ultimately incorporated it into a more sweeping measure, the Internal Security Act of 1950 (see page 390.)

As passed by the House on a 368-2 vote, the bill would have made conspiracy to pass American secrets to foreign agents as grave as the crime itself and would have subjected to prosecution officials having custody of secrets who through negligence permitted them to get out, or who failed to report discovery of loss of secret information.

It would have increased from 3 to 10 years the limit on prosecution for espionage and would have increased penalties for conspiracy to reveal or misappropriate classified information from $10,000 or 5 years or both to $10,000 or 10 years or both.

Extended Limitations

The Justice Department had requested that the statute of limitations be suspended entirely in spy cases. The House refused to do this but an amendment, opposed by members of the Judiciary Committee which reported the bill, was adopted making the 10-year limit applicable to federal employees from the date they left office.

The bill would have required registration of any person having any sort of spy training by another country or by a foreign political party. In addition, failure to register as a foreign agent would have been made a continuing offense — and this in effect virtually would have suspended the limitation on time in which an offender could be indicted.

Other floor amendments limited a proposal to give the Secretary of Defense authority to promulgate security regulations by requiring that they be approved by the President, and provided specific protection for nuclear energy information and projects, both government and under private contract.

The Judiciary Committee eliminated one provision requested by the Justice Department. It would have permitted use in federal courts of evidence obtained by wire tapping.

Passage Through House

Although the bill was reported from the Judiciary Committee May 20, 1949, there were no arguments against it when it was called up March 15, 1950, by Judiciary Committee Chairman Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.) under the Calendar Wednesday procedure. The amendments were agreed to by voice vote.

A roll-call vote was taken on the bill after Rep. Vito Marcantonio (ALP N.Y.) objected to a voice vote on grounds a quorum was not present. The bill passed, 368-2, with Marcantonio and Adam C. Powell, Jr. (D N.Y.) the only dissenters.

Provisions

1. Widened scope of existing anti-espionage statutes so that they and their penalties would apply to those who knew of and failed to report loss or theft of items or records relating to the national defense; increased penalties for conspiracy to commit espionage from $10,000 or 5 years or both to $10,000 or 10 years or both.

2. Extended the statute of limitations for espionage from 3 to 10 years, with limitation period on prosecution of federal employees to begin when the employee left office.

3. Amended the Foreign Agencies Registration Act to make failure to register a continuing offense.

4. Authorized the Defense Secretary, with approval of the President, to promulgate security regulations.

BACKGROUND

The bill was originally introduced in the House May 16, 1949, by Rep. Joseph R. Bryson (D S.C.). A companion measure, S 595, was introduced in the Senate by Pat McCarran (D Nev.)

It was drafted originally by the Interdepartmental Intelligence Committee, a joint group consisting of representatives of the Department of Justice, the Military Intelligence of the Department of the Army, the office of Naval Intelligence of the Department of the Navy, and the Central Intelligence Agency.

Rep. Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.), Chairman of the House Judiciary Committee to which HR 4703 was referred, said no one appeared to oppose the bill when the Committee held hearings. The Committee was unanimous in reporting it favorably May 20, 1949. The bill slumbered in the Rules Committee at the end of the first session of the 81st Congress. (CQ Almanac, Vol. V, 1949, p. 599.)

In reporting the bill, the Judiciary Committee said: "In answer to those loyal Americans who say in all sincerity that they fear such a bill encroaches on the rights of Americans, we say that the rights of Americans are fruitless if they are to be destroyed through lack of adequate protection from subversive forces."

HOUSE

Amendments to the bill, all successful, stirred some debate but no arguments were made against the measure itself. On the final vote, the bill was passed 368-2. The measure was then sent across the Capitol to the Senate, which took no action on HR 4703. Instead, the upper chamber rolled the provisions of the bill into the comprehensive Internal Security Act (see page 390.)

AMENDMENTS ADOPTED

Celler, for the Committee — A series of amendments perfecting language.

Francis E. Walter (D Pa.) — Require the President to approve security regulations promulgated by Defense Secretary.

W. Sterling Cole (R N.Y.) — Provide specific protection for nuclear energy information and projects, whether undertaken by the government or handled through private contracts.

Andrew Jacobs (D. Ind.)—Commence statute of limitations on federal employees when employee leaves office.

Registration of Foreign Agents

HR 4386—P. L. 642

SUMMARY

A bill (HR 4386) designed to close "loopholes" in the Foreign Agents Registration Act of 1938 was approved by both houses without debate or objection. The House passed the measure April 3 by unanimous consent; the Senate did the same July 26. It became law Aug. 3.

Provisions

Any person who is an agent of a foreign principal shall register with the Attorney General within 10 days after the Act is signed.

Any person who shall become an agent of a foreign principal shall register within 10 days after becoming such an agent.

The obligation to register shall continue from day to day.

Discontinuance of activity as foreign agent shall not relieve such agent from his obligation to register his activities for the period during which he acted as such an agent.

An officer or director of a group or organization acting as a foreign agent shall cause all members of the group to register.

Dissolution of the organization shall not relieve the officer from this responsibility.

HOUSE

Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.), chairman of the Judiciary Committee introduced the bill April 27, 1949. It was referred to his Committee.

The measure was endorsed by the Justice Department. Assistant Attorney General Peyton Ford told the Committee there had been some legal doubt whether under the original registration act the statute of limitations began to run from the first day an agent was required to register or from the last day in which he acted as an agent. Ford said that the bill would, by making failure to register a "continuing" offense, make clear that the statute of limitations time did not begin to run until the last day on which a person acted as an agent.

Ford also endorsed the provisions making it impossible for an agent to decline to register on the grounds his organization had been dissolved and the provisions making officers of the organization responsible for registration of the members.

The bill was approved by the Committee March 15, 1950. The House then passed it on the "consent calendar" April 3 by unanimous consent.

SENATE

The House-passed bill was referred to the Senate Judiciary Committee where it received similar endorsement from the Attorney General's office. The Committee approved the bill June 26. The Senate passed the measure on the consent calendar July 26 without debate or objection.

Law Enacted

The President signed the bill Aug. 2, and it became Public Law No. 642.

War Contractors' Relief

HR 3436—Vetoed

S 3906—Vetoed

Congress made two unsuccessful attempts in 1950 to provide relief to war contractors assertedly deprived of satisfactory settlement of their hardship claims against the government because of restrictive administration of the so - called Lucas Act—the War Contractors Relief Act passed in the 79th Congress.

During the 81st Congress, the House in 1949 passed HR 3439 to relax certain aspects of the Lucas Act. (For House action, see CQ Almanac, Vol. V, page 617.) In 1950, the Senate took the measure up on June 8. The bill passed without objection, after the Senate had made changes in it. The House agreed to the Senate's changes on June 15, and cleared the bill to the White House.

First Bill Vetoed

The President vetoed it on June 30. He was critical of the legislation because he said it relaxed requirements for filing notice and determining cost beyond the basic purpose of the original War Contractors Relief Act. "I believe that the net effect of this bill for all practicable purposes would be to write into law the principle of government insurance against all wartime net losses incurred by contractors providing goods and services to the government," the veto message stated. The president said, however, that he would favor a new bill providing for equitable settlement of claims unsettled at the end of the war which had been rejected on "flimsy technicalities."

Second Bill Introduced

The Senate made no attempt to override the President's veto. Instead, Chairman Pat McCarran (D Nev.) of the Senate Judiciary Committee introduced a new bill (S 3906) on July 12. He said it met Mr. Truman's earlier objections, and the Senate approved the new measure on July 26. There was no objection to its passage.

The House also passed S 3906 without objection on Aug. 7, sending the bill to the President. As it reached the White House, S 3906 carried a stipulation that "reasonable compensation" for the services of partners and proprietors be provided in settling claims of contractors who suffered losses in handling Federal work during World War II for the government.

Second Bill Vetoed

This was the provision in the new measure which drew a second Presidential veto, on Aug. 21.

In his veto message, the President said the proposal still would "write into law the principle of government insurance against all wartime net losses" suffered by contractors.

"I am confident they do not expect or want the government to embark upon a program of underwriting the element of risk that is a normal incident of any contractual undertaking for profit," the President said, concluding: "Such a program, among other things, would destroy the existing system of competitive bidding which is an integral part of our free enterprise economy, and it would virtually annihilate any incentive to perform efficiently."

When the veto message was read in the Senate, some debate erupted. McCarran led the attack on the veto, which he said "sets up an effective road block" to giving "a square deal" to nearly 200 World War II contractors.

But when a roll-call vote on overriding Mr. Truman's veto was taken, the motion to over-ride was rejected 30 to 39 on Sept. 13. Thus the veto was sustained.

Civil Government For Guam

HR 7273—P. L. 630

SUMMARY

President Truman August 1 signed the "Organic Act for Guam", a bill (HR 7273) granting American citizenship and limited self-government to the people of Guam. At the same time, the President issued an executive order that transferred formal administrative responsibility for the island from the Navy to the Interior Department.

Guam, the westernmost possession of the United States, had been under partial civilian jurisdiction for about a year. In the 50 years before that, it was governed by Navy officials. The island came under United States control in 1898, following the Spanish-American War.

The bill that received Mr. Truman's signature provided for an island legislature and a United States District Court. Measures adopted by unicameral legislature may be vetoed by a civilian governor if they are considered harmful to either Guam's or the United States' interests.

Under the terms of the Organic Act, which included a bill of rights for Guamanians patterned after the U. S. Constitution's Bill of Rights, the island government may obtain Federal income as well as taxes derived from Guam itself.

HOUSE

A House Public Lands Subcommittee Jan. 14 urged the Congress to take swift action toward setting up civil governments in Guam, American Samoa and the islands in the Pacific trust territory. The recommendation was contained in a report released by subcommittee members who toured the Pacific areas in 1949.

On Feb. 22, the full Public Lands Committee reported HR 7273, taking action on its Subcommittee's recommendation and also following through on requests President Truman had been making since 1947 with respect to an Organic Act for Guam.

The measure came up in the House on May 23. Opening debate on behalf of the bill, John McSweeney (D Ohio) explained that the measure "grants citizenship to those people who are entitled to citizenship under the original treaty of 1898 and it also makes in order the possibility of men and women living in Guam at the present time to obtain citizenship."

McSweeney added that "it should be emphasized that this is not a preliminary step to the admission of Guam into statehood." His statement was supported by Clarence Brown (R Ohio) who flatly asserted: "There is no possibility under this legislation of anyone coming in and making a future claim that statehood has been promised to Guam."

Similar statements had been made by Guam and Federal officials at hearings conducted in February.

After relatively brief debate, the House adopted by voice vote an amendment offered by A. L. Miller (R Neb.) that income tax laws in force in the U. S. should also prevail in Guam. The Public Lands Committee endorsed this amendment.

The House then passed the bill by voice vote on May 23.

SENATE

The Senate Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs held hearings on HR 7273 on April 19, and then reported the bill on July 20 after making some changes in it. The principal changes were:

1. Disqualifying any person deemed subversive from office in the impending Guam government; 2. Specifying a unicameral legislature of 21 members elected at-large, instead of the bicameral legislature approved by the House bill; 3. Specifying Guamanian elections in November, 1950, and every two years thereafter; and 4. Spelling out in greater detail the type of Guamanian judicial system envisaged.

The Senate took up HR 7273 on July 26. It heard Insular Affairs Committee Chairman Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.) declare that "the bill sets forth in specific language that Guam is declared by the Act to be 'an unincorporated territory.' Thus it has the same legal status as Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands, and is not similar to that of Alaska and Hawaii."

The Senate promptly approved the pending bill without objection. But because its version differed from the original House measure, the Senate had to return HR 7273 to the lower chamber. The House accepted the Senate changes by unanimous consent on July 31. This completed Congressional action on the legislation, which was cleared to President Truman.

LAW ENACTED

President Truman signed HR 7273 into Public Law 630 on Aug. 1, 1950. Shortly afterwards he nominated Carleton Skinner, of Connecticut, to be Governor of Guam. Skinner, a former Washington newspaperman, was confirmed to the post by the Senate on Aug. 23, 1950.

Alien Detention

HR 10

SUMMARY

Authority to retain indefinitely, in jail or otherwise, deportable aliens who could not get permission to enter another country would have been granted the U. S. Attorney General under terms of a bill (HR 10) passed July 17 by the House and sent to the Senate. Passage was by roll-call vote of 326 to 15. Brought up on a motion to suspend the rules of the House (since clearance had not been given by the Rules Committee), the bill required a vote of two thirds in its favor. Those opposing the legislation were 13 Democrats, one Republican and the American Labor Party member.

The House-approved measure was sent across the Capitol to the Senate, whose Judiciary Committee held hearings on it. This Senate group approved HR 10 in secret session Aug. 2, and reported it to the upper chamber the following day.

The Senate, however, never acted on HR 10 as such. Instead, it incorporated the legislation into the so-called McCarran omnibus "anti-subversives" measure (HR 9490) which Congress enacted over President Truman's veto in the closing hours of the first part of the 1950 session. (See Page 390 for complete story.)

HOUSE

Background

Introduced by Rep. Sam Hobbs (D Ala.) early in 1949, HR 10 was referred to the House Judiciary Committee. HR 10 was similar to a bill passed May 5, 1939, by the House by a vote of 288 to 61. That bill, like the 1949 one, was sponsored by Rep. Sam Hobbs (D Ala.). The Senate in 1939 later defeated the first measure.

Under the 1949 law which existed when the 81st Congress met, aliens ordered deported could not be held longer than six months. After that they were to be released on bond or on their own recognizance. The Justice Department went before the House Judiciary Committee to request approval of HR 10 on the grounds it needed more authority to deal with the estimated 3,500 deportable aliens, approximately 100 of whom it labelled as subversives, who have had to be released in this country. The Committee reported the measure August 4, 1949, over the objection of its Chairman Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.), who filed a minority report with the late Rep. Martin Gorski (D Ill.).

Rep. Francis E. Walter (D Pa.), chairman of the Judiciary Subcommittee which originally recommended passage of the bill, said its terms would apply only to those aliens who were prostitutes, criminals, narcotics peddlers, anarchists or subversives. The Attorney General, instead of locking them up, he pointed out, might choose to keep them under close surveillance. "We have coddled this class of people for too long," Walter declared, adding that in many cases the aliens involved deliberately put obstacles in the way of their deportation.

However, HR 10 did not get immediately, clearance from the House Rules Committee, and was still in that body when Congress adjourned its first session.

Even before the second session convened in 1950, HR 10 drew comment from two lawmakers. Rep. Ed Gossett (D Tex.) of the House Judiciary committee, said Dec. 21 he would support it in order to curb the "thousands of illegal immigrants, many with subversive aims, who are streaming into the United States through wide gaps in the border policing system." Gossett, who together with Rep. J. Caleb Boggs (R Del.), another Judiciary Committee member, had looked into the situation, and said he would recommend that military intelligence be thrown into the job to help combat "what might be termed foreign invasion." (Gossett and Boggs had made a 3-day inspection in mid-December of the Immigration Service in New York in connection with HR 10).

Floor Action

The House took up HR 10 on July 17, 1950. In the floor debate, Celler led the opposition, contending the measure would lead to concentration camps or a U. S. "Devil's Island." Celler insisted it was illegal because it permitted imprisonment without jury trial in violation of the Constitution. He contended the "legal way" to get rid of undesirable aliens was to make illegal residence, or membership in the Communist Party, a crime.

On behalf of supporters of the bill, Rep. Kenneth B. Keating (R N.Y.) declared earlier enactment of it would have prevented the escape of Gerhart Eisler.

The House then voted to pass the bill under a suspension of its rules by a vote of 326-15.

LOBBY STANDS

During the 1949 hearings before the House Judiciary Committee, only one major organization favored the bill. This was the American Legion. Going on record against HR 10 were the American Committee for the Protection of the Foreign Born; the American Slav Congress; the Association of Immigration and Nationality Lawyers; the International Workers Order; the Americans for Democratic Action; the American Civil Liberties Union; the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union; the Jewish War Veterans; and the American Jewish Congress.

New York Indians

S 192—P. L. 785

SUMMARY

The courts of New York State were given partial civil jurisdiction over Indian tribes in that State under the terms of S 192. The jurisdiction was only partial because the legislation permitted the tribes to declare — within two years — what customs they wished to preserve. Indian declarations would be honored, and would govern in civil cases involving reservation Indians.

As explained by its sponsor, Sen. Herbert H. Lehman (D N.Y.), the measure "expressly subjects the Indians in the State of New York to the civil laws of that State, without impairing any of their property rights under existing treaties with the United States."

The House passed the bill on a 295-4 roll-call vote Aug. 14. The Senate approved it four days later, without objection. Because the two versions differed, the bill was sent to conference, and the House and Senate approved a compromise on Sept. 1.

SENATE

The Senate Interior and Insular Affairs Committee reported S 192 on June 15, after making a few administrative changes in the bill as first drafted, and specifying that "this act shall take effect two years after the date of its passage."

The Senate took the measure up the following day on the consent calendar, and passed it without objection on June 16. There was no debate.

HOUSE

The House Committee on Public Lands, to which S 192 was referred after its Senate approval, favorably reported the bill on July 24. It did not seek any changes in the measure as passed by the Senate, but attempts were made to alter the bill when it reached the floor of the House on Aug. 14.

Rep. Toby Morris (D Okla.) offered two amendments, to safeguard further the treaty rights and tribal customs of the Indians, and to assure them a fair determination of their claims in the state courts. Both amendments were accepted by voice votes.

Rep. Eugene D. O'Sullivan (D Neb.) then offered an amendment which would have made the bill effective only if a majority of the State's Indians accepted it in a plebescite. This proposal was defeated by a 49-6 vote.

O'Sullivan objected that a quorum was not present, and forced a roll call on the final ballot on the bill, which was approved 295-4. Representatives voting against the measure were O'Sullivan, Chester C. Gorski (D N.Y.), Anthony Tauriello (D N.Y.), and Michael A. Feighan (D Ohio).

CONFERENCE

The Senate did not readily accede to the House's alterations in the bill, and on Aug. 23, a joint conference committee met to iron out differences between the House and Senate versions. This group reached agreement on Aug. 31. New York Indians were given the right to declare "those tribal laws and customs which they desire to preserve", and the bill specified that these preferences were to be honored. This compromise also resolved different House and Senate attitudes on how Indians should register their preferences.

The House approved the conference report on Sept. 1, by voice vote, and the Senate approved it the same day without objection. There was no debate in either chamber.

The President signed the measure on Sept. 13.

Seneca Indian Rentals

HR 4942—P. L. 690

SUMMARY

This bill permitted the city of Salamanca, N. Y., to collect rentals on lands leased from New York's Seneca Indians, and then pay this money directly to the Seneca Nation. The legislation permitted the by-passing of the federal Indian Bureau, which previously had collected the rents and subsequently turned them over to the Indians.

About $15,000 in annual rentals have been involved. The city of Salamanca is built entirely on land leased from the Seneca Indians. HR 4942 was presented as an "economy measure" because it circumvented Indian Bureau "red-tape". The House passed the bill by voice vote on May 1. The Senate approved it without debate or objection on July 26, after making some changes to which the House agreed July 31. The President signed the measure on Aug. 14.

Some House Debate

The House debated the bill at some length. Reps. J. Hardin Peterson (D Fla.) and Toby Morris (D Okla.) favored it as being "to the best interests of the people of the city of Salamanca and . . . to the Indians." But Rep. Eugene D. O'Sullivan (D Neb.) flayed it as "a truly bad bill" which had the "unanimous disapproval" of the Senecas, O'Sullivan said the Indians had formally represented themselves to members of Congress as being 98 per cent opposed to HR 4942.

Rep. Daniel A. Reed (R N. Y.) author of the measure, said his bill was "just", and that opposition to it stemmed from the activities of a "lobbyist (who) has worked on individuals, has misled them as to the facts, and has poisoned their minds." Reed did not identify the person.

Daylight Saving Time For D. C.

The House voted 194-87 on May 1 to authorize the District of Columbia Commissioners to put the capital on daylight savings time during the summer of 1950. The roll - call vote was demanded by some Representatives who claimed the issue was a "rather controversial subject" because it affected farmers in neighboring Virginia and Maryland, and also because it upset transportation schedules.

During the two hours the House spent on this matter, Robert Louis Stevenson's poetry from a Child's Garden of Verses was quoted, and the rambling debate touched on politics, home-rule for the District, and the times of summer sunsets and dawns.

The Senate approved the measure by a voice vote on May 2, after an unsuccessful attempt was made to start a similar discussion.

Although the final Senate vote was on the House-passed bill, the upper chamber had previously on April 21 approved a measure (S 3176) which permitted the Commissioners to effect daylight savings time not only in 1950 but in subsequent years as well. This particular bill never saw action in the House.

President Truman signed HR 6354 into law on May 2, hours after the Senate had approved it.

Jackson Hole Monument

S 3409—P.L. 787

SUMMARY

Congress Aug. 31 solved a seven-year controversy that had raged in Western Wyoming over the Jackson Hole Monument by splitting the land in question between the Grand Teton National Park and the National Elk Refuge. The bill (S 3409) also provided for tax compensation to the State of Wyoming.

In addition to splitting the land, the measure provided that the land also can be used for grazing cattle and sheep. Mineral rights which were being worked can continue to be worked with permission of the Secretary of the Interior.

The bill's passage solved a problem which had been vexing the West ever since the late President Roosevelt set up the Jackson Hole National Monument in 1943 at the instigation of Harold L. Ickes, then Secretary of the Interior. The monument took out of circulation a considerable section of public lands, relieving the western Wyoming counties in which the monument was located of a large part of their taxable property. Both cattlemen and the State of Wyoming objected to the procedure since, they said, they were losing money.

SENATE, HOUSE

The bill was introduced in the Senate by Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.) and Lester Hunt (D Wyo.). It was passed by the Senate on voice vote July 26.

The House Public Lands Committee to which the bill was referred after the Senate passed it, amended the bill and reported it out Aug. 11. The amendments were slight in nature, one of them raising from four to nine the number of years for which the government had to compensate the State of Wyoming for loss of taxes, and the other providing that tax compensation be made for both the land and improvements to it, such as buildings and fences.

The House passed the bill as amended by voice vote, Aug. 24, and returned it to the Senate.

CONFERENCE REQUIRED

The Senate would not go along with the House changes, and so a House-Senate conference committee was required. This group reached agreement rapidly, however, and the compromise it produced was approved by both chambers of Congress on Aug. 31.

LAW ENACTED

President Truman signed the legislation into law on Sept. 14. In a statement, he called the bill "a significant achievement in assuring the continued use and enjoyment by the public of one of the most majestic and colorful areas of our country."

In commenting on the provisions of the bill, Mr. Truman also noted that it specified "detailed procedures for the management of the elk herd which migrates through the region where the park is located, and accorded the State of Wyoming a voice in determining the size at which the herd shall be maintained and the occasions when reductions shall be undertaken."

XUM

Alaskan Airports

In 1948, the Congress authorized the appropriation of $13 million to the Civil Aeronautics Board to use in building new airports in Alaska near Anchorage and Fairbanks. The construction was to meet "needs of the air-transportation services and air commerce of the United States serving the Territory of Alaska and foreign countries by way of points within the Territory of Alaska."

In August, 1949, the Senate passed S 2436 amending the original measure by striking out the $13 million figure and inserting an authorized sum of $17 million. The House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee reported the measure Oct. 11, 1949, but it failed to get floor action in the House during the first session.

On March 6, 1950, however, the lower chamber took up the Senate bill. Without a word of debate, it was passed by unanimous agreement. The President signed the measure into law March 10.

Small Business Committee

S Res 58

SUMMARY

After months of controversy, the Senate Feb. 20 approved by voice vote a resolution (S Res 58) setting up a Senate Select Committee on Small Business. The resolution did not require House or Presidential approval.

BACKGROUND

Prior to 1949 the Senate had a Special Committee on the Problems of American Small Business Enterprise. As a "special" committee, it expired each year and was then recreated. It would have been abolished at the beginning of the 80th Congress (1947) when the Reorganization Act of 1946 went into effect, but the 80th Congress voted it another extension. The committee was given a final 30-day extension on the last day of the 80th Congress — Dec. 31, 1948. Although it lived for 30 days during the 81st Congress in 1949, the Committee was considered to be part of the 80th Congress and its final reports were filed as such. (CQ Almanac Vol. V, p. 749.)

After final demise of the Special Committee, matters relating to small business were referred to other standing committees. But there were many requests for a committee to handle nothing but small business problems. The Banking and Currency Committee set up a Small Business Subcommittee. James E. Murray (D Mont.), chairman of the Special Committee during the 79th Congress, introduced a resolution (S Res 29) calling for a Special Small Business Committee. It was rejected by the Banking Committee.

Kenneth S. Wherry (R Neb.), chairman of the special committee during the 80th Congress, then introduced S Res 55 on Feb. 7, 1949, calling for the same thing. It also died in the Banking Committee. Spessard L. Holland (D Fla.) and Wherry also introduced S Res 58 on Feb. 7, 1949. It called for a Standing Committee on Small Business. This resolution was referred to the Rules Committee, because creation of a new standing committee required a change in the rules of the Senate. The resolution was approved by that committee June 29, 1949, but it did not come up for Senate consideration that year.

SENATE ACTION

During 1950 floor debate three substitutes were offered:

Murray — Create a special committee on small business, to expire at the end of 1952. The group would consider no specific legislation, but would study small business problems.

Holland — Create an enlarged subcommittee of the Banking and Currency Committee to consider small business problems and bills. On it would serve one member of the Finance Committee, one member of the Commerce Committee, one member of the Judiciary Committee, two members of any other standing committee, plus the regular members of the Banking Committee. The outside, ex officio, members would have the same powers as the regular members.

Wherry — Create a Select Committee on Small Business to continue indefinitely, consider small business problems, report its findings, but not consider specific legislation.

The Holland substitute was rejected by a 33-49 roll call. The action followed assertions that this plan would cause confusion and would create an undesirable precedent.

The Murray amendment was then rejected on a 31-51 roll call. Main objection was to the cut-off date of 1952.

The Wherry substitute was then approved by a 56-27 roll call. Final approval of the original resolution as amended by the Wherry substitute was by voice vote. Wherry said his substitute would not necessitate a change in the rules of the Senate as would the original bill, but would still answer the requests of small businessmen. (See p. 541 for votes.)

COMMITTEE MEMBERS

Members of the new committee were named April 10 by President of the Senate Alben W. Barkley. They were John Sparkman (D Ala.), Ernest W. McFarland (D Ariz.), Herbert R. O'Conor (D Md.), Russell B. Long (D La.), Guy Gillette (D Iowa.), Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.), Lester C. Hunt (D Wyo.), William Benton (D Conn.), Charles W. Tobey (R N. H.), Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.), Robert C. Hendrickson (R N. J.), Edward J. Thye (R Minn.) and Andrew F. Schoeppel (R Kan.).

None had been a member of previous Senate small business groups. Naming them to the 1950 group, Barkley said, would give new Senators a chance to work on small business problems.

Sister Kenny

SJ Res 105—P.L. 357

Congress granted an unprecedented privilege to an alien when it passed a bill to give unrestricted entry privileges to Sister Elizabeth Kenny. Sister Kenny, an Australian nurse who has spent considerable time in the U. S. demonstrating her treatments for infantile paralysis, wanted to enter without visa or head tax.

Sen. Hubert Humphrey (D Minn.) introduced a private bill (S J Res 105) June 9, 1949, granting these privileges. The Senate Judiciary Committee reported the bill Sept. 12, and the Senate approved it Sept. 27, 1949. The House Judiciary Committee reported a companion bill (H J Res 299) Jan. 18, 1950. The House version was tabled by the House Feb. 7, and the Senate bill was passed without amendment. The President signed the bill Feb. 11, and it became Private Law 357.

Federal Judges, Judgeships

Congress was sporadically agitated during 1950 about the number of federal judgeships through the country, the fitness of the jurists, and the political aspects of appointments to the bench. Most of the complaints about the latter came from Republicans.

Sen. William F. Knowland (R Calif.) said April 30 that the Federal judiciary was getting top-heavy with Democrats. He recommended that more Republicans be named to the posts by the President. The ratio was 224 Democrats to 84 Republicans, he said.

On July 20, Rep. Kenneth B. Keating (R N. Y.) charged in the House that "the history of appointments from 1933, which was the year when the present majority party came into power, until this time is that there have been 289 judges appointed of whom 272 have been members of the Democrat Party, and 17 not members of the Democrat Party, or a percentage of 95 to 5 percent."

Shortly afterwards, on Aug. 6, Sen. Alexander Wiley (R Wis.) made public a letter he had written to President Truman urging him to "correct the terrible overloading of Democrats as federal judges." Wiley disclosed Aug. 8 he had received a brief reply from the President in which the Chief Executive said he was "more than happy" to have the Senator's views and in one other paragraph added: "It has always been my policy to be very careful in the selection of men who sit on the federal bench and I am very glad to have your endorsement of that policy."

"Humor" Irks Wiley

Wiley, ranking Republican on the Senate Judiciary Committee and its chairman during the Republican-controlled 80th Congress, simultaneously issued a statement that he certainly was not endorsing the President's appointive policies and that he did not respond to the President's "humor." The Senator added that the letter indicated "the Chief Executive insists on having patronage as usual even during a war."

In the initial letter of the exchange, Wiley wrote the President that "during the last two decades, appointments to the courts of the United States have been almost exclusively on a partisan, Democratic basis." He explained that statistics show that of 192 judicial appointments since 1933, all but eight have gone to Democrats. (Other published statistics have reported that Franklin D. Roosevelt alone submitted 196 nominations of judges).

Judge Called Red

In June, a Senate Judiciary subcommittee went into charges that a federal judge was a Communist sympathizer. The accused jurist, who was absolved, was U. S. District Judge Gus T. Solomon, of Portland, Ore. His nomination by the President to be a permanent judge instead of an acting one was confirmed by the Senate on June 27, but not until hearings had been held on charges of disloyalty made by Daniel C. Mahoney, also of Portland.

Mahoney, a son of an unsuccessful candidate for Governor of Oregon and United States Senator, was a Federal Court Law Clerk. In response to his charges, Judge Solomon categorically stated "There's no truth to them. I am not now, nor have I ever been, a member of the Communist Party, and I have never been sympathetic with any of the aims or purposes of the Communist Party."

Bench Probe Asked

The full Senate Judiciary Committee on Aug. 29 adopted a resolution calling for an investigation by itself or a subcommittee of the "competence, fitness, and legal qualifications" of all federal judges. The committee's proposal was an amended version of a resolution introduced by Sen. William Langer (R N.D.). Langer had sharply criticized the decision of the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals to reverse a District Court order revoking the $25,000 bond of Harry Bridges, leader of the International Longshoremen's Union, pending an appeal on a perjury conviction.

The Senate Judiciary Committee Sept. 11 withdrew the resolution. Sen. Pat. McCarran (D Nev.), committee chairman, and Sen. Harley M. Kilgore (D W.Va.), a committee member, said the resolution was withdrawn because the committee felt it might be construed as an attempt on the part of the Senate to dominate the Judiciary.

The committee voted instead to have a five-man subcommittee keep an eye constantly on the federal bench.

Following are the bills affecting federal judgeships through the country which drew floor action in Congress during 1950:

S 3099—P. L. 738

Lifting an existing ban against filling a vacancy in the office of district judge for the western district of Pennsylvania, this bill was passed by the Senate on June 8, by the House on Aug. 17, and signed into law on Aug. 29.

Lifting a similar ban affecting the office of district judge for the district of Delaware, this bill was passed by the Senate on June 8, by the House on Aug. 23, and signed into law on Sept. 25.

HR 6606

Permitting the district judge for the eastern, middle and western districts of Pennsylvania to become a district judge for the middle district alone when the first vacancy there occurred, this bill passed the House on July 10. It was reported in the Senate on July 12, but the upper chamber took no action on it.

HR 5137

Providing for the appointment of an additional Federal district judge for the eastern district of Texas, this bill passed the House on July 20, but failed to receive action in the Senate.

The House on July 24 passed this bill to create two additional Federal judgeships in the Illinois northern district, which includes Chicago. Passage was by a 163-110 roll-call vote. The House version made the judgeships temporary, and stipulated that when the men named to the positions die, resign, or are removed, the jobs will not be refilled.

The measure was backed by the Department of Justice and Administrative Office of the U. S. Courts, which reported that last year 469 cases per judge were filed in Illinois' northern district as against the national average of 379.

Rep. Kenneth B. Keating (R N.Y.) urged recommittal of the bill with instructions to the Judiciary Committee to eliminate one of the two proposed judgeships, but his motion to that effect lost on a roll-call vote of 116 to 163.

Jobs Made Permanent

The Senate passed the House-approved measure on July 26, after first substituting the text of its own bill (S 2707) which was called up as unobjected-to legislation. The Senate made the judgeships permanent.

The House agreed to this, and concurred in the Senate's substitution. The new version was approved on Aug. 4, and President Truman signed it into law on Aug. 14.

HR 6240

This bill authorized the appointment of a district judge for the northern and southern districts of Indiana, and passed the House on July 24, despite a move by Rep. Kenneth B. Keating (R N.Y.) to recommit the measure. Keating wanted the bill to specify that subsequent vacancies in the particular judgeship would not be filled. But his proposal was defeated, 102-171 on roll call, on July 24. The Senate took no further action on HR 6240.

HR 7009

This bill, to make permanent a Federal judgeship in the eastern and western districts of Missouri, passed the House on Aug. 9 on a 240-133 roll-call vote. There was no debate. The position in question had been created in 1942 on a temporary basis. The Senate failed to act on HR 7009 during the session.

Introduced by Michael A. Feighan (D Ohio) and endorsed by the House Judiciary Committee, this bill would have provided for the appointment of one additional district judge for the northern district of Ohio. The House took it up on Aug. 17, and the measure immediately ran into dispute.

Rep. Kenneth B. Keating (R N.Y.) said "This bill before us today is the most lacking in merit of any of the judgeship bills which have been submitted to us." He asserted that there were already four district judges authorized, and that a vacancy had existed in one of these positions for almost one year. Keating and other opponents of the bill charged that the vacancy should be filled before a fifth judge were authorized.

Feighan claimed, however, that the "heavy case load within recent years" made authorization of a fifth judgeship an "urgent need . . . justice delayed is justice denied". After more debate, Howard W. Smith (D Va.) offered an amendment which would have affected jurisdictions of the court. William T. Byrne (D N.Y.) made a point of order against the Smith amendment, saying it was not germane to the pending judgeship bill. The point of order was sustained.

Recommittal Vote

Keating then offered a motion to recommit HR 7570 to the Judiciary Committee "until such a time as any vacancies existing in the northern district of Ohio have been filled". On a roll-call vote of 142-146, the Keating motion was defeated.

However, when the ballot was taken on final passage of HR 7570, the House decided to reject the measure altogether. On the final roll-call test of the legislation, 133 Representatives voted to pass it, but 149 voted against passage.

HR 3775

This bill provided for an additional district judge for the third division of the District Court for the District of Alaska. It authorized a fifth jurist to sit in the same division where Federal Judge Anthony J. Diamond, former delegate to Congress from Alaska, was then presiding. Sponsored by Delegate E. L. Bartlett (D Alaska), HR 3775 was approved by the House by a 196-147 roll-call vote on Aug. 24. The Senate, however, failed to act on the measure during the session.

Tansey Claim

HR 7468

On June 6, 1950, the House was considering HR 7468, an omnibus private claims bill "for the relief of sundry claimants" seeking monetary redress from the government. One of the sections of this bill pertained to a Harry Tansey, who had owned "during the prohibition era . . . a very substantial amount of liquor (which) was declared contraband by the Federal courts in Chicago. The liquor was destroyed."

The Tansey claim, sponsored by Rep. Barratt O'Hara (D Ill.), was for reimbursement by the government of $34,272 in taxes that Tansey asserted he had paid after the liquor was destroyed. Tansey claimed the taxes were imposed after the destruction, explaining that that was the reason he was entitled for reimbursement.

In a speech on the floor of the House, Rep. O'Hara denied that Tansey had been a bootlegger: "Harry Tansey was as far away from the liquor business and certainly bootlegging as the North Pole is from the South Pole." O'Hara said he could show that Tansey did, in fact, actually pay the tax.

This had been repeatedly questioned by opponents of the Tansey claim. Rep. James I. Dolliver (R Iowa) said "it is not shown in any way that he did pay the tax." Rep. J. Harry McGregor (R Ohio) said a Treasury Dept. report "does not show that any tax was paid either by Mr. Tansey or anyone else."

"Not One Cent"

During the debate, Rep. Robert Rich (R Pa.), known for his recurrent cry of "Where are you going to get the money?" engaged in the following colloquy with Dolliver:

Rich: "Can the gentleman name one reason why the Congress should pay this individual even 23 cents?"

Dolliver: "I cannot think of any reason why he should be paid one cent."

Rich: "Why should we take the time of the Congress to try to get him the $34,000?"

Dolliver: "We have to take the time of the Congress to determine this issue."

Ultimately, the House decided that to allow Tansey's claim would discriminate against other possible claimants who were not going to be reimbursed. When Rep. Dolliver moved to delete the section of the omnibus private claims bill affecting Tansey, the House voted 184-119 to remove it. (See vote P. 560.) The remainder of the omnibus bill was passed.

In refusing the Tansey claim, the 81st Congress affirmed similar action taken by the 75th and 80th Congress, which had passed on it. However, the House in the 78th Congress had approved the claim — at that time for $81,0000 — but the Senate had adjourned before completing action on it.

Puerto Rico Constitution

SUMMARY

Bills providing for a Constitutional convention in Puerto Rico were introduced in the House, by A. Fernos-Isern, resident commissioner from Puerto Rico, March 13 and in the Senate by Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.) and Hugh Butler (R Neb.) March 31.

The bill passed the Senate June 8 without debate on voice vote. The House approved it on voice vote June 30 after opposition from the floor by Vito Marcantonio (ALP N.Y.). It became Public Law No. 600.

Provisions

The bill contained the following major provisions:

An Island-wide referendum will be held to approve or reject the Act. No date was specified in the legislation.

If it is approved, the Legislature of Puerto Rico will call a constitutional convention for the island.

The constitution shall provide a republican form of government and shall include a bill of rights. The constitution shall be approved by the people of the Island.

The President of the United States will approve or reject the constitution.

Congress will also approve or reject the constitution.

Portions of the Puerto Rico Organic Act covered by the constitution shall be rescinded.

BACKGROUND

Puerto Rico was formally ceded to the United States by the Treaty of Paris at the end of the Spanish-American War. The treaty, ratified by Congress Feb. 6, 1899, provided that Congress should determine "the civil rights and political status of the native inhabitants" of the island.

The Organic Act of Puerto Rico, passed in 1917, established the present framework of the Island government. It created a popularly elected legislature with powers in local matters and provided for a judicial and executive branch. Puerto Rico was authorized to elect a Resident Commissioner, to be accredited to the State Department and to sit with the U. S. House of Representatives with power to serve on committees, introduce legislation and speak on the floor, but with no power to vote. Puerto Ricans were made citizens of the United States.

In 1947 Congress granted Puerto Rico the privilege of electing its own governor.

The Organic Act was, in effect, a Puerto Rican constitution. The proposed constitution would supplant that constitution with a "home - grown" product, but would not alter the status of Puerto Rico. It would not constitute independence nor statehood.

SENATE

The O'Mahoney - Butler bill (S 3336) was referred to the Interior and Insular Affairs Committee March 31. Hearings were held May 17. Assistant Secretary of State Edward G. Miller Jr. said constitutional government for of island was of the "greatest importance." Puerto Rico Governor Louis Munoz-Marin, and Commissioner A. Fernos-Isern appeared in support of the measure.

The Puerto Rico legislature backed the measure, as did the Chamber of Commerce of Puerto Rico, the Free Federation of Labor (AFL) and the General Confederation of Workers (CIO) in Puerto Rico.

Oscar Chapman, Secretary of the Interior, told the Committee:

"The people of Puerto Rico have demonstrated by the high degree of political consciousness, by their extensive use of the franchise and by their successful and intelligent administration of local governmental activities, that they are eminently qualified to assume greater responsibilty of self - government."

The bill was approved unanimously by the Committee.

The bill came up for Senate floor consideration June 8. It was passed without discussion on voice vote.

HOUSE

The House Public Lands Committee handled the House companion bill, HR 7674, introduced by A. Fernos-Isern, March 13. Hearings were held May 16. The same line-up of witnesses appeared that testified before the Senate Committee. Again the measure was approved unanimously and it was reported June 19.

The bill was opposed in the House by Vito Marcantonio (ALP N.Y.). He told the House the measure was a "fake" and a "snare". The bill, he said, did not offer home rule to Puerto Rico. Marcantonio insisted that Puerto Rico should be allowed to vote for statehood, independence, or the proposed constitution.

Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) also criticized the restricted choice offered Puerto Ricans.

Bill supporters pointed out that political parties in Puerto Rico supporting principles of the bill had won a recent election over parties supporting independence and statehood.

Javits offered an amendment specifying that the new constitution should "express the will of the people of Puerto Rico." Wayne N. Aspinall (D Colo.) said the provision was implied in the bill. The amendment was rejected on voice vote.

Marcantonio offered an amendment specifying that the island referendum shall be held in accordance with the provisions of the Federal Corrupt Practices Act. Fred L. Crawford (R Mich.) said such an amendment would be a "slap in the face" to Puerto Ricans since local laws provided for the honesty of the referendum. The amendment was rejected on voice vote.

Marcantonio moved that the enacting clause be stricken from the bill (in effect killing the measure). His motion lost on voice vote. He then moved that the bill be sent back to the Committee with instructions to add his amendment. The motion was rejected on roll-call vote 260-1.

The bill was approved by voice vote.

LAW ENACTED

The President signed the measure July 3, and it became Public Law No. 600.

Statehood For Alaska, Hawaii

HR 331, HR 49

SUMMARY

Bills to bring Alaska and Hawaii into the union as the 49th and 50th states came near to passage during 1950, but died after proponents were unable to bring the measures before the Senate. What they described as "filibuster tactics" by some Southern Democrats blocked consideration of the statehood measures during the last month of the 81st Congress.

The statehood bills were HR 331 (Alaska) and HR 49 (Hawaii). The first Alaskan statehood measure was introduced in 1916, while the original bill to admit Hawaii as a state came in 1920.

The Alaska and Hawaii bills acted on by the 81st Congress were reported March 10, 1949, by the House Public Lands Committee, but did not come before the House until Jan. 23, 1950. At that time, the bills were called up as part of a delaying move by opponents of the FEPC bill, but no effort was made to bring the statehood measures to a vote.

A few weeks later, the House passed both bills. Statehood for Alaska was voted March 3 on a 186 to 146 roll-call, and passage of the Hawaii measure came four days later on a 261 to 111 record vote.

Floor opposition to Alaska statehood came from Congressmen of large states, one of whom said it would mean the "greatest distortion of representative government" in U. S. history. Some Southerners also opposed the bill.

The Hawaii statehood measure had less opposition. While E. E. Cox (D Ga.) asserted that Hawaii was Communist controlled, others, including Southerners, said admitting Hawaii as a state would be a great blow to communism.

Following House passage, the Senate Interior and Insular Affairs Committee held hearings on the bills in April and May. Main objection to Alaska statehood came from a salmon industry spokesman, who said the Territory lacked the tax resources for statehood.

In a formal report filed June 29, the Senate group approved both statehood proposals. Two Republican Committeemen, however, voted against the Alaska bill, and one of them, Hugh Butler (Neb.) opposed Hawaiian statehood also. In a minority report, Butler said Hawaii was endangered by communism.

Efforts of Administration leaders to bring the bills before the Senate were frustrated by the requirements of a heavy legislative schedule and by opposition of some Senators. Pat McCarran (D Nev.) objected to consideration of the bills during a call of the Calendar in August.

The next moves to bring the bills to the floor were made during the "lame duck" session. Debate continued for several days on Majority Leader Scott Lucas' (D Ill.) unsuccessful motion Nov. 27 to consider the bills. Senate Interior Committee Chairman Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.) said the resistance constituted a "full scale filibuster" by Southern Democrats. Finally Lucas withdrew his motion.

BACKGROUND

Bills providing statehood for Alaska (HR 331) and Hawaii (HR 49) were reported by the House Public Lands Committee March 10, 1949, but no action was taken by either the Senate or House during the first session.

The 81st House, in acting on the bills in 1950, was the first ever to vote on Alaskan statehood. A bill admitting Hawaii to the Union was passed 195-133 by the House June 30, 1947, but died in the Senate because of inaction by the Interior and Insular Affairs Committee. The first Alaskan statehood bill was introduced in 1916, while legislation to admit Hawaii to the Union was instigated in 1920. Statehood for both Alaska and Hawaii were major planks in 1948 political platforms of both parties.

(For details of the 1949 action and prior statehood attempts, see CQ Almanac, Vol. V, p. 600.)

HOUSE

The statehood bills, which had won approval of the House Public Lands Committee during the 1949 session of Congress, were debated early in the second session, but no action was taken at that time.

The two bills were first called up Jan 23 as part of a delaying move by opponents of the FEPC bill (see CQ Almanac p. 375). No real effort was made to bring the statehood bills to a vote. Debate was interrupted frequently by the running argument over FEPC.

The bills were supported by the House Delegates of the two territories. (Alaska, Hawaii and Puerto Rico have non-voting delegates to the House. They may introduce bills, serve on committees and join in debate.)

E. L. Bartlett (D Alaska) supported statehood for his Territory, saying that:

1. Alaska is "closer" to Washington, D. C., today by air than most other states were when they were admitted.

2. Alaska has a population of 110,000 to 125,000—more than many states at the time of their admittance.

3. Alaskans are taxed without representation; have no voice in the laws that govern them.

Principal opposition during the debate came from Frederic R. Coudert, Jr. (R N.Y.). He said that such a small population should not be represented by two Senators and a Representative.

Joseph R. Farrington (R Hawaii) led support of Hawaiian statehood. He said, "We have the population, we have the wealth and we have the ability to manage our own affairs." Coudert also opposed the Hawaii bill, saying its consideration was "hasty".

Floor Action (Alaska)

Although the House took no definite action the first time the statehood bills were raised (during the FEPC debate), it took the measures up for debate on their own merits a few weeks later. The Alaska bill was raised first, and was passed on March 3 by a 186-146 record vote.

During consideration of the bill, only those amendments sponsored by the Public Lands Committee were approved by the House. An unsuccessful attempt was made by A. L. Miller (R Neb.) to grant half of all public lands in Alaska to the state, and the other half to the federal government. (The bill stipulated a 12-88 per cent division of these lands between the new state and the federal system.)

The proposal was rejected after E. L. Bartlett, delegate from Alaska, said Alaskans were satisfied with the measure as it stood.

Opposition came from representatives from the larger states, while some Southerners also opposed it. James J. Delaney (D N.Y.) said Alaska, with approximately 90,000 population, would have equal representation in the Senate with the state of New York, with 16 million people. Leroy Johnson (R Calif.) declared Alaskan statehood would be the "greatest distortion of representative government that we have ever had in America." Albert J. Engel (R Mich.) agreed. Harold D. Cooley (D N.C.) contended that Alaska is not ready for statehood.

Reva Beck Bosone (D Utah) disputed Delaney. She said Nevada, with about 100,000 people in 1940, had poured "great wealth" into the country out of its gold, silver and copper mines, and that Utah, with less than 1 million people in 1940, had given the nation "the richest copper camp in the world." Also supporting Alaskan statehood, Gordon Canfield (R N.J.) said the late Gen. "Billy" Mitchell had declared that whoever controlled Alaska by air "controlled the world." Fred L. Crawford (R Mich.) asserted Alaska and Hawaii "are two pivot areas in the defense of the whole world, outside of Russia."

Frank B. Keefe (R Wis.) said Alaska could better contribute to the national defense if operated as a territory rather than a State. E. E. Cox (D Ga.) also opposed admission of Alaska as a State. After an appeal by Delegate Bartlett for Congress "to give us statehood and we will give you a mighty state," the bill was passed.

AMENDMENTS ACTED ON

J. Hardin Peterson (D Fla.); for Public Lands Committee: Secure to federal government authority to control land held for military and other defense purposes, but to grant state right to serve civil or criminal procedures within such federally-controlled areas. Agreed to by voice vote.

Peterson, also for the Committee: Provide that the Delegate from Alaska becomes a member of Congress until the expiration of the 82nd Congress when statehood takes effect. Agreed to, voice vote.

A. L. Miller (R Neb.): Grant state of Alaska half of its public lands. federal government the other half. Rejected, division vote, 30-58.

Floor Action (Hawaii)

By March 6, the House had debated and disposed of Committee amendments to HR 49 (Hawaii bill), but final action was delayed until March 7 on request of Majority Leader John McCormack (D Mass.). He said "a number of members who wanted to be recorded on the bill" were absent, and chairman J. Hardin Peterson (D Fla.) of the Public Lands Committee explained he did not want to deny any member the right to go on record on the issue.

There was less opposition to the Hawaii statehood bill. Many of the same figures participated in both debates. Cox and Cooley argued against Hawaii as they had against Alaska. Cox charged Hawaii was held in the palm of Harry Bridges, and was Communist controlled. Crawford assailed this assertion, as did William Lemke (R N.D.) who said, "I would say there are fewer Communists to the square mile in Hawaii than there are in the state of Georgia." Johnson (R Calif.), who had opposed statehood for Alaska, supported Hawaii.

A Southerner, Henry D. Larcade, Jr. (D La.), said he could see no racial grounds for denying statehood to Hawaii. As chairman of a subcommittee of the now-defunct Territories Committee, Larcade visited Hawaii in 1946. He said he observed there an intermingling of persons of many Asiatic and Polynesian extractions "in perfect harmony." Peterson, another Southerner, declared statehood for Hawaii would be "the greatest blow to Stalin and communism in the Orient that America could deliver."

Walter H. Judd (R Minn.) and Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) also argued communism in the Pacific would be sharply curbed by the admission of Hawaii as an American state. Most proponents also stressed the military importance of Hawaii's location.

Joseph R. Farrington, delegate from Hawaii, urging adoption of the statehood measure, reviewed the territory's long struggle for statehood, noting that there had been 15 formal legislative bids for statehood since 1920.

One amendment to the bill was offered from the floor by Sam Hobbs (D Ala.), to end the existing obligation held by the federal government to pay part of the salaries of the judges of the supreme court of the Territory of Hawaii. It was accepted by voice vote.

Then, on March 7, the House passed H 49 on a roll-call vote of 261 to 111. (Vote on page 552.)

SENATE

Committee

The Senate Interior and Insular Affairs Committee, taking up a study of the House-passed statehood bills, began hearings on Alaska April 24, and scheduled Hawaii hearings to start May 1.

Alaska Hearings

Gov. Earl Warren, of California, and Interior Secretary Oscar Chapman were among lead-off witnesses. Warren also put in a plug for Hawaii's statehood cause. Warren testified Alaska would never develop its possibilities until it was admitted to the union. He contended it would stand as a buffer against totalitarianism spreading to this country.

The problem of meeting added financial burdens arising from statehood was analyzed April 25 by Mrs. Mildred Hermann, a Juneau attorney and secretary of the Alaska Statehood Commission. Added costs would bring Alaska's annual expenses to about $12.5 million. Current income was $10 million, she said, and the difference could be made up by increasing cigarette and fuel oil taxes and by the Federal government's allotting to Alaska part of the receipts from sale of seal and otter skins and from forest lands.

Adoption of the Statehood bill was urged upon the Senate Committee April 26 by Gov. Alfred Driscoll of New Jersey, who contended this country should demonstrate to the world that it practices its preachments on self-government.

Gov. Ernest Gruening of Alaska April 29 vigorously supported statehood for Alaska, declaring "development of the territory's natural resources cannot be accomplished if we continue as second class citizens." John C. Williamson, spokesman for the Veterans of Foreign Wars and Marvin Goldberger, legislative director of Amvets, also supported the legislation.

Opponents of Alaskan statehood were led by W. C. Arnold, managing director of the Alaska Salmon Industry, Inc. He said the statehood bill was not fair to the territory in that the Federal government would still retain control of some 98 per cent of the public land. His industry had been the Territory's principal tax source, Arnold said. He feared increased costs of running Alaska as a state might make his industry's tax burden unbearable if there were not other revenues including income from state lands.

Edward V. Allen, Seattle lawyer called provisions of the bill to transfer control of Alaskan fisheries to the proposed state "utterly ambiguous" and said they would create "absolute confusion."

Hawaiian Hearings

With the end of its hearings on Alaska April 29, the Committee May 1 heard testimony on Hawaii.

Statehood for Hawaii was supported on the opening day by Interior Secretary Oscar Chapman, who said the island territory was more ready to enter the union than any state was at the time of admission, including the original thirteen. Gov. Ingram M. Stainback of Hawaii joined Chapman in testifying he considered Communist activity in Hawaii a part of the national Communist problem and not ground for denying statehood. John D. Hickerson, Assistant Secretary of State, said the peoples of Asia would watch what this country does in Hawaii.

Rep. Francis E. Walter (D Pa.), who headed a House Un-American Activities subcommittee which recently had returned from an investigation of communism in Hawaii, told the Senate group May 2 communism was in a tailspin in the territory. He said his group concluded there never were more than 160 Communists in Hawaii and that the number had dwindled to not more than 90.

Hearings on statehood for Hawaii were concluded May 5 after Delegate Joseph R. Farrington (R Hawaii) entered a final plea for immediate admission of Hawaii to the union. Committee Chairman Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.), who announced final action on both the Hawaii and Alaska statehood bills would be expedited, was also the recipient May 6 of a letter from President Truman urging the Senate to "strengthen the security of our nation" by permitting the entry of the two territories as the 49th and 50th states.

The Senate Interior and Insular Affairs Committee June 28 approved the statehood bills with an eight to two vote in favor of HR 331 to grant statehood to Alaska and nine to one in favor of HR 49 to grant statehood to Hawaii. Hugh Butler (R Neb.) and Guy Cordon (R Ore.) voted against the Alaskan measure and Butler against the Hawaiian statehood bill.

The principal change made by the Senate Committee from the version passed by the House was the amendment proposed by Sen. Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.), Chairman of the Committee, requiring that Alaska and Hawaii write into their constitutions provisions barring any person from public office who advocates the overthrow of the government by force or violence.

Reports

In the formal reports, filed June 29, the Senate group stressed Alaska's strategic position in national defense and mentioned its valuable mineral resources. Hawaii as a state "would make valuable contributions to the Nation and the world," said the report.

Sen. Butler filed a minority report stating Hawaii was "seriously endangered by communism from within", and Hawaiian statehood would "create a grave danger to our national security".

Floor Action

Despite determined efforts of many proponents of Alaska and Hawaii statehood, the bills were not acted on by the Senate. On Aug. 8, the bills were passed over after objections from Pat McCarran (D Nev.) during a call of the Calendar.

The bills were put at the bottom of the "must" calendar Majority Leader Scott W. Lucas (D Ill.) hoped to complete before pre-election adjournment, but neither measure came before the Senate.

However, several Senators made floor speeches urging passage of the statehood measures before the end of the 81st Congress. Among them were O'Mahoney and Warren Magnuson (D Wash.).

Accordingly, the statehood bills were put on the President's list of "must" legislation to receive priority when Congress reconvened Nov. 27 for its "lame duck" session.

But on that day, Southern Democrats, led by Richard B. Russell (D Ga.), made it clear that they would fight the measure — possibly with a filibuster — and Republicans, including Kenneth S. Wherry (R Neb.), Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.) and Hugh Butler (R Neb.) said they would also join the battle.

Parliamentary Tactic

To get the bill before the Senate as the first order of business, it was necessary for Majority Leader Lucas to offer a motion to displace the measure (S 3295) pending at the time of the September recess. (S 3295 concerned the union shop and dues "check off" system in the railroad industry. See Page 281.)

Offered Nov. 27, the Lucas motion was held over until Nov. 28, when debate was opened by O'Mahoney.

"Refusal of statehood to Alaska and Hawaii would prove claims of the Kremlin that the United States is an imperialistic colonial power," O'Mahoney said. "The oriental mind will be convinced that the Kremlin is right."

Sen. Russell countered that if Alaska was in danger of attack this was no time to put it in charge of "a new and untried state government." Sen. John C. Stennis (D Miss.) contended admittance of Alaska would be like giving two Senators "one good county in Minnesota and two in Mississippi." Sen. Butler contended both Alaska and Hawaii were "controlled by radical labor leaders."

Further Opposition

On both Nov. 29 and Nov. 30, the debate continued in the same fashion. Among those entering further opposition to statehood were Sens. John L. McClellan (D Ark.) and Clyde R. Hoey (D N.C.). However, Sen. Spessard L. Holland (D Fla.) joined Sen. Clinton P. Anderson (D N.M.) Nov. 29 in speaking for it.

Nov. 30 Sen. James O. Eastland (D Miss.) blocked a request by O'Mahoney for unanimous consent to a Senate vote on the Lucas motion at 3 p.m. Dec. 4. Lucas made a subsequent effort to reach an agreement on voting on the pending railroad measure and then taking up the statehood bill, but Sen. Lister Hill (D Ala.) raised the point that Sen. William E. Jenner (R Ind.) planned to hook onto the measure a so-called FEPC amendment to prohibit racial and other discrimination in employment anywhere, a motion sure to arouse further "extended" debate.

Filibuster Charged

This brought deploring comment from O'Mahoney that a "full-scale filibuster" confronted the measures.

But debate continued. Sen. Guy Cordon (R Ore.) Dec. 1 charged that Democratic leaders failed to take advantage of an opportunity to bring to a vote at the regular session and were making "little more than a gesture" to rescue them at the "lame duck" session.

Sen. Wayne Morse (R Ore.), member of a Senate Preparedness Subcommittee which had held hearings in Alaska, said the granting of statehood was "vital to the security and defense of my country".

"American citizens living in Alaska are entitled to adequate defense and a voice in the government," Morse told the Senate.

Sen. Zales N. Ecton (R Mont.) told the Senate Alaska should be made a state because it was the "hub to the proper defense of the American continent" and the "key to peace in the world".

Delegate Farrington declared Dec. 2, that less than 20 Senators were involved in what he called "filibuster tactics" and that he was convinced the Senate would pass both the Alaska and Hawaii statehood bills if they were permitted to come to a vote.

But the debate failed to clear the ground for a vote on the Lucas displacement motion, and the Majority Leader on Dec. 4 withdrew his proposal altogether. In effect, this was a surrender of hopes to get final action on the statehood legislation.

LOBBY STANDS

In addition to pleas for statehood from the Alaska and Hawaii Statehood Commissions, the Hawaii State Constitutional Convention, Territorial legislators, and attorneys, businessmen, and other residents of Alaska and Hawaii, many other groups contacted the Senate Committee studying statehood bills.

Groups specifically urging statehood for both Alaska and Hawaii included:

National Grange, American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars, American Veterans of World War II, Chamber of Commerce of the U. S., National Association of Attorneys General, Railway Labor Executives' Association, and American Civil Liberties Union.

Arguments for Hawaiian statehood came from spokesmen of:

Hawaiian Fruit Packers, Ltd., Hawaiian Sugar Planters Association, Bar Association of Hawaii, Hawaiian Government Employes' Association, Japanese American Citizens League, Hawaiian Pineapple Co.

Others urging Hawaii statehood were:

National Association of Real Estate Boards, National Education Association, International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union, Disabled American Veterans, Baptists of the United States, Council for Social Action of the Congregational Christian Churches, Women's Division of the Methodist Church Board of Missions. Young Men's Christian Association of Honolulu, and Young Women's Christian Association of the U. S.

Alaskan statehood was urged by spokesmen of:

Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, American Federation of Labor, Congress of Industrial Organizations, General Federation of Women's Clubs and Board of National Missions of the Presbyterian Church, also:

Chamber of Commerce, Anchorage, Alaska Territorial Federation of Labor, and Business and Professional Women's Club, Anchorage.

Principal opponent to HR 331, saying Alaska was not ready for statehood, was the Alaska Salmon Industry, Inc., a trade association.

Lobby Reports

Two groups registered under the lobby act on behalf of statehood bills. They were:

Alaska Statehood Committee, Juneau, represented by Randolph Feltus, public relations counsel, New York City. At the time he filed May 2, Feltus stated his compensation had not been determined, but would be a monthly retainer.

Hawaii Statehood Commission, Honolulu, represented by Ex-Sen. Edward R. Burke (D Neb.), who registered in 1949. He gave his salary as $5,000 yearly.

In addition, Rear Admiral Ralph F. Wood, U.S.N. (retired) filed a financial statement for his client, Alaska Salmon Industry, Inc., Seattle. Expenditures in the report, covering the first quarter of 1950, were $992.26 for travel, food, lodging, and entertainment. Wood, a real estate broker, of Borrego Springs, Calif., listed his specific legislative interest as Alaska statehood.

Also filing a financial statement under the lobbying act was W. C. Arnold, Seattle, managing director of the Alaska Salmon Industry. Arnold said less than 5 per cent of his time was spent on legislation. The Congressional Record abstract of his reports covering the first six months of 1950 carried no dollar figure on his spending.

Ban on Gaming Data

S 3358

The Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee approved May 26, 1950, a bill (S 3358) to suppress interstate transmission of certain gambling information. Although lengthy hearings were held on the bill, the measure was not acted on by the Senate.

Purpose of the bill was "to assist the various states, territories and possessions of the United States and the District of Columbia in the enforcement of their laws pertaining to gambling, bookmaking and like offenses and to aid in the suppression of organized gambling activities." The Federal Communications Commission would be authorized to carry out provisions of the bill.

Bill By Johnson

The bill was introduced by Chairman Edwin C. Johnson (D Colo.) April 4 at the request of the Attorney General. The bill grew out of recommendations made in Washington Feb. 15 by the Attorney General's Conference on Organized Crime, which was attended by state, federal and local law officers from all over the nation.

The bill was designed to prevent or retard transmission of certain gambling information relating to sporting events to persons who would use it for illegal purposes.

Hearing

Opening hearings on S 3358 before a Commerce Subcommittee, Attorney General J. Howard McGrath explained April 17 that the bill would lift the immunity previously claimed from certain state and local laws by gamblers who have asserted their operations are interstate, and thus subject only to federal control. Said McGrath: "It is proposed by this bill that the federal government give aid to the states in the enforcement of their laws and policies by guarding the channels of interstate communication against their use for gambling purposes, through the exercise of the federal regulatory power. In this regard, the power of Congress is complete."

McGrath said the FCC would not take on the "larger job of local law enforcement against gambling and gamblers," which did not lie within its province. What did, he said, was power to prevent the abuse of interstate communication by persons using it for gambling purposes. He denied newspapers would be affected. He said the one-hour time lag the bill would require between the end of a particular horse race and transmission of the results would not impair freedom of the press. The bill's one-hour ban on use of ciruits even by newspapers to get a late race result was drafted "so as to destroy its usefulness for gambling purposes without losing its value as news."

McGrath also testified that big-time gamblers apparently had moved into amateur and professional sports with large-scale operations and he said passage of the bill would, particularly, "take the big profit out of bookmaking." James M. McInerney, head of the Justice Department's criminal division, expressed the view that banning of racing scratch sheets and the Daily Racing Form, which he said he was able to get at any Washington, D. C., newstand, would be "another step in the harassment of gambling operations."

Municipal Witnesses

The Subcommittee, headed by Ernest W. McFarland (D Ariz.), took testimony April 20 and 21 from a long list of city and state officials, including several mayors, who urged federal assistance in curbing rackets and crimes growing out of nation-wide betting on horse races.

Miami's Mayor William Wolfarth April 21 warned that the gambling problem was "far more serious than the problem which precipitated federal action against kidnapping and racketeering in the early '30s." Mayor De Lesseps Morrison, of New Orleans, said the American Municipal Association, of which he was immediate past president, was principally concerned over the horsebetting problem because their efforts at law enforcement were hampered by the presence of wire service distributors just outside the city limits who provided telephone relay service to bookies operating on a sneak basis in their cities.

Maj. Gen. William A. Worton, Marine Corps, retired, Los Angeles Chief of Police, said the existence of a nation-wide gambling news service was to blame for gang warfare and police corruption. He named "the Continental Press — they're the people corrupting police departments throughout the country." Earlier, Mayor Morrison quoted "various competent authorities" as saying the "Continental Press Service" of Cleveland was "dominated by the heirs of the Capone gang."

Capt. Lynn White, of the Los Angeles police force, described underworld operations of horsebetting, including what he called the "package sale" by distributors of the Continental Press Service, of Chicago, which he said supplied most of the "flash" information on horse races.

Mayor Fletcher Bowron, of Los Angeles, complained that California judges were inclined to take gambling arrests very lightly with the result that arrested gamblers paid small fines and very seldom got jail sentences. The judges, he testified, said they were tired of dealing with "peanut" offenders but the small-time operators were the only ones police could get their hands on. He estimated that at least a thousand runners for bookmakers were operating in Los Angeles.

Thomas F. Kelley, general manager of the Continental Press Service, April 22 asked for an opportunity to testify before the Subcommittee "to refute the slanderous and libelous statements which have been made with respect to our organization." McFarland said he would be invited to appear.

Bookmaker Testifies

James J. Carroll, St. Louis "betting commissioner" said that so-called "betting commissioners" and bookmakers operated as independent businessmen and he contended it was a matter of "complete indifference" to him what, if any legislation, was passed in an effort to block gambling. He insisted, moreover, there was no connection between big-time gamblers and crime. Big betting, Carroll said, was conducted on a "purely competitive" basis with no relationship between the "businessmen" in various cities who conducted it. As a bookmaker, he said, he was not at all dependent on the race wire news services, but said he did subscribe to Pioneer News, identified by the FCC as the outlet in St. Louis for Continental Press.

Disagreement developed between the Justice Department and the Federal Communications Commission over the bill and Chairman McFarland said a compromise anti-gambling measure, embodying ideas "from both Justice and the FCC" would be drafted.

Drawn in its original form by the Justice Department, the measure was characterized April 24 by FCC Chairman Wayne Coy as so vague in its definition of gambling data that it could "only lead to confusion, evasion, and, in all probability, failure of the law to achieve its objectives." The Justice bill put the burden of anti-transmission enforcement on the FCC through its existing controls over radio, telephone and telegraph concerns. Coy said the FCC was not shirking any responsibility but felt that under such a procedure the Commission "would become hopelessly involved in long drawn-out investigatory procedures" to determine coverage of the law and thus defeat its real purpose.

The FCC measure, he explained, would strike at the heart of the bookmaking business by limiting its ban to interstate transmission of information on bets or wagers, the odds on any sporting event and the prices paid by the winners for any purposes whatever, including publication in a bona fide newspaper. Homer E. Capehart (R Ind.) endorsed Coy's proposal, as opposed to the Justice Department's.

New Bill

The bill was completely rewritten and then given unanimous approval by the Committee May 26.

Under terms of the final bill, illegal "gambling information" would be defined as: bets or wagers, scratches, jockey changes, weights, probable winners, betting odds and odds changes transmitted before a race has started. Once the race was run, then the information could be printed or broadcast. Radio and television would be permitted to broadcast or televise a horse race, but could not give the so-called gambling information prior to the start of a race.

In a statement explaining the bill, McFarland, chairman of the Subcommittee which held hearings on it, said the measure would permit "legitimate" newspapers and radio stations to publish or broadcast "most" of the racing information they now do. He said testimony before his subcommittee clearly had indicated "that rapid dissemination of certain information prior to a race is an essential element of large-scale bookmaking."

As an added precaution against the transmission of gambling information, the bill would require the telegraph and telephone companies to keep a list of all terminal points of circuits "leased or otherwise furnished for the transmission in interstate or foreign commerce of news or other information pertaining to sporting events or contests."

Although favorably reported May 26, the legislation received no further action in the Senate.

Congress approved a bill (S 456) to authorize construction of a second airport for Washington, D. C. The President signed the measure Sept. 7, and it became Public Law No. 762.

The bill was introduced Jan. 13, 1949, by Sen. Edwin C. Johnson (D Colo.), chairman of the Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee. Johnson's group considered the bill in closed session Feb. 8, 1950. Several minor amendments were added, and it was then reported favorably Feb. 10.

The Committee said a new airport was needed to relieve congestion at Washington's principal National Airport. Expansion at National, the Committee pointed out, was blocked by the Potomac River. Cost of a new field was estimated at $14 million, but no figure was included in the bill.

The Senate took up the bill April 19. An amendment by Ernest W. McFarland (D Ariz.) to set a cost ceiling of $14 million on the project was approved on voice vote. The bill passed on voice vote. There was no debate.

A companion bill (HR 7241) had been introduced in the House by Oren Harris (D Ark.), on Feb. 9, 1950. The House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee held hearings on the Harris and Johnson bills May 18, 19, June 30 and July 7. Representatives of several governmental departments testified as to the necessity of a new airport at Washington.

The Committee approved the Senate - passed measure with minor technical amendments Aug. 7. The House took up the measure Aug. 24. Several Maryland Representatives suggested that the new Friendship International Airport at Baltimore could be used instead of a second Washington airport. Other Representatives said Friendship Airport was too far from Washington.

John W. Byrnes (R Wis.) moved to send the bill back to the Commerce Committee for further study. His motion was put over until Aug. 25, when it was rejected on roll call vote 124-226. The bill was then passed on voice vote. (See page 560.)

The Senate agreed on voice vote to the House amendments Aug. 28.

Apprentice Examinations

HR 7185, S 3050

The House in 1950 approved a bill (HR 7185) to make all appointments to the position of "apprentice" subject to a competitive civil service examination open to veterans only. The Senate considered a similar bill (S 3050) but did not complete action on it.

The House bill was introduced by Robert L. Ramsay (D W. Va.) Feb. 7. Olin D. Johnson (D S.C.) introduced the companion measure in the Senate Feb. 16. Both bills specified that the position of apprentice should be added to those of guard, elevator operator, messenger and custodian, all of which were open only to veterans as long as qualified veterans were available. The bills further specified that the position of apprentice should be filled by competitive examination on a nation-wide basis.

Committee

The House Post Office and Civil Service Committee held hearings on the bill March 10. It was endorsed by the American Federation of Labor, Disabled American Veterans, Veterans of Foreign Wars and American Federation of Government Employees. The United Public Workers of America opposed it.

The bill was approved March 13 by the Post Office Committee, which wrote in an amendment making HR 7185 retroactive to March 1. The Committee report said the measure was necessary because the Department of the Treasury had announced that examinations were to be held March 15 for the positions of apprentice plate printer in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. The examination was designated as "promotional" and was confined to eligible employees of the Bureau of Engraving.

The Committee report said the examination should be open to all qualified persons in the United States. It noted that HR 7185 has been changed so that, if passed, it would be retroactive to March 1. (This would have meant that the March 15 Treasury examination would be nullified, since that exam would have been given only to eligible Bureau of Engraving employees, and not thrown open to all qualified persons in the U. S.)

Senate Committee Action

The Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee did not hold hearings on the measure. Instead, the House hearings were cited in the formal report of approval, and the bill was endorsed without the retroactive feature.

A minority report was introduced by Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) charging that the bill was discriminatory against Negroes. Humphrey cited letters opposing the bill (written after the Senate Committee had acted) from the Bureau of the Budget and the Civil Commission.

The letters said that the positions of apprentice plate printer had always been closed to Negroes, but that one-half of the men qualified for the announced exam had been Negroes. If the bill were to pass and the examination, which was held as announced, was to to be invalidated, the qualified Negroes would be shunted aside according to the letters. The letters emphasized that the position of apprentice plate printer was considered promotional and that under accepted administrative practice, only qualified persons within the agency were given a chance at the job.

Floor Action

The House took up its bill May 1. Ramsay, author of the bill, said he thought it was wrong to "limit employment in any government department to only those who are now enrolled in that department, even if such practice is or ever was approved."

Vito Marcantonio (ALP N.Y.) charged the bill "concealed the ugly fact" that it was an attempt to maintain skilled engraving jobs as a "lily-white branch of the government." He pointed out the bill made retroactive to March 1 the requirement that all apprentice jobs be filled by open competition. He told the House the Bureau of Printing and Engraving had been ordered by the Fair Employment Board of the Civil Service Commission to hold the promotional examination exclusively for Bureau employees, and to admit Negroes as applicants. This order was given, he contended, after eligible Negroes convinced the FEB they had been systematically barred from government printing jobs. Several Negroes qualified for these jobs for the first time after the March 15 examination. But, he pointed out, this would be nullified by the bill's retroactive clause.

William L. Dawson (D Ill.) sided with Marcantonio. "Is it not passing strange," he asked, "that promotional examinations have been held all these years and we did not need to come to the Congress to pass such a law as this?"

Chairman Tom Murray (D Tenn.), of the Post Office and Civil Service Committee which drafted the bill, declared, "This racial question has not one solitary thing to do with this bill... This so-called promotional examination is nothing in the world but a closed-family examination held because of the objection to an open competitive examination by this left-wing radical group, the United Public Workers of America."

The House then went on to approve the bill on roll-call vote 209-93. (see P. 356.)

The Senate did not consider the Johnston version of the bill.

Restore Full Postal Service

HR 8195, S 3560

SUMMARY

The House of Representatives Aug. 16 passed a bill (HR 8195) to restore some postal services eliminated by the Postmaster General. However, the measure and a Senate bill (S 3560), which won Committee approval, both were on the Senate calendar when the 81st Congress adjourned. Neither became public law.

Curtailment of delivery, window and some other mail services was ordered under an April 18 directive of Postmaster General Jesse M. Donaldson. He said the cuts were necessary to permit the Department to operate within funds available, as it was required to do.

The bill, intended to rescind the order and restore the service, caused turmoil in the House.

Pigeon-holed by the Rules Committee, it was forced out after the House Aug. 14 approved a discharge petition sponsored by Rep. John R. Walsh (D Ind.) 249 to 81. Six of the 218 members who signed the petition ultimately voted against passing the bill, however.

The discharge resolution specified that only Walsh could call up the legislation. But the legislator was away from the capital when action on it impended. Located in Wisconsin, Walsh flew to Washington just in time to call his resolution up for House consideration Aug. 15. On the floor, Chairman Tom Murray (D Tenn.) of the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee, which had reported HR 8195 favorably on a 12-8 vote, termed it "outrageous" legislation, prompted by political expediency.

After three hours of debate Aug. 15, the House passed the bill by a vote of 264 to 108 on Aug. 16. Before voting on passage of the bill the House rejected a motion to recommit, 111 to 261. (See page 546 for votes.)

BACKGROUND

Economy directives by Postmaster General Jesse M. Donaldson led to the introduction of House and Senate bills (HR 8195 and S 3560) to restore the postal services which Donaldson had eliminated.

Entitled "Readjustments of Service", Donaldson's order No. 42946 appeared in the Postal Bulletin of April 18, 1950. In it Donaldson said he had "repeatedly recommended an upward revision of the rate structure" and listed the Department's operating deficit for fiscal 1949 as $551,129,528. Audited revenues for that year were listed as $1,571,851,202 and payments and unpaid obligations as $2,122,980,730.

The directive said readjustments would be outlined in special orders issued by the operating bureaus and that the public should be given ample notice of changes in services. Provisions of the directive were to be in full operation by July 1.

In part, curtailments included a cut in residential mail deliveries to one a day, curtailment of collections from boxes so that the last would reach post offices by 8:30 p. m., reduction by one delivery on Saturdays of service to some business districts, closing post office windows at 6 p. m. and discontinuance of directory service for first-class mail improperly addressed.

Legislation to increase postal revenue was before Congress when the economy order was issued. (See page 427.)

Sen. John J. Williams (R Del.) told the Senate April 6, 1950, that twice-a-day deliveries of mail had been made in cities over 10,000 for more than 40 years. Williams declared the "proposal to lay off 8,000 letter carriers accompanied by a 50 per cent reduction in service would mean a saving of around $25 million annually". He suggested that 60 000 "nonessential white-collar employees" be removed instead.

HOUSE

Committee

The House Post Office and Civil Service Committee June 19 reported favorably a bill (HR 8195) to rescind the order of the Postmaster General curtailing postal services.

In its report, the Committee said there was a division of opinion on its decision to report the bill without holding hearings, and that the vote recommending the bill was 12 to 8.

Members who favored reporting the bill without hearings, the report said, felt the Committee "was fully apprised of the views of the Postmaster General, the employee organizations, and of the public, and that hearings would be unnecessary".

Five reasons were advanced by those who opposed recommending the legislation without hearings: (1.) Action should be withheld until Congress had passed the 1951 appropriation bill; (2.) the service reduction was primarily a matter of appropriations and the House already had acted on the bill containing the limitation which necessitated the curtailed postal service; (3.) the House had specifically turned down a special appropriation of funds which would have permitted maintenance of service without curtailment; (4.) the action of the Postmaster General in adjusting service was administrative and within his authority, and he was entitled to a hearing on legislation to rescind his order; and (5.) by prohibiting by law curtailment of certain services, other essential postal service such as rural deliveries might have to be curtailed if funds were not provided.

Floor Action

Although HR 8195 had been approved by the House Post Office Committee, the House Rules Committee refused to clear it to the floor of the House for formal consideration. After the bill had languished in the Rules group for some weeks, Rep. John R. Walsh (D Ind.) secured 218 signatures on a discharge petition which, under House rules, forces a measure out of the Rules Committee's jurisdiction — if the discharge petition is approved by the full House.

On Aug. 14, the House turned to Walsh's discharge petition, and a parliamentary tangle developed. Chairman Tom Murray (D Tenn.) of the House Post Office group moved that the House adjourn. But the House refused to do this on a 48-274 record vote.

Discharge Petition Approved

Then the House adopted the Walsh discharge petition and followed by approving a resolution, on voice vote, making the bill the first order of business the next day.

The resolution however, specified Walsh as the only one who could call up the legislation — and Walsh was in Green Bay, Wis., to make an appearance on Town Meeting of the Air, a radio program. His absence, it was explained, would require repetition of the whole cumbersome procedure, unless the Rules Committee relented. The latter possibility was held unlikely.

Tracked down by a Wisconsin state police officer, Walsh, a freshman Congressman, was informed of the situation. He immediately emplaned for Washington and arrived Aug. 15 at 2:15 p. m., two hours and 15 minutes tardy, but not too late. The House had been waiting for him since it convened at noon.

Walsh promptly called up HR 8195, and later explained that he hadn't known he had to be present in person and, therefore, had obtained a "live pair" for the bill and left town to keep his radio commitment. (For explanation of a "pair" see p. 18). As for the bill itself, he said mail service since the curtailment order had been inefficient and "a hit-and-miss proposition."

After completing his remarks, Walsh hastened to catch a plane back to Green Bay to keep his radio appointment that night.

Thornberry Amendment

After three hours of debate Aug. 15, the House approved an amendment by Homer Thornberry (D Tex.) but postponed a final vote until the next day. The Thornberry amendment was designed to prevent the Postmaster General from curtailing any other "essential" postal services in place of those the bill ordered him to restore, and to authorize appropriation of sufficient funds to reinstate the curtailed services.

But on Aug. 16, the House changed its mind and voted, 159 to 213, against the Thornberry proposal.

The House then rejected 111-261 a motion by Robert Rich (R Pa.) to recommit the bill. The vote on final passage of the measure was then taken, and the bill was approved 264-108 on a roll-call ballot. (For votes, see page 546.)

Six of the 218 members who signed the discharge petition that forced the bill to a House vote voted against it on final passage. They were Jack Z. Anderson (R Calif.), Frank W. Boykin (D Ala.), Norris Cotton (R N.H.), Ben F. Guill (R Tex.), Foster Furcolo (D Mass.) and Joseph P. O'Hara (R Minn.). The bill's author, James H. Morrison (D La.) was absent. He, like Walsh, was paired in favor of the bill.

SENATE

Hearings

At hearings held April 25 and May 9, the Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee heard four witnesses on a bill (S 3560) to rescind an order of the Postmaster General curtailing certain postal service. This was a companion measure to HR 8195.

The Committee heard Jesse M. Donaldson, Postmaster General, defend his order April 25. At the May 9 hearing it heard three representatives of postal workers' groups.

Donaldson said the order "was not for the purpose of bringing any pressure on this Committee or any other committee in the Congress". He said the omnibus appropriation bill reiterated a long - standing law that no official could obligate an expenditure in excess of an appropriation and "in order to bring this in line with the amount of money that is contained in the appropriations bill, I have had to order these curtailments."

Curtailed schedules were followed during the war and during the last quarter of fiscal 1947 because of lack of funds, Donaldson said. "We did not get too much protest from the public," he said.

The Postmaster General said the effect of the order was much misrepresented in the press, and that he had made no estimate of the number of temporary employees who would be eliminated or of the possible saving. He said regular employees might be transferred, but would not lose their jobs and, under questioning, said that if 10,000 temporary employees were lopped off the saving would be about $20 million. Donaldson and Committee members referred frequently to efforts to get additional funds for the postal service or to revise rates.

Employees Groups

Principal witness for the postal workers' groups was William C. Doherty, president of the National Association of Letter Carriers. Doherty said he favored immediate action on two bills and a resolution, all seeking recission of the curtailment order.

Doherty vigorously attacked the curtailment orders, which he said "will result in irreparable damage and destruction of our fine postal system". He declared that "one-trip routes are not efficient units nor are they economical — but they are inhumane.

XUM

To keep a letter carrier on his route six hours or more without an opportunity to eat or relax even slightly definitely belongs to the Dark Ages. It is beneath all human dignity to expect a letter carrier to eat his cold lunch at the corner relay or storage box, sitting on a curbstone without regard to the weather or other elements. It is equally beneath human dignity to fail to provide for other human necessities such as toilet facilities."

Doherty submitted two photographs of carriers eating their lunches while seated on curbs and said no eating facilities were available in areas they served. He submitted tables purporting to show that the Post Office Department pays more than two - thirds of its own way, while Labor, Interior, Commerce and Agriculture Departments do not.

Brief statements were made by Jesse V. Horton, first vice - president of the National Association of Postal Supervisors, and E. C. Hallbeck, legislative representative of the National Association of Post Office Clerks.

Committee

Declaring that "in the opinion of the Committee, the (Donaldson) order was unnecessary and the serious effect on the postal service by reason of this order and the incident laying off of temporary postal employees could have been avoided," the Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee May 10 recommended passage of its bill to rescind the order.

The Committee said that in favorably reporting S 3560 it "took into consideration that the Appropriations Committee of the House had made certain reductions in the appropriations for the Post Office Department for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1950, and attached certain restrictions against exceeding a fixed amount in postal expenditures, but the Committee takes the position that the Post Office Department, before taking such drastic action, should have waited until action was taken by the Senate Committee on Appropriations. In answer to this the Postmaster General stated that to do so would not leave sufficient time to adjust the service prior to July 1, 1950".

At the session's end, the Committee - approved bill and a House - passed measure to rescind the order both were on the Senate calendar awaiting action.

Lee Case

Michael E. Lee, chief of the Far Eastern Branch, Areas Division, Office of International Trade of the Department of Commerce, was the subject in 1950 of a protracted investigation by the Senate Commerce Committee. The group looked into Lee's loyalty after Sen. George Malone (R Nev.) repeatedly accused the official of being a poor security risk. Malone said Lee was in a position to hamper U. S. resistance to commercial intercourse with Communist China.

The Senate Committee held hearings on Lee in March and April. Although Malone kept up his charges against Lee, Department of Commerce officials staunchly defended his loyalty. On April 10, Secretary of Commerce Charles Sawyer personally went before the Senators to testify that a new loyalty check on Lee had put him in the clear.

Sawyer Statement

However, before the Senate Committee had reported its own views on Lee, Sawyer on May 27 announced that he had asked for Lee's resignation in the interests of "good administration." Sawyer said this should not reflect on Lee's loyalty. But the latter refused to resign "under fire."

On Nov. 14, another loyalty check on Lee produced a finding that the official was disloyal. But Sawyer reversed this finding on Nov. 15, and so notified Lee in a letter. Lee said that since his loyalty had thus been affirmed, he would resign. A few hours after Lee had done this, Sawyer disclosed that although he had overruled the "disloyalty" finding of the loyalty checking group, he considered Lee a "poor security risk" and intended firing him on that ground.

Blackney's Seat

H RES 503

By voice vote on May 23, the House passed a resolution (H Res 503) sustaining the right of Rep. William W. Blackney (R Mich.) to hold his seat. Blackney's place had been challenged by George D. Stevens, a Flint, Mich., Democrat, who contested the validity of Blackney's election in 1948. Blackney had defeated Stevens by 784 at that time.

The House action followed rejection of a motion by Rep. Anthony Cavalcante (D Pa.) to recommit the resolution for further investigation.

The House Committee on Administration had dismissed Steven's charges as "lacking in merit" on March 14, although Cavalcante and Wayne L. Hays (D Ohio) dissented in a minority report which asserted the dispute "involved the dignity of the great state of Michigan."

Cavalcante and Hays had also voted against Blackney on Feb. 8, when the House group had earlier sustained him on a 12-2 Committee vote.

Christoffel Case

Nine Congressmen went to U. S. District Court in Washington on Feb. 2, 1950, to depose that a quorum of the House Education and Labor Committee had, in fact, been present at a March 1, 1947, hearing at which Harold R. Christoffel, former union leader, denied under oath that he had ever been a Communist.

The reason for the lawmakers' statements was that Christoffel had been convicted in 1948 of lying in his denial of Communist ties — only to have the Supreme Court overturn the conviction on the grounds that a quorum of the House group had not been present.

The Congressmen deposing to the contrary in 1950 were Reps. John Lesinski (D Mich.), O. C. Fisher (D Tex.), John F. Kennedy (D Mass.), Ralph Gwinn (R N.Y.), Richard M. Nixon (R Calif.), Wint Smith (R Kan.), Carroll D. Kearns (R Pa.), Clare Hoffman (R Mich.) and Walter E. Brehm (R Ohio). All had been members of the 1947 House Committee.

Their testimony in 1950, together with similar statements from five persons who had been Congressmen on the Committee in 1947, helped cause the jury at Christoffel's second trial to convict him of perjury once again. Convicted Feb. 23, Christoffel was sentenced to from two to six years imprisonment on March 14.

In connection with the second trial of the former CIO leader at the Allis-Chalmers plant in Milwaukee, the House voted several times against submitting to the Court the minutes kept by the House Committee during the particular hearing in question. It was later stated, however, that no minutes had been kept.

Equal Rights Amendment

S J Res 25

SUMMARY

Equality of rights for women was approved by the Senate Jan. 25 in a proposed Constitutional amendment the upper chamber endorsed by a vote of 63 to 19—with 8 more "ayes" than the required two-thirds majority. Attached also was a rider retaining protective laws, state and federal, for women.

This was a Constitutional amendment which has been hanging fire in Congress for more than 25 years. It was first introduced in 1923 and has been reintroduced in each succeeding Congress, but it was to no avail until 1946. On July 19 of that year the Senate voted for the proposed amendment by a vote of 38-35, but it was defeated because it lacked the necessary two-thirds majority.

Although the Senate reversed itself in 1950, the switch was to no avail. The House failed to act upon the proposal. And even if the lower chamber had approved it, three fourths of the States would have had to ratify the proposal before it could have taken effect as a Constitutional amendment.

Provisions

The text of S J Res 25 in its entirety was:

"Equality of rights under the law shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of sex.

"Congress and the several States shall have power, within their respective jurisdictions, to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

"This amendment shall take effect one year after the date of ratification."

Party Stands

Democratic 1948 Platform: "We recommend to Congress the submission of a Constitutional amendment on equal rights for women."

Republican 1948 Platform: "We recommend to Congress the submission of a Constitutional amendment providing equal rights for women."

BACKGROUND

On July 19, 1848, a small but determined group of women met at Seneca Falls, N. Y., to hold a "Woman's Rights Convention" and to present a "Declaration of Sentiments." Their demands: Equal opportunity in education, religion and the professions. They wanted laws permitting them to manage their own business affairs. They wanted equal guardianship over their children. They wanted to be citizens on an equal footing with men. Their greatest victory was achieved in 1920 when the 19th amendment giving women the right to vote was ratified and became law.

Shortly after the ratification in 1920 of the 19th amendment to the Constitution giving women the right to vote, the National Woman's Party set about securing another amendment sweeping away all remaining discriminations in the law because of sex. This proposal has come to be known as the "equal rights amendment."

The equal rights amendment was first introduced in Congress in 1923 by Sen. Charles E. Curtis (R Kan.), later Vice President during the Hoover administration, and by Rep. Daniel R. Anthony (R Kan.), a nephew of Susan B. Anthony, the suffrage leader. (S J Res 21 and H J Res 75, 68th Congress). No action was taken on the original measures. In 1938 the Senate Judiciary Committee for the first time reported S J Res 1, 75th Congress, and the House Judiciary Committee for the first time in 1945 reported H J Res 49 (79th Congress). In each instance no further action was taken by either House. In 1946 the Senate voted for the proposed amendment (S J Res 61, 79th Congress) by a vote of 38-35, but it was defeated because it lacked the necessary two-thirds majority for a constitutional amendment.

First recognition to the equal rights proposal by a national party came in 1940 when the Republicans inserted it as a plank in the party platform. Both the Republicans and Democrats inserted equal rights planks in their 1944 and 1948 platforms. The Progressive party platform also carried an equal rights plank in 1948.

During the 80th Congress the Senate Judiciary Committee approved S J Res 76 and the House Judiciary Committee approved H J Res 62. Early in the first session of the 81st Congress S J Res 25 was introduced on Jan. 13, 1949 by Sen. Guy M. Gillette (D Iowa), and 32 co-sponsors and a similar resolution, H J Res 68 was offered by Rep. Katherine St. George (R N.Y.).

33 Senate Sponsors

Sen. Gillette's co-sponsors were Democratic Senators Robert Kerr (Okla.), J. Allen Frear (Del.), J. William Fulbright (Ark.), Millard Tydings (Md.), Claude Pepper (Fla.), Joseph C. O'Mahoney (Wyo.), Francis Myers (Pa.), Herbert R. O'Conor (Md.), John L. McClellan (Ark.), Bert Miller (Idaho), Lester C. Hunt (Wyo.), J. Melville Broughton (N.C.), Sheridan Downey (Calif.) and Dennis Chavez (N.M); and

Republican Senators William Knowland (Calif.), William Langer (N.D.), Alexander Wiley (Wis.), Bourke Hickenlooper (Iowa), H. Alexander Smith (N.J.), Clyde M. Reed (Kan.), Hugh Butler (Neb.), Homer Ferguson (Mich.), Andrew F. Schoeppel (Kan.), Ralph Flanders (Vt.), Harry Cain (Wash.), Homer Capehart (Ind.), Robert C. Hendrickson (N.J.), Milton R. Young (N.D.), Edward Martin (Pa.), George Malone (Nev.), Arthur Watkins (Utah) and Edward Thye (Minn.)

Their measure was referred to the Senate Judiciary Committee, which favorably reported it March 22, 1949. It was entered on the Senate calendar, but received no action during the remainder of the 81st Congress' first session.

Debate

The Senate took up S J Res 25 on Jan. 23. In the debate that followed, these were some of the arguments used by Senators who favored the so-called "equal rights" amendment:

1. The equal rights amendment ought to be incorporated into the Constitution to bring it into accord with the Charter and other documents of the United Nations, which the United States has ratified without reservation, and which provide for the promotion of human rights without distinction as to sex.

2. The area of discrimination against women is far greater than the area of protection of women. In fact, some so-called protective legislation, such as prohibiting the employment of women at night, cuts out employment opportunities for many women.

3. The equal rights amendment would have no effect at all on legislation in the welfare field which is based on need, not on sex, such as paying compensation to widows of veterans with minor children.

4. Women are not mentioned in the Constitution, except in the 19th amendment. The ratification of the equal rights amendment would give them constitutional equality, would psychologically affect their development as individuals, and would insure that in the future governmental attempts (by the states and federal government) to submerge women could not stand.

5. Removal of discriminations state by state is a long process and does not provide the over-all protection of Federal legislation.

6. If protective legislation is necessary, it should be extended to include all workers, not merely women. Protection of workers' safety and welfare is also a problem for labor unions to handle.

Arguments Against

Arguments made against the proposed amendment were that:

1. The amendment was ambiguous, and therefore it could not be known in advance of interpretation by the Supreme Court what its effect would be upon legislation. This ambiguity could cause easy evasion.

2. It would introduce wholesale confusion in laws affecting family status and property rights, and it would stir up multiple litigation to determine the validity of existing laws.

3. It dealt with complex relationships in terms of a single abstraction. Most laws differentiating between men and women do so on the basis of their relationship as members of the family, as wage-earners, or on the basis of physical differences.

4. State constitutional amendments and laws that are claimed to provide equality cannot be cited to prove what will be the effect of a constitutional amendment. No state law is identical in language to the equal rights amendment; most are of recent origin and have not, as yet, been interpreted by the courts.

5. Pressure for the amendment came from minority groups which did not represent the views of the bulk of the citizens. The mere fact that the legislation has long been before Congress did not, therefore, prove that there is widespread support for it.

6. It would invalidate protective labor legislation necessary for the health, safety, economic status, and general welfare of women.

Principal Speakers

Sen. Margaret Chase Smith (R Maine), who rarely speaks in the Senate, and who later voted for final passage of the measure, said: "Women are as subject as men to the old saying, 'you can't have your cake and eat it too' . . . There is no priority of either women or men. It is time to quit thinking of women as second-class citizens."

Sens. Claude Pepper (D Fla.) and Herbert R. O'Conor (D Md.) called the amendment an example of simple justice long overdue. Sen. Irving Ives (R N.Y.) said the states should have an opportunity to vote on "this vital and far-reaching issue." Others who supported enactment during the Senate debate were Sens. Alexander Wiley (R Wis.), William Langer (R N.D.), Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.), Lester C. Hunt (D Wyo.), Robert C. Hendrickson (R N.J.), Andrew F. Schoeppel (R Kan.), and Harry P. Cain (R Wash.).

Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.) stated that the unmodified amendment would, if ratified, nullify the white slave act and rape laws; permit a husband to sue his wife for nonsupport; and would sweep aside dower rights and other widow's rights, and protective labor laws.

Sen. Herbert H. Lehman (D N.Y.) stated: "I know of no state in the Union in which women suffer political disabilities at the present time. In my opinion the joint resolution confers absolutely no additional rights of any kind upon women . . . I am convinced . . . protection of the rights of women will be placed in jeopardy if the resolution is passed." Sen. Richard B. Russell (D Ga.) regarded the amendment as a "Pandora's box" which would cause "inestimable harm" to protective legislation now in effect which covers women.

Voting on Amendments

On Jan. 25, the Senate started voting on amendments to the pending measure. The Senate accepted, 51 to 31, a rider by Carl Hayden (D Ariz.) which would safeguard rights, benefits, or exemptions conferred on women by state or federal law. It rejected a proposal, in the nature of a substitute by Kefauver and others, which would have established a "Commission on the Legal Status of Women" directed to make a study of the status of women and recommend legislation on the subject. The vote on this was 18 to 65. Prior to the vote, Vice President Alben W. Barkley ruled down a point of order raised by Gillette against the substitute. Gillette held it was not germane.

Final Action

After approving the Hayden amendment and disposing of two other proposals, the Senate approved S J Res 25 by a roll-call vote of 63-19 on Jan. 25. The total vote in favor included eight more ballots than the two-thirds majority required.

As passed and sent to the House, S J Res 25 was endorsed over the strong opposition offered by a Democratic coalition of such men as Richard B. Russell (D Ga.), Herbert H. Lehman (D N.Y.), Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.), James E. Murray (D Mont.). All opponents on the final vote were Democrats, with 30 Democrats and 33 Republicans favoring the proposal.

A comparison of the vote on S J Res 25 with that of 1946 shows that there were seven switches by Senators who voted against it that year, but put themselves on the favoring side in 1950. One Senator, Pat McCarran (D Nev.) voted for it in 1946, against it later. Those who switched from the negative to the positive were: Owen Brewster (R Maine), Forrest C. Donnell (R Mo.), Sheridan Downey (D Calif.), Clyde R. Hoey (D N.C.), Eugene D. Millikin (R Colo.), Glen H. Taylor (D Idaho), and Hayden. The adoption of the Hayden amendment would not entirely explain these switches as only the latter four of them voted for that amendment, while the other three voted against it.

There were 11 Senators who voted the opposite way from their predecessors Virgil Chapman (D Ky.) voted against, while these 10 voted for: John W. Bricker (R Ohio), Spessard L. Holland (D Fla.), Irving M. Ives (R N.Y.), Robert S. Kerr (D Okla.), Henry Cabot Lodge Jr. (R Mass.), Joseph R. McCarthy (R Wis.), Matthew M. Neely (D W.Va.), Margaret Chase Smith (R Maine), Edward J. Thye (R Minn.), and Arthur V. Watkins (R Utah).

AMENDMENTS AGREED TO

Richard B. Russell (D Ga.) — Require ratification within 7 years from date of submission to state legislatures; providing effective date to be 1 year after ratification. Voice vote.

Carl Hayden (D Ariz.) — Prohibit no impairment of protection conferred by future laws. Roll call, 51 to 31.

AMENDMENT REJECTED

Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.) — Substitute for amendment, setting up Commission on Legal Status of Women to study subject and recommend laws. Roll call, 18-65.

HOUSE

A companion bill to S J Res 25 was introduced in the House of Representatives by Rep. Katherine St. George (R N.Y.) and 12 other legislators submitted similar measures. Most of these additional sponsors, however, rallied around the St. George bill to make it the test measure. The legislation was in the form of a resolution, H J Res 68.

This resolution was referred to the House Judiciary Committee, whose Chairman, Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.), in turn referred it to a special Subcommittee made up of the following members: Reps. William T. Byrne (D N.Y.), Thomas J. Lane (D Mass.), Winfield K. Denton (D Ind.), James B. Frazier, Jr. (D Tenn.), John Jennings, Jr. (R Tenn.), and Kenneth B. Keating (R N.Y.).

This group, however, took no action, and early in March, Mrs St. George began circulating a discharge petition to force her measure out of the group's jurisdiction. By the end of March, she asserted some 75 Representatives had signed the petition. A total of 218 were needed.

Rep. Gordon L. McDonough (R Calif.) reminded his colleagues in the House shortly after the petition was filed that they should act on the legislation in this election year. "It is getting to the point where one who is opposed to equal rights for women is in as much political jeopardy today as he would have been had he opposed votes for women years ago," he said. "I recommend that those who have not looked at the petition do so and sign it, and bring the question before the House for consideration," he added.

Ultimately, however, the discharge petition proved unsuccessful, and the House Judiciary Committee did not report the bill in 1950.

LOBBY STANDS

Virtually all of the organizations registering stands on S Res 25 favored equal rights for women in principle. But some of the organizations supported S J Res 25 as it was originally drawn, and others opposed it pending inclusion of certain changes or "qualifications." This is the way groups lined up:

The National Woman's Party opposed the Hayden amendment and sought to have it deleted from the bill or to have it modified by the House. The suggested substitute was the following: "The provisions of this article shall not be construed to invalidate special legislation conferring benefits or exemptions on legally defined classes of men and women." The Women's Bureau of the Labor Department stated that it would withdraw its long-standing objections to the equal rights amendment if the Hayden amendment were retained in the legislation.

Subversive Aliens

S 1832

SUMMARY

Sen. Pat McCarran (D Nev.), chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, introduced S 1832 on May 11, 1949. The purpose of the bill, according to McCarran was "to strengthen the provisions of existing law with respect to the exclusion and deportation of subversive aliens."

Extensive hearings were held in May, June, July, August and September of 1949. The committee approved the bill Aug. 2, 1950. The Senate passed it without debate and without objection Aug. 9. The House did not act on the measure.

Later, however, it was incorporated in the so-called McCarran Internal Security Bill and approved by both houses. (See page 390.)

Provisions

The bill, as passed by the Senate, provided that:

Any aliens shall be excluded from admission to the United States who would engage in activities prejudicial to the public interest; who are anarchists; who are members of a Communist organization; who are members for any totalitarian party; who advocate world communism or totalitarianism; who advocate or teach unconstitutional overthrow of the government of the United States; who write or publish material advocating unconstitutional overthrow of the government; who are affiliated with any organization that writes or distributes material advocating unconstitutional overthrow of the government; who would be likely to engage in espionage or sabotage; or who "at any time shall be or shall have been members" of any of the above classes.

Any alien now in the United States who falls into any of the above classes shall be held and deported.

Ambassadors, public ministers and career diplomatic and consular officers shall be exempt.

BACKGROUND

A subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee had been conducting a 2 1/2-year study of the entire immigration and naturalization system. One phase of the investigation dealt with exclusion and deportation of subversives. From it resulted S 1832, a bill introduced May 11, 1949, by McCarran, who was also chairman of the special subcommittee.

No further action was taken immediately on S 1832. McCarran's group completed its broad study of immigration and naturalization laws and drew up S 3455, also sponsored by McCarran, April 20, 1950. In it was included all of S 1832. (See page 236 for S 3455.)

The jam of war legislation later in 1950 indicated to McCarran that the Senate would not have time to complete action on the 248-page S 3455, so he turned back to S 1832. He said new exclusion and deportation laws were urgently needed. The broader measure was not pushed.

SENATE

Hearings

The Judiciary Committee heard testimony on S 1832 for a total of 24 days from May through September, 1949. Among witnesses were several former Communists, former diplomatic personnel of "Iron Curtain" country embassies, representatives of national organizations and representatives of the State and Justice Departments.

Elizabeth T. Bentley, who said she had been a war-time spy for Russia and the Communist Party, told the Committee that aliens controlled the Communist Party because Russia did not trust American Communists to be loyal to Russian interests. She said the "Communist fifth column" could be blunted if alien Communists were barred from this country.

Gen. Izydor Modelski, former military attache of Poland, told the Committee that Russian spies frequently operated through the embassies of Russian satellite countries.

Attorney General Tom Clark said the Justice Department was completely advised on the activities of subversive aliens. John R. Peurifoy, Assistant Secretary of State, said the State Department had the power at that time to exclude any alien diplomatic employee who could be a danger to the United States.

In a statement to the Committee, the American Legion said too many subversives were gaining entry into the United States and requested that the pending bill be approved.

The bill was approved by the Committee and reported to the Senate Aug. 2.

Debate

The measure was called up by McCarran on the "consent calendar" Aug. 9. There was no debate or discussion of the measure. No objection was voiced to its approval, so it was passed "without objction".

Final Action

After the measure passed the Senate Secretary of State Dean Acheson said he disapproved the bill because it would bar valuable ex-Communists, was vague in its definition of "totalitarianism", and would handicap normal diplomatic relations with Communist and anti-Communist "totalitarian" governments.

The bill did not see action in the House, but McCarran included it in his omnibus internal security bill (HR 9490) and it was passed by both houses and became part of Public Law No. 831.

Contempt of Congress

SUMMARY

During 1950, a total of 63 persons were cited for contempt of Congress. All but four of the contempt citations were successfully pressed by the House of Representatives. The remaining four were prosecuted by the Senate.

The four persons cited by the upper chamber for contempt incurred the proceedings by refusing to answer questions before Senate committees in what the members regarded as satisfactory fashion. A Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee probing charges of disloyalty in the State Department pressed for citations of three of its witnesses. The fourth witness cited had refused to answer questions before the Senate's Special Committee to Investigate Organized Crime in Interstate Commerce.

The 59 persons cited by the House in 1950 included three who refused to satisfy the House Select Committee on Lobbying Activities, and 56 who refused to answer questions put to them by the House Committee on Un-American Activities.

All the 56 persons cited had refused to answer questions before the Committee regarding membership in the Communist Party or acquaintance with persons linked by the Committee with CP activity. Each citation was voted in a separate resolution, numbering from H Res 749 through H Res 804. Thirty-nine of the citations were against witnesses who were called to testify before the Committee when it investigated communism in Hawaii in April. The other 17 testified in Washington, D. C.

All the citations approved by either the House or the Senate were referred to U. S. district attorneys in Washington and Hawaii. They were to decide whether the cases should be placed before grand juries. Normally the Justice Department prosecutes contempt citations after they have been preferred by Congress. Conviction of an individual on this charge carries a maximum penalty of one year in jail and a $1,000 fine.

Cited by Senate

These were the persons cited by the Senate for contempt of Congress in 1950: (First three resolutions were reported by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on Sept. 13 and approved by the Senate on Sept. 22.)

S Res 349, citing Frederick V. Field for contempt for refusing to answer certain questions.

S Res 350, citing Earl Browder for contempt for refusing to answer certain questions.

S Res 351, citing Philip J. Jaffe for contempt for refusing to answer certain questions.

S Res 358, citing Harry Russell for contempt for refusal to answer certain questions to the satisfaction of the Special Committee to Investigate Organized Crime in Interstate Commerce. Reported by the Committee on Sept. 23 and approved by the Senate the same day.

BACKGROUND

In 1946 and 1947, when the House Committee on Un-American Activities staged a number of hearings on communism in the United States, several witnesses refused to answer the group's questions with respect to political affiliation.

The witnesses contended that the Constitution set forth their rights to refuse to answer questions about their political thoughts, and their rights to withhold statements that might tend to incriminate them.

The Committee, however, contended that the witnesses' refusal to answer questions constituted contempt of Congress and the jurisdiction of Congressional investigations.

Refusal to produce books and records for the examination of Congressional committee was also held by the group to constitute a contemptuous action.

Accordingly, in 1946, 11 members of the Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee were cited for contempt of Congress by the House Un-American Activities Committee. And in 1947, ten Hollywood film officials were also cited. The House of Representatives approved the citations issued by its Un-American Activities Committee.

Citations Appealed

The individual witnesses fought the citations all the way up to the Supreme Court. But the Court refused in 1948 to review the case of the Refugee Committee group, all of whom had been convicted of contempt in a lower court, for refusing in 1946 to produce their books and records for the Un-American Activities Committee. The eleven then asked reconsideration of the refusal, but action on the second request was deferred for two years.

The highest tribunal on April 10, 1950, also refused to consider the case of Hollywood writers John Howard Lawson and Dalton Trumbo, who in 1947 declined to tell the House Un-American Activities Committee whether or not they were members of the Communist party. In effect, the high court held that a witness must answer such a question or face a contempt of Congress citation and a possible jail sentence. Lawson and Trumbo were convicted in the U. S. Court of Appeals in Washington on a contempt of Congress charge and the Supreme Court's action upheld this conviction.

Second Try Fails

The U. S. Supreme Court refused May 29 to reconsider the cases of the 10 Hollywood figures and 11 members of the Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee.

The Supreme Court's refusal in effect upheld the right of Congressional committees to bring contempt proceeding against recalcitrant witnesses. This cleared the way for the 1950 citations. Congress had not cited anyone for contempt in 1949 because the Court's ruling was still pending at that time.

HOUSE

In 1950, the House of Representatives cited 59 persons for contempt of Congress. Of these, 56 citations stemmed from the Committee on Un-American Activities, and three arose from the House Select Committee on Lobbying Activities.

The following is the chronological development of these contempt citations. Reasons for citation are given, together with consequent action in the Committees and on the floor of the House.

Committee

(Un-American Activities)

In April, several members of the Un-American Activities Committee staged an on-the-spot, nine-day investigation of communism in Hawaii. They heard a number of witnesses in Honolulu, but by April 19 had encountered 39 persons who refused to tell the group whether or not they were, or had been, members of the Communist Party.

Accordingly, Rep. Francis E. Walter (D Pa.), chairman of the group that conducted the Honolulu hearings, said these 39 witnesses would be cited for contempt of Congress.

Several weeks later, after the Congressmen had returned to Washington from Honolulu, the full Un-American Activities Committee on June 21 voted to ask the House to cite the 39 persons.

While the Walter group had held hearings in Hawaii, the bulk of the Un-American Activities Committee's investigations into communism were centered in Washington. Witnesses from organizations throughout the country came to the nation's capital to testify before the group. Hearings in Washington produced witnesses who also refused to answer Committee questions as to whether or not they were, or had been, Communist Party members. Refusals to answer in turn brought pressures in the Committee to cite the reluctant witness for contempt.

For example, Philip Bart, General Manager of the Daily Worker, Communist newspaper, and Marcel Scherer, one-time West Coast labor leader, refused to answer most of the Committee's questions June 20. Bart not only refused to disclose his original name or the circumstances under which he changed his name but he also refused to say whether he ever recruited Americans for study at the Lenin Institute in Moscow. Scherer refused to answer a query as to whether he had ever known Dr. Joseph W. Weinberg, accused by the Committee as the Scientist X who turned over atomic secrets to a Russian agent.

All in all, six persons were included in this category of witnesses who refused, at Washington hearings, to answer questions to the satisfaction of the Committee. On June 21, the Committee voted to add their names to the list of the so-called "Hawaiian witnesses."

On June 23, the Committee decided to cite Steve Nelson, a Communist Party organizer. The charge resulted from Nelson's refusal June 8, 1949, to answer questions of the Committee regarding alleged espionage at the University of California radiation laboratory. Other witnesses had alleged that Nelson obtained secret information from the laboratory — then working on the atomic bomb project.

Committee member Burr P. Harrison (D Va.) said the Committee also decided to review about 30 other instances when witnesses refused to answer questions in the past 11 years.

Earlier Refusals Reviewed

This review took place in the first part of July, simultaneously with a Committee probe into communism in Ohio. Both the review and the probe produced additional citations.

In connection with the probe of Ohio Communists, three persons who took the stand July 14 declined to answer questions about their alleged membership in the Communist Party. They were David H. Levison, Frank Hashmall and Talmadge Raley of Cincinnati. The committee proceeded to cite them.

In connection with the review, these 1949 witnesses were designated by the Committee as being in contempt: James J. Matles, national organizational secretary of the UE: Julius Emspak, UE national secretary-treasurer; Thomas Quinn, UE organizer; Thomas J. Fitzpatrick, UE officer in Pittsburgh; Talmadge Raley, UE officer in Cincinnati; David H. Levison; Cincinnati businessman Frank Hashmall, Cincinnati; Clarence Hiskey, identified as a professor at the Brooklyn Polytechnic Institute; Esther Tice, UE organizer in Cincinnati; Marcel Scherer, identified as "co-ordinator of the New York Labor Peace Conference"; Bella Rodman, Washington, D. C; James Branca, identified as a drug company salesman; and Elisabeth Sasuly, at one time an officer of the CIO Food, Tobacco, Agricultural and Allied Workers of America.

Their names, and the three from the Ohio probe, were added to those of the "Hawaiian witnesses" and the "Washington witnesses", bringing the grand total of persons to 62.

Witness Purges Self

The total was reduced by one, however, when David H. Levison volunteered to testify again before the Committee and to purge himself of contempt by answering questions. On Aug. 7 and 8, Levison told the group he had been a member of the CP from 1935-1942.

Levison said he had been recruited to the Communist Party by a fellow member of a discussion club. He said he quit when the Communists didn't seem to be supporting the war effort. Levison also gave names of 36 persons whom he said had been CP members with him in Ohio.

The Committee then voted to take his name off the list of 62 persons for whom contempt citations were asked.

Floor Action

The House took up the Un-American Activities Committee's list on Aug. 10.

Rep. Francis E. Walter (D Pa.), who led off the arguments for citing the witnesses, said the issue was simple: whether the Un-American Activities Committee can compel witnesses to answer questions which are relevant to its work of investigating communism. He said Emspak "just didn't see fit" to answer 72 questions, including the key one: "Are you now or have you ever been a member of the Communist party?"

Opposing Walter, Rep. Vito Marcantonio (ALP N.Y.) insisted Emspak and the other witnesses were within their rights in refusing to answer questions they said might tend to incriminate them. "You can't talk about democracy and destroy the Bill of Rights", he said.

The House then proceeded to vote on the individual contempt citations. It cited Steve Nelson on voice vote, and Julius Emspak by a 372-1 ballot. (Vote on page 556.) The lower chamber was prepared to continue down the list of individuals concerned, but ran into a snag over the case of Philip Bart, the next name on the list. The snag developed when Committee Chairman John S. Wood (D Ga.) moved to dispense with the formal reading of the report on Bart and subsequent witnesses, saying it had been previously agreed this would be done and the reports printed in the Congressional Record.

But Rep. James G. Fulton (R Pa.) remarked that the U. S. Supreme Court once reversed a conviction of a witness (Harold Christoffel) cited for contempt because a quorum of the committee which questioned him was not present when he appeared. Rep. Clare E. Hoffman (R Mich.) said to prevent anything like that from involving the entire House membership, he would make a point of order that a quorum was not present.

After Majority Leader John W. McCormack (D Mass.) had tried in vain to persuade Hoffman to withdraw his point of order, Speaker Sam Rayburn (D Tex.) announced the absence of a quorum, and McCormack put off the remainder of the cases until the following day, Aug. 11.

When the House met that day, Wood announced that two of the remaining names on the list had been withdrawn "for further investigation." (The two names were those of Mrs. Elizabeth Sasuly and Bella Rodman.)

The House then turned to the 54 remaining names. Citations for them were voted by the House in an hour's time. Speeches by Reps. E. E. Cox (D Ga.) and John E. Rankin (D Miss.), in salute to the work of the Un-American Activities group, consumed 10 minutes of the time Rep. Vito Marcantonio (ALP N. Y.), the only opponent of the proceedings the previous day when the first pair of citations were voted, remained silent for the most part. Occasionally he cried out "no" when the vote was taken on each individual case.

Committee

Lobbying

Charges of contempt brought against the three other witnesses cited by the House in 1950 were pressed by the Select Committee on Lobbying Activities. The three persons were Dr. Edward A. Rumely, executive secretary of the Committee for Constitutional Government, William L. Patterson, national executive secretary of the Civil Rights Congress and Joseph P. Kamp, vice chairman of the Constitutional Educational League.

The three men had refused to give information to the Lobby Investigators, headed by Frank Buchanan (D Pa.). Rumely four times refused to divulge to the Committee who paid for printing literature distributed by the Committee for Constitutional Government to Members of Congress, civic leaders and educators. Patterson and Kamp had refused to turn over requested records to the Buchanan committee. (For details, see p 750)

Floor Action

All citations were on roll-call votes, which came after stormy debates. The voice citing Rumely on Aug. 20 was 183 yeas to 175 nays; that citing Patterson also on Aug. 30 was 238 to 106; and that citing Kamp was 215 to 115 on Aug. 31.

The debate in the House leading up to these ballots centered on the question of freedom of the press. Rep. Joseph W. Martin, Jr. (R Mass.), charged that the citation would be a blow against freedom of the press. He said the Constitution guarantees such freedom and that Rumely did not have to report his financial backing on printed material.

Rep. John W. McCormack (D Mass) denied that press freedom was an issue. He said Rumely had once before been indicted for contempt of Congress, in 1944 for refusing to answer another committee's questions.

Debate on the Patterson citation was led by Rep. Vito Marcantonio (ALP N.Y.), who charged that Patterson was "a victim" of the Committee "from the so-called left" because they "could not come before this House with two citations, both from the extreme right."

Buchanan called the Constitutional Educational League "a one-man outfit, Joseph P. Kamp." He said the organization engaged in lobbying activities, although not registered under the Lobbying Act.

Rep. George M. Rhodes (D Pa.) said "This outfit, like the Committee for Constitutional Government, used a phony name to hide its totalitarian objectives."

Rep. E. E. Cox (D Ga.) said Kamp was in jail "because he would not violate the ethics of the newspaper profession." He assailed the staff of the Lobby Investigating Committee as "a group of extreme left wingers."

Cox told the House publications put out by Kamp's organization were "devoted to combatting Communists", and that attacks on Kamp were "inspired by enemies of this Republic."

SENATE

Two Senate committees were responsible for the Senate's citation of four persons as being in contempt of Congress in 1950. The Senate Foreign Relations Committee urged the citation of three witnesses who had appeared before the so-called Tydings subcommittee studying charges of disloyalty in the State Department, but who had refused to answer questions of the group.

The Senate's Special Committee to Investigate Organized Crime in Interstate Commerce produced the other citation.

This is the chronological development of these cases:

Tydings Probe Citations

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee Sept. 13 voted to ask for contempt of the Senate citations against three men who refused to answer questions put by the Tydings subcommittee investigating alleged communism in the State Department. The citations were sought against Earl Browder, former chief of the Communist Party in the U. S., Frederick Vanderbilt Field, described by Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy (R Wis.) as the "millionaire Communist", and Philip J. Jaffe, former editor of Amerasia magazine. Browder refused to answer questions about the Communist Party organization while he was head of the party; Field and Jaffe both declined, on constitutional grounds, to tell the subcommittee whether or not they were members of the CP.

The Senate itself decided Sept. 22 to cite the three men. The citations were effected by voice votes.

Crime Probe Citation

The fourth contempt citation approved by the Senate in 1950 involved Harry Russell, wealthy Chicagoan, who was threatened with contempt proceedings at his brief appearance Sept. 19 before the Senate's Special Committee to Investigate Organized Crime in Interstate Commerce. The Committee asked Russell about his refusal to explain his absence from Florida while Committee investigators there had been seeking him as a witness.

Committee Counsel Rudolph Halley asked the witness to explain why he did not come to Miami when the Committee met there in July. Halley pointed out that, by his own admission, Russell knew he was wanted by subpena servers.

"I refuse to answer that," the witness replied, "on the ground that it might incriminate me." When told he had no right to refuse a reply, unless he feared it would subject him to some federal prosecution, Russell pointed out he was not accompanied by an attorney. Kefauver told him he could have legal representation and should have brought an attorney with him. Russell replied that "if any attorney should advise me to answer that (question), I wouldn't." Kefauver responded that he would recommend a contempt citation if the question was not answered.

The question was never satisfactorily answered, and on Sept. 22, the Committee recommended that Russell be cited. The Senate then unanimously cited Russell on Sept. 23.

Steamship Refund

The 81st Congress took unfavorable action on this private bill (S 784) which would have directed the Treasury to refund to the First, Second and Third National Steamship Companies of New Jersey $384,256.26 the Companies had deposited as security with the U. S. Shipping Board in 1920.

Although the Senate approved the bill in 1949, Reps. James I. Dolliver (R Iowa) and Lawrence H. Smith (R Wis.) objected to its consideration when the measure came up in the House on June 6, 1950. Their objection had the effect, under the rules in force, of recommitting S 784 to the House Judiciary Committee, which had studied it.

The Judiciary group made another effort in August. It reported S 784 via the House Rules Committee, which issued a resolution authorizing debate and voting on the legislation. On Aug. 31, this resolution was seemingly adopted by a 60-55 division vote.

Rep. John Jennings, Jr. (R Tenn.), however, demanded a roll-call ballot on the resolution. This time, the House rejected the "rule" which would have permitted consideration of S 784 itself. The disapproving vote was 139-159. No further action on S 784 was then in order, and the bill was in effect killed. (See Page 560 for vote.)

Similar bills had passed Congress three times in the past, but were vetoed by the late President Franklin D. Roosevelt.

USDA Aides

HR 8850

The House by voice vote August 23 approved a bill (HR 8850) to give the Department of Agriculture one additional Assistant Secretary, instead of the three that the Department had requested. By a roll-call vote of 123-222, it earlier defeated a motion by Rep. August H. Andresen (R Minn.) to recommit the measure.

As originally introduced in the House, HR 8850 provided for three assistant secretaries. After strenuous objections had been raised in debate in the Committee of the Whole the number was reduced to two in an amendment offered by Rep. Harold D. Cooley (D N.C.), chairman of the House Agriculture Committee.

The Committee of the Whole, however, approved a substitute submitted by Rep. H. Carl Andersen (R Minn.) and calling for only one assistant secretary. The vote on the substitute was a division ballot, 76-28.

At present, the Department of Agriculture has one under-secretary and one assistant secretary.

The House-passed bill was sent to the Senate. The Senate Agriculture Committee pigeonholed it on Sept. 20 because backers of the bill failed to show up for a committee meeting. There was no quorum, so a committee spokesman said action on the bill would be delayed.

The form in which HR 8850 was originally introduced duplicated to a great extent the features carried in Reorganization Plan No. 4 of the President's. After that reorganization proposal was defeated (See page 367), HR 8850 was drawn as part of a second attempt to grant the Secretary of Agriculture additional aides.

Postal Rate Increases

HR 2945

SUMMARY

The House on Feb. 9 passed HR 2945 to increase Post Office revenue by $130 million yearly. A Senate Committee held hearings on the bill but took no action.

The bill had been introduced in 1949, and after numerous hearings before the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee, was reported Oct. 17, 1949. A minority report, terming the rate increase bill "dangerous" was filed Jan. 31, 1950.

Following House debate on the bill Feb. 8, Republicans succeeded in delaying final action until the next day. After an unsuccessful recommittal move Feb. 9 was defeated on a 149-219 roll call, the bill passed by voice vote.

The Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee, which had heard voluminous testimony on a similar bill (S 1103) in 1949, scheduled eight hearings in April, May, and June on the House-passed measure.

Over 100 witnesses, mostly commerical mail users, testified in opposition to rate changes they considered unfair. Principal support for the bill, outside of the Post Office Department came from railway express spokesmen who thought the government should "get out of the freight business". They supported higher parcel post rates.

In the absence of Congressional enactment of rate increases, postal officials asked the Interstate Commerce Commission for a higher rate on parcel post. Hearings on that appeal started in December.

Provisions

As passed by the House, the bill provided for the following rate increases:

First class — Post cards and drop letters were increased from one to two cents. Anticipated revenue gain—$36 million on cards, $1,375,000 on drop letters.

Second Class — Rate increased on outside-county flat rate on editorial content from 1 1/2 cents to 2 cents a pound, and zone rate on advertising content from 1 1/2 cent-7 cent range to 2 1/2 cent-10 cent a pound range. The increase would not apply to weekly papers of 5,000 or less circulation or dailies under 10,000 circulation or to special rate publications of nonprofit organizations or to educational, scientific, agricultural, or religious publications for use in schools. The bill set a minimum of an eighth-cent for any publication weighing less than two ounces. Free-in-county mail would continue. Revenue gain — $15 million.

Third Class — Bulk mail increased from 1 cent minimum per piece to 1 1/2 cents. Catalogs, books, seeds, plants increased from 1 1/2 cents per 2 ounces to 2 cents per 2 ounces. Revenue gain — $23.6 million.

Fourth Class — Parcel post zone rates schedule increased, with first pound local zone, for example, going from 10 cents to 15 cents. Revenue increase — $40 million.

Special services — Increased charges were authorized for such special services as special delivery, postal notes, registered mail, etc.

BACKGROUND

Administration efforts during 1949 to reduce the Post Office Department's annual deficit resulted in the introduction of bills for rate increases, and in extensive hearings before the Senate and House Post Office and Civil Service Committees.

Postmaster General Jesse M. Donaldson said his department annually went $550 million in the red. To make up that part of it attributable to general mail users, Donaldson asked for an increase in rates to bring in an additional $253 million. The rest of the debt was laid to such expenses as franked mail and airline subsidies.

Both Committees proposed increases well below Donaldson's request. The House bill (HR 2945) called for rate hikes of $130 million yearly, and the Senate measure (S 1103) would have boosted postal revenue by $102 million.

The Senate bill was reported Sept. 30, and the House report was filed Oct. 17. Neither measure saw floor action during 1949. The bills had strong Administration backing, and strong opposition — qualified in numerous ways — from commercial mail users. (For details of 1949 action, see CQ Almanac, Vol. V, p. 578.)

HOUSE

Committee

Although the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee reported HR 2945 in 1949, six of the nine-member Republican minority bloc in the group filed a minority report Jan. 31, 1950. The GOP dissenters attacked the proposal as "dangerous" to the national economy. Signers of the minority report were Reps. Harold C. Hagen (Minn.), Robert J. Corbett (Pa.), Edward H. Jenison (Ill.), Usher L. Burdick (N.D.), Gardner R. Withrow (Wis.) and H. R. Gross (Iowa).

Floor Action

The House took up HR 2945 Feb. 8. Chairman Tom Murray (D Tenn.) of the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee said the bill was needed to meet the annual Post Office deficit. "We have been extremely fair to all users of the mails," he told the House.

Opposition came from nine signers of the minority report. They insisted the Post Office Department was not supposed to pay its own way, that it is a service organization. Many of the rate boosts would put mail-order houses, direct-mail advertisers and small newspapers and magazines out of business, they argued.

Series Of Admendments

Amendments were accepted removing the bill's original restriction on parcel size in RFD routes. Another amendment barred rate increases for religious, educational and agricultural publications used in schools. A series of amendments, mostly by Republicans, lowering other rate raises were voted down.

Minority members protested they were not given enough time to explain and support their amendments. Although late Feb. 8 the House gave a tentative vote of approval to the bill, Republicans tried several times to postpone further action for the day. Finally, in protest against the majority "steamroller," James G. Fulton (R Pa.) delayed passage of the bill a day by demanding to see an "engrossed" copy of the bill (a printed copy with all amendments in place. Preparation of an engrossed copy takes several hours.)

Final action came Feb. 9. Harold C. Hagen (R Minn.), in a last effort to block the measure, moved to recommit. His motion was rejected on a 149 to 219 roll call. (See p. 546.) Passage of the bill by voice vote followed.

AMENDMENTS AGREED TO

Tom Murray (D Tenn.) — Keep present liberal limit on size of RFD parcels. Voice vote.

Murray — Authorize Postmaster General to fix rates on special services. Voice.

Murray — Provide for continuance of present free-in-county rate for publications of that county. Voice.

Eugene J. McCarthy (D Minn.),— Exempt religious, educational, agricultural publications intended for school use from rate increase. Division 114-70.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

James C. Davis (D Ga.) — Delete raise in third-class bulk mailing rates. Division, 35-98.

Leon H. Gavin (R Pa.) — Halve raise in third-class bulk mailing rate. Voice.

McCarthy — Reduce rate on books. Division, 22-93.

Ralph E. Church (R Ill.) — Discontinue issuance of Government post cards and provide 1-cent rate on cards printed privately. Voice.

Church — Charge cost plus one-cent postage for Government postcards. Voice.

Pat Sutton (D Tenn.) — Leave rates as they were for newspapers with less than 150,000 circulation. Division.

Hagen — Stagger increase on second-class mail over period of two years. Voice.

Ben F. Jensen (R Iowa) — Leave rates on shipments of garden or field seeds as they were. Voice.

Hagen — Recommit bill. Roll call, 149-219.

SENATE

Hearings

Sent across the Capitol, HR 2945 was next studied by the Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee. Although it had held extensive hearings during 1949 on a similar bill (S 1103), the Committee scheduled new hearings for testimony on the House-passed bill.

These were held on eight days in April, May, and June. More than 100 witnesses, mostly representing commercial mail users, testified. Generally, they conceded the necessity of reducing the postal deficit, but insisted on a "fair" pattern of rate increases.

Postmaster General Jesse M. Donaldson gave postal department views April 25 and 27. Spokesmen for newspaper publishers appeared before the Committee May 2 in opposition to the bill.

Frank A. Daniels, of the Raleigh, N. C., News and Observer, spoke for the American Newspaper Publishers Association. He said the proposed increase would put "an undue hardship on the average newspaper". Charles McD. Puckette, of the Chattanooga, Tenn., Times, chairman of the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association postal committee, suggested a gradual raise of not more than 25 per cent. Amory H. Bradford, New York Times, proposed a 10 per cent boost pending an investigation into the second-class mail situation. Ed M. Anderson, National Editorial Association, said that low rates do not constitute a subsidy to newspapers. He said, "If this is a subsidy it belongs to the people, like freedom of the press."

J. V. Horton, representing the National Association of Postal Supervisors, supported the bill saying the additional revenue was needed to help meet expenditures.

Representatives of magazine publishers appeared before Committee May 4 to oppose the proposed boost in magazine mailing rates.

Thomas H. Beck, Crowell-Collier Publishing Company, told the Committee that the Post Office was not meant to make money. It is a public service — "and a lousy service at that," Beck said. He added that Postal Service was "antiquated and inefficient."

A. L. Cole, Reader's Digest, said the rate boost would be discriminatory and would constitute a "retroactive tax on magazines".

Other Groups Testify

Statements on the financial loss mail increases would bring to users of third class mail came May 9 from spokesmen of non-profit tuberculosis, temperance, infantile paralysis, and medical groups and the Disabled American Veterans. Also objecting to the bill were business publications, direct mail advertisers, and seed dealers. Among organizations which appeared were Associated Third Class Users and Committee Against Discrimination in Small Catalog Postage Rates.

Opposition to HR 2945's formula for increasing parcel post rates was heard June 27 from representatives of the Territory of Hawaii, baby chick shippers, Sears Roebuck and Co., and encyclopedia and reference book publishers. Objections were made both to the rate increases and to a proposed reduction in size of mailable packages.

Although further attacks on the bill came the next day from the National Association of Wholesalers, businesses selling garments by mail, and greeting card publishers, HR 2945 was strongly supported by railway express workers, represented by the Brotherhood of Railway Clerks (AFL) and the International Brotherhood of Teamsters (AFL). Spokesmen of the Railway Express Agency, Inc., called for greater parcel post rate increases than those proposed in HR 2945. The Express company and its workers said the post office should "get out of the freight business".

At the final hearing June 29, criticism of the bill came from book publishers and sellers. Several unions in the paper-making, printing, and allied industries said raising postal rates would result in less paper usage, which could mean unemployment in the field.

The Senate took no final action on the bill, however.

Resort to ICC

As a result of Congress' failure to enact the requested postal rate increases, the Post Office Department appealed to the Interstate Commerce Commission for a hike in parcel post rates. ICC hearings began in December. Postmaster General Jesse M.

Donaldson told the ICC the 25 per cent boost in parcel post rates would add an estimated $110 million to annual income and was designed to make that service pay for itself. Donaldson sought the increase under an old law that permits either Congress or the ICC to revise postal rates.

LOBBY STANDS

Varied pressures from hundreds of organizations reflected the broad interest in the postal raise bills from nearly every segment of the population. Organization stands, however, continued along lines established during the 1949 controversy. (For details, see CQ Almanac, Vol. V. p. 581).

Postmaster Appointments

A bill requested by the President to end Presidential appointment and Senate confirmation of postmasters was introduced July 7, 1949, by Sen. J. Allen Frear Jr. (D Del.). The bill provided that postmasters of all classes would be appointed for indefinite terms by the Postmaster General. The measure also embodied recommendations by the Hoover Commission on governmental reorganization. The principle of permitting the Postmaster General to appoint his aides was also endorsed specifically by the President in his Budget message on Jan. 9, 1950.

A Subcommittee of the Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee held hearings on S 2213 on March 1, 1950. The bill was supported by the Citizens Committee for the Hoover Report, the Postmaster General, the National Association of Postal Supervisors, the National League of District Postmasters and by the Civil Service Commission. No witnesses appeared in opposition. Supporters of the bill said it squared with Hoover Commission recommendations and would promote efficiency in the Post Office by taking postmaster appointments out of politics.

The Subcommittee approved the bill, but the full Committee voted March 21 to postpone action on it indefinitely.

D.C. Home Rule

S 1527

Two specific Presidential requests in 1950 for legislation to grant "home rule" to the voteless District of Columbia came to nothing during the 81st Congress' second session. President Truman made his pleas for self-government for the nation's capital in his State of the Union message on Jan. 4, 1950, and in his Budget message five days later.

But the House District of Columbia Committee did not act approvingly or disapprovingly on a Senate-passed bill (S 1527) which would have granted Washington a certain measure of self-government. Nor had the measure received action by the end of 1950 (For details of the bill's passage through the Senate in 1949 — the first year a "home rule" bill had ever drawn favorable action from either chamber of Congress — see CQ Almanac, Vol. V, page 576.)

Rent controls in the District of Columbia were extended through Jan. 31, 1951, under terms of compromise legislation (S 3776) passed by the Congress on June 29, 1950, and signed into law by the President on June 30.

Senate passage of the measure came on a roll-call vote of 45-23. (See page 000.) The House approved the bill on a 103-72 division vote. If the legislation had not been rushed to the White House immediately, the controls it extended would have lapsed the following day.

The legislation extending Washington rent controls started out in the House as HR 6669 and in the Senate as S 3776. The House District of Columbia Committee favorably reported its measure on June 15. The Senate District Committee reported its bill on June 21.

The Senate approved S 3776 on June 22, and when the measure was referred to the House, the lower chamber discarded its own bill, and on June 26 enacted the Senate measure — after making some changes in it.

The Senate version would have extended controls from June 30 until Dec. 31 with an additional six months authorized if the District Commissioners ask for them. The House changed the measure to authorize extension until Jan. 31, 1951, with no provision for further controls without Congressional action. Debate in both houses was brief. The final compromise accepted most House provisions.

The Senate had accepted one amendment to its bill. It agreed by voice vote to an amendment by Harry P. Cain (R Wash.) which would decontrol non-housekeeping furnished rooms in hotels. Final passage of the measure was on voice vote.

In the House, an amendment by Thomas G. Abernethy (D Miss.) to decontrol luxury apartments in hotels carried on division vote 31-19. An amendment by Joseph P. O'Hara (R Minn.) decontrolling buildings in which the rooms had been decontrolled was adopted by voice vote.

A further extension to March 31, 1951, was authorized by this bill, passed by the Senate Dec. 11, the House Dec. 18 and signed Dec. 21.

Parkersburg, W. Va.

H J Res 461 -- Vetoed

A bill to provide that, for purposes of the 17th U. S. decennial census, South Parkersburg, W. Va. should be treated as a part of Parkersburg was vetoed by President Truman on August 11.

The vetoed legislation had originally come about because, on April 4, three days after the official date of the census, the citizens of both cities had voted for annexation of South Parkersburg, thus making a substantial increase in population.

The bill passed the House on the consent calendar June 5, and passed the Senate without objection on call of the calendar June 26.

The President, in vetoing the bill, declared that "approval of this enactment would be an invitation" to other cities which have enlarged their boundaries to ask for similar special legislation, and that "at least 100 other municipalities are known to have completed annexations subsequent to April 1, 1950."

XUM

Alaska Power

HR 940 — P.L. 628

Legislation (HR 940) to approve public power projects in Alaska provoked considerable debate in the House in 1949 and became public law in 1950 when the Senate approved it July 5. The bill authorized $20,365,400 to be appropriated later for construction and maintenance of dams and power plants at Lake Eklutna, T. A. Sales procedures for the power generated — to be controlled by the Secretary of the Interior — were spelled out.

The original bill which the House approved on July 13, 1949 (for details, see CQ Almanac, Vol. V, page 723) was altered before the Senate passed it nearly a year later. However, the House agreed to the Senate changes on July 17, 1950. Agreement cleared the bill to the White House, where it was signed into law July 31.

Capital Dispersal

Some two months after the outbreak of the Korean fighting, President Truman on Aug. 30 asked Congress for a $139.8 million appropriation to start dispersal of governmental agencies in the District of Columbia to areas surrounding Washington. The dispersal program was intended to minimize damage aerial attack could wreak on the working of the government.

The House which got the money request first reacted in a mixed manner. On the floor Aug. 31, Rep. Clarence Cannon (D Mo.), Appropriations Committee chairman, supported the idea but thought it ought to get more study, while Rep. John Taber (R N.Y.), Appropriations' ranking minority member, said flatly there was no authorization for such a building program.

Rep. Edward T. Miller (R Md.) said the money would be used to "save the hides" of bureaucrats. Irked by House comment, Speaker Sam Rayburn (D Tex.) declared: "This is not to protect the workers of the District of Columbia. It is an effort to protect the records that are irreplaceable, military secrets of the most vital importance."

But a House Appropriations Subcommittee headed by Rep. Albert Thomas (D Tex.) decided the same day to postpone action on the funds to implement the plan. The move came after Chairman Carl Vinson (D Ga.) of the House Armed Services Committee was cheered when he declared the government should spend less on moving the capital and more on defending it.

Senate Was Tepid

The Senate Appropriations Committee, considering meanwhile the Supplemental Appropriations Bill for 1951, Sept. 13 voted down inclusion of the requested dispersal funds in that measure. When the bill came to the floor Sept. 14, Sen. Kenneth McKellar (D Tenn.) offered a floor amendment to include the money anyway, so the item might go to conference He was defeated when Sen. Guy Cordon (R Ore.) made a point of order against the amendment that it was substantive legislation on an appropriations bill and Sen. Elmer Thomas (D Okla.), in the chair, sustained him. Cordon said the "whole thing seems to have been born in hysteria."

A later appeal for carrying out the Truman dispersal plan came Nov. 14 from Chairman Brien McMahon (D Conn.) of the Senate-House Atomic Energy Committee. He declared Congress should swiftly grant the requested funds in order to move some agencies out of Washington.

An even larger sum than originally asked by the President was proposed Dec. 6 by Chairman William M. Whittington (D Miss.) of the House Public Works Committee, when he introduced a bill (HR 9864) asking for an authorization of $190 million to be used in acquiring sites for federal buildings outside of, but adjacent to, the District of Columbia.

However, the Congress did not take final action on any of the so-called dispersal bills.

Other Shift Moves

Even before the outbreak of the Korean war, proposals for sites where an alternate capital could function if Washington were blitzed in atomic warfare drew consideration.

Rep. Wright Patman (D Tex.) went before the House Rules Committee Feb. 27 to urge the group to support his resolution which would authorize the body to survey places for an alternative seat of government. A report would be required by January, 1951, and would cover the question of efficient federal operation from a supplemental capital, should the idea be considered feasible, or desirable.

Rules Committee Chairman Adolph Sabath (D Ill.) and Eugene Cox (D Ga.), group member, both expressed fear that the Patman proposal might "create fear" at home and have a "bad effect" on peoples abroad. Clarence Brown (R Ohio), also a Committeeman, was skeptical that the capital would be moved. "Don't sell your (Washington) house," he told a newspaperman covering the Patman testimony. Sabath said the Patman proposal would receive continued mulling by the group.

Later, on March 2, a closed session of the Senate Armed Services Committee heard Presidential Assistant John R. Steelman, acting chairman of the National Security Resources Board, assure that emergency plans have already been drawn for shifting the nation to a war-time basis, including civilian defenses against possible atomic bombing.

Budgeting, Accounting Reform

H R 9038 -- P.L. 784

Congress approved a bill (HR 9038) which authorized the President to make changes in the form of the national budget and of departmental estimates, and to modernize and simplify governmental accounting and auditing methods.

The bill was approved by the House with little debate July 26. The Senate passed it with amendments Aug. 9. Conferees approved a compromise bill Aug. 25, but the House rejected it Aug. 30. A new compromise version was brought out by the conference later the same day, and the House and Senate accepted that on Aug. 31. The President signed the bill Sept. 12, and it became Public Law No. 784.

HOUSE

Committee

HR 9038 was introduced in the House by Frank M. Karsten (D Mo.) on July 5. It was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. Hearings were held July 11. William F. Finan, assistant director of the Bureau of the Budget, told the Committee, "HR 9038 brings up to date and clarifies various budget statutes and includes desirable provisions dealing with recommendations of the Hoover Commission. As such, the bill gives strong backing to the constructive budgetary improvements now under way . . "

Lindsay C. Warren, U. S. Comptroller General, said, "HR 9038 has my unqualified and wholehearted support. The bill will provide a basis for furnishing the Congress and the President the information and means of control they need for the management of our federal fiscal structure, and the taxpayers with full disclosure of the financial operations of the government. Yet it in no way lessens the control exercised by the Congress over public expenditures."

The bill was also endorsed by representatives of the Treasury Department, the American Federation of Government Employees and the American Federation of Labor.

Several technical amendments were added before the bill was approved by the Committee July 13. The bill contained the following principle provisions when it was ultimately submitted:

A "performance type" budget was authorized.

The Comptroller General was directed to set up an accounting program for the entire Executive Branch.

The Secretary of the Treasury was directed to maintain the accounting systems.

Individual departments and agencies were directed to operate their portion of the accounting program.

Comptroller General was to continue to audit financial transactions as an agent of Congress under a more comprehensive auditing system.

The head of a department or agency was to rule on any request for legislation which would result in additional appropriations for a part of his department.

Floor Action

Ray J. Madden (D Ind.) told the House July 26 that the bill would "fulfill a long-wanted need in the operations of the fiscal department of the federal government." He added that it conformed with recommendations by the Hoover Commission. Discussion of the measure was brief, and it was promptly approved on voice vote.

SENATE

Committee

The original Senate bill (S 2054) had been introduced June 13, 1949, by Joseph McCarthy (R Wis.). The McCarthy measure called for budgetary reforms similar to those authorized in the House bill, but would have shifted the government accounting functions from the General Accounting Office to a new Accountant General in the Treasury Department, whose actions were to be subject to approval by the Comptroller General.

The transfer of accounting authority under the terms of McCarthy's bill drew fire from the Comptroller General, Lindsay C. Warren. He told the Senate Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Department Feb. 27, 1950, that as it then stood, the GAO system "is the only one that will work" and that the McCarthy bill "strikes at the very vitals and independence" of it.

On Feb. 28 assistant secretaries of the Treasury and Defense Departments also testified they felt transfer of GAO functions to the Treasury would not work as efficiently as the existing system did.

Three Senators, members of the Committee, added that they "will not favor doing anything to the GAO without the support of Warren." They were Sens. Clyde Hoey (D N.C.), Karl Mundt (R S.D.), and John McClellan (D Ark.). And on March 2, T. Coleman Andrews, Hoover Commission expert, remarked that reorganizing the GAO "will add confusion to a bad situation."

Former President Herbert C. Hoover said the bill carried out recommendations of the Hoover Commission and was a desirable reform. "There is a host of evidence," he told the Committee, "that the (present) accounting system is inefficient and wasteful, fails to establish proper responsibility of officials and is unable to present the full picture to Congress."

Warren replied that Hoover was trying to destroy the General Accounting Office The GAO, Warren said, has saved the government $650 million since he became its head, nine years ago.

Substitute Bill Offered

The McCarthy bill was laid aside June 29, and 11 members of the Committee sponsored a substitute bill which was identical with HR 9038. Co-sponsors of the bill were Chairman John L. McClellan (D Ark.), James O. Eastland (D Miss.), Clyde Hoey (D N.C.), Herbert R. O'Conor (D Md.), Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.), Edward L. Leahy (D R I.), William Benton (D Conn.), Irving Ives (R N.Y.) Karl Mundt (R S.D.) Margaret Chase Smith (R Maine) and Andrew F. Schoeppel (R Kan.). The new bill was approved by the Committee without amendment July 12.

Floor Action

The Senate took up the bill Aug. 9. Several amendments were accepted on voice vote. One by Harry F. Byrd (D Va.) broadened the definition of "appropriation"; another by Byrd brought the bill in line with technical amendments accepted by the House; and further technical amendments offered by McClellan were accepted.

The Senate, however retained a section stricken from the bill by the House Expenditures Committee which gave Executive departments the authority to transfer as much as five per cent of any appropriation from department to department or within a department after approval by the President.

By voice vote, the Senate then passed its version of the legislation, but retained the House bill's number — HR 9038.

CONFERENCE

The bill went to a conference committee of House and Senate members. They approved a compromise Aug. 25. The new version kept the Senate definition of "appropriation" and the Senate authorization for certain fund transfers, and, also retained certain technical House provisions.

But the House rejected the conference bill, Aug. 30, agreeing unanimously to a motion by William L. Dawson (D Ill.), chairman of the Expenditures Committee, to send the bill back to conference. Dawson objected to the Senate transfer provision, saying it would "practically abrogate the rights of the appropriating committees of Congress."

The conference committee filed a second report the same day, dropping the Senate transfer clause. This was accepted by both House and Senate on voice votes Aug. 31. The President signed the bill Sept. 12, and it became Public Law No 784.

Investigation Into Un-American Activities

The House Committee on Un-American Activities conducted numerous investigations during the year. Among the major probes were those into alleged Communist activities in Ohio, into past governmental activities of ex-Communist Lee Pressman, into allegations of disloyalty made against William W. Remington, into possible subversive activities in Hawaii and into stories of wartime uranium shipments to Russia.

Uranium Shipments

Late in 1949, charges were made before the Un-American Activities Committee that several shipments of uranium and heavy water had been sent to Russia during the war with the help of former Vice President Henry A. Wallace. Wallace denied the story before a hastily-called meeting of the Committee in December (CQ Almanac Vol. V. P. 598).

But Republican members of the Committee who had been unable to attend the December hearing asked for another appearance of Wallace in January. Wallace appeared again Jan. 26 and told the Committee that he had "absolutely nothing to do with" uranium shipments to Russia during 1943-1945. He said he participated in atomic discussions only in their early planning stages, but took no part in any phase of the project after it had been established. It was not the Bureau of Economic Warfare, which he headed during the war, but the Lend Lease Administration, which was responsible for shipments to Russia, Wallace said.

Lawrence C. Burman, Atomic Energy Commission, testified to confirm the following shipments:—200 lbs. of uranium oxide, and 220 lbs. of uranium nitrate, both licensed for export to Russia by Lt. Gen. Leslie R. Groves, and purchased in 1943 by H. H. Rosenberg, vice president of Chemator, Inc., a N. Y. chemical wholesale house, from S. W. Shattuck, Denver. Rosenberg testified that during 1943 he had purchased 1,000 grams of heavy water — useful in atomic work — from Stuart Oxygen Co., San Francisco, and another 100 grams from the same firm in 1945.

Dr. Phillipp L. Merritt, AEC, testified about 1000 lbs. of uranium salts bought during 1943 by Chemator from Canadian Radium and Uranium Co. for Russia. Merritt pointed out in connection with this particular transaction that the Canadian concern had a contract with the U. S. Government to give the U.S. first option on all uranium materials the firm could obtain. Boris Pregel, president of the Canadian concern, in a statement released Jan. 24, denounced some of the testimony relating to himself, and asked for a chance to be heard. He, and Rosenberg earlier, stated all their transactions had the approval of the U.S. and the Canadian governments, and that they had observed all rules and regulations.

Committee counsel Courtney E. Owens testified on a shipment of 45 lbs. of uranium nitrate to Russia in 1944. The material was purchased by the Treasury Department from Eastman Kodak, Rochester. Treasury in turn had received a request for the shipment from Lend-Lease, which again, had been asked for it by the Soviet purchasing mission. According to Owens, the Russians attempted to obtain other amounts of the strategic material, but received a negative reply finally from then War Secretary Henry L. Stimson and Gen. Groves.

Hawaii Communists

The Committee opened an on-the-spot investigation April 10 into alleged Communist activities in Hawaii. Testimony linked the officials of the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union - CIO, headed by Harry Bridges, to the Communist Party of the Island territory.

Ichiro Izuka, author of a pamphlet called "The Truth About Communism in Hawaii", identified himself as a former Communist and ILWU member. He linked Jack W. Hall, regional director of the ILWU in Hawaii Robert McElrath, ILWU public relations director, and Mrs. McElrath, and Dr. Reinecke as former members of the executive board of the party in 1930. He declared "Communist party members are the brains behind the ILWU".

Ralph Tokunaga, former ILWU official, April 12 defied the Committee, refusing to answer questions, including one as to whether he had ever been a member of the Communist Party. The Committee went into executive session and adopted a resolution calling upon the House to hold Tokunaga in contempt of Congress.

Thirty-nine Honolulu witnesses by April 19 had refused to tell the Committee whether or not they were, or had been, members of the Communist Party. The Committee on that day wound up its investigation. Most of the witnesses who declined to answer the question, "Are you or have you ever been a Communist?" were identified with the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union-CIO, headed by Harry Bridges. Rep. Francis E. Walter (D Pa.), said the House would be asked to cite all the 39 for contempt of Congress (see p. 000).

Rep. Harold H. Velde (R. Ill.), a Committee member said at the close of the hearing that it had demonstrated the Communist problem in Hawaii was no more serious than elsewhere in the United States. He predicted the hearings would help Hawaii's statehood chances.

The Committee charged in a report Aug. 26 that the Civil Liberties Committee of Hawaii was the "most effective sounding board for communism in the Territory of Hawaii." The Committee document said that the Hawaiian group had only 100 paid-up members, but that "it has succeeded in rallying thousands of territorial residents to the support of communist causes."

The HCLC, according to the report, "from its inception has been directed by Communists for the principal purpose of protecting and expanding the Communist fifth column in the islands comprising the Territory of Hawaii." The report said the group was not connected with the American Civil Liberties Union which did not allow Communists to hold office.

Remington Case

Chairman John S. Wood (D Ga.) announced April 26 that his committee would start a new investigation into the loyalty of William W. Remington, Commerce Department official. Remington was suspended in July, 1948, after Elizabeth Bentley, who claimed to be a former Russian spy ring courier, testified before Senate investigators that Remington was connected with the ring. He was investigated and finally cleared by the Loyalty Review Board and returned to goverment work Feb. 11, 1949 — but demoted one grade and barred from access to classified information. Wood said new information concerning Remington had been turned up.

Remington appeared before the Committee May 4 and denied again that he had ever been a member of the Communist Party. The Committee told Remington that it had questioned a man named Kenneth McConnell behind closed doors April 20 as to Remington's party affiliation. McConnell, a Communist Party organizer in Knoxville at the time Remington worked there as TVA messenger, answered that he did know Remington to be a member of the party. Remington stated that anyone who contradicted his denial of party membership either didn't know the facts or was "engaged in deliberate falsehood".

Secretary of Commerce Charles Sawyer said May 27 he had asked Remington to resign or be fired. Sawyer said his demand did not reflect on Remington's loyalty, but was made in the interests of "good administration". Remington refused to resign, so Sawyer said official ouster charges would be drawn.

Remington was indicted by a Federal Grand Jury in New York City for perjury June 8. The indictment said Remington had "testified falsely" when he denied to the Un-American Activities Committee that he had been a Communist. Remington then resigned his job June 9 to devote "full time to proving in the court that I am innocent of the charge that I have ever been a Communist".

His trail started in the closing days of December, and continued into 1951.

Ohio Communist

The Committee held several hearings on Communist activities in Ohio, concentrating on personnel of the United Electrical Workers, which had been expelled from the CIO for following the Communist Party line. Many of the witnesses declined to answer questions and were subsequently cited for contempt (See p. 423).

The Committee heard testimony July 12, 13, and 14 on alleged Communist activities in Ohio. John J. Edmiston, Dayton, former FBI undercover agent, gave the group names of persons he said were active in the Communist Party in 1940-41 in Ohio. He also said a strike at the Powell Valve Co. in Cincinnati in 1941 was "spearheaded" by Communists.

Victor Decavitch, former official of the United Electrical Workers District 7 (Ohio and Kentucky) testified July 14 that a former state senator, K. M. Kirkendall, also a UE officer, was a Communist Party member while serving in the legislature. He said that "99.9 per cent" of the UE officers were CP members. He himself joined, he testified, but did not pay dues or come under party discipline.

Additional hearings were held Aug. 7, 8 and 29. Witnesses were UE officials and former officials. Most refused to answer questions and were later cited for contempt. (Page 423.)

Pressman Case

The Committee called Lee Pressman to testify Aug. 28. Pressman, former attorney for the Agriculture Department and former general counsel for the CIO, had announced his resignation from the American Labor Party Aug. 10.

The Committee hearings, with Rep. Richard M. Nixon (R Calif.) doing most of the questioning, were far from smooth. Nixon and Pressman tangled frequently, with threats of contempt citations against Pressman voiced. Finally, Pressman identified three men as cell members of the Communist Party in Washington in 1934 and 1935.

The three he identified were: Nathan Witt, John Abt, and Charles Kramer, all of them on the legal staff of the Agriculture Department when according to Pressman, they were in the Communist group.

The questioning of Pressman by the House Committee was his second appearance before the group. He had appeared in 1948 and at that time had refused to answer on constitutional grounds. In 1950, however, he was more willing to talk. He gave few details as to names during his experience in the "organizational" phase of the Communist Party. He said that his group met once a month "or oftener" and discussed Communist literature. He said he dropped out of the "organizational" phase in late 1935, after a year of participation. At that time he left government and went into private law practice.

Under continued questioning by Nixon and Chairman John S. Wood (D Ga.), he admitted that he did not completely sever his "ideological connections" with the party until this Aug. 10, "after the thing in Korea developed." He admitted having conferences with Communist Party leaders between 1938 and 1948 when he was general counsel of the CIO.

However, he said, "they did not direct my beliefs." He pointed out that while he was high in the CIO ranks he helped CIO president Philip Murray draft a resolution in support of lend-lease, when the Communist Party was strongly opposed to any such measure.

Names Named

It took Committee members hours to get Pressman to name names. He consistently denied knowing who all party members in Washington were. Finally, in answer to a direct question from Nixon, Pressman identified Abt, Kramer and Witt as members of the group of Communists to which he belonged.

Constantly during the questioning, the names of Whittaker Chambers, self-styled courier for the Communist Party, and Alger Hiss, former State Department employee convicted of perjury earlier in the year, came up. Pressman said he didn't know the political affiliations of Hiss, but acknowledged meeting Chambers once. He said Chambers came to him in 1936 with a J. Eckhardt who wanted to buy material for the Republican army of Spain. Pressman said he and Eckhardt flew to Mexico and that he collected a fee for his services although no material was purchased.

Chambers, in 1948 testimony before the Committee, had told of bringing a Dr. Philip Rosenbleitt to Pressman. The visit, he said, was in connection with attempting to obtain blueprints of automatic shell loaders for Russia. This, Pressman denied flatly Aug. 28. He also denied having seen Chambers since the 1936 incident.

Pressman told the Committee he had left the ALP Aug 10 after a year of inner struggle because of "a strong conviction." He said Communist "aggression in Korea" had helped speed his decision.

On Aug. 30, Nixon announced that subpoenas had been issued, calling the three men, Abt, Kramer and Witt, before the Committee for questioning. At the same time, Nixon announced a subpoena had been issued for George Silverman, former attorney for the Railroad Retirement Board, who was identified as a Communist by Elizabeth Bentley. Silverman testified Aug. 31 that he never knowingly gave government secrets to any unauthorized person. But he refused to say whether he knew Miss Bentley, and he refused to answer several other Committee questions.

Witt, Abt and Kramer appeared the same day but also refused to answer key questions.

XUM

Other Cases

The House Un-American Activities Committee recommended Sept. 16 that the National Lawyers Guild be put on the Justice Department subversive list and that the Guild be required to register as an agent of a foreign government.

A Committee report said the Guild was a Communist Party front organization, asserting that the group had defended Communists in legal action, had followed the Communist line and was dominated by known Communists. Thomas I. Emerson, president of the Guild, denied the charges and said, "The committee has referred to no policy or act of the Guild which is not wholly consistent with the Guild's vigorous support for our democratic institutions."

Concert pianist Hazel Scott appeared before the Committee Sept. 22 to denounce listing of herself and other entertainers in a private compilation of "Communist sympathizers."

Miss Scott, wife of Rep. Adam C. Powell (D N.Y.) said the information in the list was a "lie." She referred to a list compiled for the publication "Red Channels", issued by a private, self-styled anti-Communist group called "Counterattack." She said "Red Channels" was being used as a "blacklist" to deny entertainers employment without proof or a hearing. She said she had never heard of most of the organizations which she was accused of supporting.

The Committee charged Dec. 12 that the National Committee to Defeat the Mundt Bill "has served as a registered lobbying organization which has carried out the objectives of the Communist Party in a fight against anti-subversive legislation".

The Committee said in a formal statement that in its investigation of the National Lawyers Guild it found a "close organizational and financial relationship" between the Guild and the NCDMB. The House Committee recommended that the Attorney General add the Guild to his list of Communist Fronts.

Jerry J. O'Connell, chairman and registered lobbyist for the NCDMB and former Congressman from Montana, solicited the aid of the Communist Party in working to defeat the bill, the House Committee said.

Some of the provisions of the Mundt bill were included in the McCarran anti-subversive measure which became law.

Slot Machines

S 3357—P.L. 906

SUMMARY

Congress in 1950 passed legislation (S 3357) banning the interstate shipment of slot machines, except to states that pass special state laws to permit such shipments.

The final law was a compromise version of differing bills each chamber had previously adopted. The final compromise — which preserved the House version almost intact — ran into a series of filibusters from Sen. George Malone (R Nev.).

But the Senate passed the compromise bill over Malone's objections on Dec. 19, and the House followed suit Dec. 20. President Truman signed the measure Jan. 2, 1951.

BACKGROUND

Chairman Edwin C. Johnson (D Colo.) of the Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee introduced the bill April 4, at the request of the Department of Justice. Attorney General J. Howard McGrath told Johnson the bill grew out of recommendations by the Conference on Organized Crime held in Washington Feb. 15, and attended by federal, state and local law-enforcement officers.

The bill was designed to help local law officers cope with alleged nationwide gambling syndicates, according to Johnson.

SENATE

The Interstate group reported S 3357 on April 12. No hearings had been held on it, but Chairman Johnson noted in his report on the bill that "the legislation has the approval of the Coin Machine Institute, official trade organization for manufacturers of coin-operated devices." On April 19, the Senate unanimously approved the bill without debate.

As passed by the Senate, the measure banned the shipment of slot machines into states which had laws against them. Manufacturers and dealers in such machines were required to report monthly to the federal Collector of Internal Revenue in their districts the names of purchasers, and the number of the machines they bought. Each slot machine would be clearly marked with its serial number, and if any machine were seized in a state prohibiting them, the owner could be traced and prosecuted. Fines up to $2,000 and/or one year in prison were prescribed for violators of the law. Impounded slot machines would presumably be destroyed.

States which already permitted the use of slot-machines could continue to allow them within state borders, under the terms of S 3357. However, the Governor was required to certify to the federal government that his state did permit the machines.

HOUSE

After the Senate's approval of S 3357, the measure was sent across the Capitol to the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. Attorney General McGrath wrote Chairman Robert Crosser (D Ohio) on April 20, calling the bill "one of vital importance, for which I strongly urge prompt consideration."

Committee

Crosser opened hearings on the bill May 2. On May 3, officials of the Coin Machine Institute testified, generally supporting it.

They said the Institute's members were not allowed to manufacture coin machines that "pay off". The Department of Justice also backed the measure as an aid to local law enforcement.

Representatives of the National Association of Amusement Parks, Pools and Beaches, the Railroad Show Owners Association and the Toy Manufacturers of the U. S. A. asked that the bill's definition of a gambling device be reworded so as to exclude several devices used for amusement. A representative of the National Federation of American Shipping asked that the ban not be extended to use of slots on the high seas. A representative of the American Coin Machine Manufacturers Association said the bill would represent an invasion of states' rights and would not aid in law enforcement.

Committee Makes Changes

The House committee amended the bill to make it unlawful knowingly to transport a gambling device and omitted the "receiving" ban specified by the Senate.

Two amendments offered by Rep. John B. Bennett (R Mich.) were adopted — one defining gambling devices coming under the federal ban as slot or other machines, "an essential part of which is a drum or reel with insignia thereon" which pays off in cash or property; the second making an exception for states or parts of states where these devices are legal as in Nevada and some Maryland counties. But, where the Senate version merely required the governor to certify as to the legality in his state, the Bennett amendment required the state legislature to pass a new bill exempting the state from the federal law.

Retained was a provision requiring each manufacturer to file reports twice yearly with the government, but the House said this information should be provided the Justice Department rather than the Bureau of Internal Revenue as the Senate had required. Penalties in the bill were tightened from $5,000 and two years in prison for a manufacturer and $2,000 and two years for a user, to $5,000 and imprisonment up to two years for both manufacturer and user.

The Committee approved the amended bill July 27.

Floor Action

The House took up the bill Aug. 28. A proposal by Rep. Pat Sutton (D Tenn.) to allow the machines on army posts was beaten down by voice vote Rep. Walter S. Baring (D Nev.) also lost two attempts to ease provisions of the bill as it affects the legal-gambling states.

A provision of the bill required all states where gambling was legal to enact new legislation again authorizing the use of slot machines. Baring attempted to eliminate this provision, but his amendment was defeated 23-78 on a division vote.

Another provision of the bill prohibited shipment of the machines back to the manufacturers if they are located in states where slots were illegal. This Baring tried to eliminate, but again he was defeated by a 28-64 division vote.

Baring also moved for recommital of the bill, and this was rejected by a 10-116 division vote.

Sutton, in arguing for slot machines on military posts, said that soldiers were able to "buy all their recreation facilities" through money "contributed" by the soldiers and sailors playing slot machines. He denied that gamblers had any connection with the machines; he said that each club owned its own machines, and the revenue was used for the benefit of the men who played the machines.

The measure was then passed on voice vote and sent back to the Senate for concurrence on the House amendments.

CONFERENCE

The Senate chose to send the bill to conference with House members. The conference reported Sept. 19, recommending that all the House amendments be accepted.

The Senate took up the conference recommendation Sept. 20, but a filibuster by George Malone (R Nev.) blocked final action.

Malone started talking at 12:15 p. m. He stopped at 10:30 p. m. His filibuster was one of the longest on record (the all - time mark was set by Sen Robert M. LaFollette Sr. in 1908 — 18 hours 23 minutes.) Although most of Malone's talk was devoted to foreign policy, tariffs and "socialism", he did outline his objections to S 3357:

1. The provision requiring states where machines are legal to reaffirm their legality was critized as infringing on states' rights.

2. The provision outlawing shipment of the slots back to the manufacturer for repair if the repair plant is in a state which prohibits the machines drew Malone's fire, because, he said, Nevada slot machines are made and repaired in Illinois where they are illegal.

The Senate again took up the bill Sept. 21, and Malone again started to speak. He moved to send the measure back to conference, but the motion was defeated by voice vote. Then he started his filibuster.

The Senate finally gave in at 11:25 p. m. Leaders agreed to take up another bill the following day.

Johnson called for consideration of the report again on Dec. 18 during the "lame duck" session. Despite a sore throat, Malone spoke against it for about 50 minutes, and forced final action over to Dec. 19. After another Malone speech then, the Senate passed the conference report by voice vote.

The House passed the report on Dec. 20, also by voice vote. This cleared the bill to the White House, where it was signed Jan. 2, 1951.

Wire Tapping

An investigation of alleged wire tapping on the part of Washington, D. C., police officers was voted Aug. 2, 1950 by the Senate District of Columbia Committee. Begun Aug. 9, the probe continued through Sept. 13. A bill (S 4154) was introduced subsequently to outlaw wire tapping in the District of Columbia except to run down criminals and subversives, but no final action was taken on it.

Called because of persistent charges that Washington police had engaged in wire tapping on numerous occasions, the investigation ultimately centered around the activities of one man, Police Lieut. Joseph Shimon, then on leave from the Washington force. Before the inquiry was over, Shimon admitted he had tapped the telephone wires of Howard Hughes when the millionaire plane maker was being raked over the coals by the Senate War Investigating Committee in 1947. (See CQ Almanac, Vol. III, p. 658.) The man who was chairman of that Committee, Sen. Owen Brewster (R Maine), also figured in the 1950 hearings.

The wire tapping probe was handled by a Subcommittee, whose members were: Claude Pepper (D Fla.), chairman, Matthew M. Neely (D W. Va.), Robert C. Hendrickson (R N.J.) and Harry Darby (R Kan.).

At its opening hearing which began Aug. 9 behind closed doors, the Subcommittee received a secret report made by the Washington Police Department on alleged wire tapping done by Shimon. Sen. Pepper said later that the report, which up to that time had been in the hands of the Justice Department contained an admission by Shimon that he had engaged in wire tapping over a period of years. Shimon was not present for the meeting.

Public Hearings Commence

On Aug. 17, the Subcommittee held its first public hearing. The first witness was Police Detective James G. Bryant who stated that he participated in the tapping of the telephones of both Hughes and of Hughes' aides in 1947. The witness said he did so under orders of Shimon, and that Shimon told him the Washington U. S. District Attorney, George Morris Fay, knew they were tapping the lines. Both Bryant and Shimon, at that time, were assigned as special investigators on Fay's staff.

Bryant testified that "Lieutenant Shimon had openly and frequently told of working for a Senate Investigating Committee." The witness did not identify the "Committee" and Subcommittee members did not ask him to. But Bryant did add that he later became convinced, by Shimon's actions, that the wire tapping was not official business. He also explained that tapping of the Hughes' telephone took place at the Carlton Hotel and that the eavesdropping on Hughes' staff was at the Mayflower Hotel nearby. He identified these staff members as Noah Dietrich, a vice president of the Hughes Tool Company, and Tom Slack, Hughes' attorney.

Private John H. McHale followed Bryant as a witness and testified he had participated with Shimon and others in the Hughes wire-tap until the Senate War Investigating Committee wound up its sensational hearing on the Hughes case. McHale also was an investigator on Fay's staff. McHale said he worked in both the Occidental and Mayflower Hotels. Most of the conversations he heard, he said, dealt with "Pan American information". He testified that he had seen Shimon flash a $1,000 bill after the Hughes phone had been tapped and, McHale added, he had been told that Shimon never tapped a wire for less that $1,000. "I put two and two together", he explained.

The witness testified that Shimon had worked on another wire-tap assignment in 1947 at still another hotel, and that later Shimon, and two other unnamed detectives, were commended at headquarters for that job. He said the Shimon commendation was on the stationery of Rep. W. Kingsland Macy (R N.Y.).

Private Ones Resumed

On Aug. 18, the Subcommittee again closeted itself in executive session, this time to hear Lieut. Shimon testify. Accounts of what went on were provided by Sen. Pepper.

After the Aug. 18 session, Pepper said, Shimon admitted he had tapped telephone wires in the capital in 1947 "in connection with" the Howard Hughes war contracts probe. Asked whether Shimon had stated at whose request the Hughes wire tapping was done, the Floridian replied:

"I don't know whether he said it was at Senator Brewster's request or at the request of somebody else." Pepper said Shimon had "intimated" that his Hughes wire tapping activity was related to complaints by Brewster that a strange man was shadowing him.

Shimon specifically denied testimony previously given by two of his brother police officers that he ordered them to tap Hughes' telephone wires, Pepper related.

Called for a second day of closed-door Subcommittee questioning, Aug. 22, Shimon denied that he had ever received any pay for his eavesdropping, according — again — to a Pepper account. Shimon testified he received "no compensation whatsoever for any wire tapping that he did," Pepper recounted. The Senator pointed out this was at variance with testimony previously given the Subcommittee that witnesses had seen Shimon pocket a $1,000 bill about the time of the conclusion of the 1947 Senate investigation of Hughes.

Pepper said there was such "violent conflict" between Shimon's testimony and that received previously "that there is no chance of reconciling one with the other."

Shimon Recounts Testimony

The much-investigated police lieutenant re-told his story to the Subcommittee at a public hearing beginning Aug. 25. For four days he described the complex events of 1946 and 1947 leading up to the wire tapping job he performed while Hughes was up for a Senate hearing.

Shimon said he had trailed at that time a man named Abner (Chick) Lappin, identified as a public relations official. Shimon said that Lappin was the person Sen. Brewster had felt was "shadowing" the Senator, and whom the latter had consequently asked Shimon to trail in turn.

In connection with this, Shimon admitted tapping the telephone of Hugh Fulton, a Washington lawyer and one-time general counsel for the Senate War Investigating Committee. Shimon further admitted tapping the phones of several of the Hughes representatives when they were in town for the hearings.

At several points during the lengthy hearing Shimon had sharp words with two of the Committeemen. At one point Pepper (D Fla.), Subcommittee chairman, threatened to cite him for contempt. At other points, Sen. Neely (D. W. Va.), expressed disbelief in Shimon's story.

Shimon reiterated he started shadowing Lappin to find out why he was shadowing Brewster. (Lappin denied ever having shadowed Brewster; said he was "probably out of the city" at the time.)

Lappin Testimony

But Lappin, when he took the stand, threw the hearing into an uproar by asserting that the late Sen. Josiah Bailey (D N.C.) had told him that a "political prostitute" was having his phone tapped. That, Lappin said, was in 1945 during the overseas air monopoly fight. Bailey "nodded his head" at Brewster when he made the remark, Lappin said. (On the Senate floor Brewster referred to this testimony as "perjured" and denied that Bailey would have said such a thing about him.)

Shimon later brought in another name. He said he was sure that a man named "O'Connor or O'Connell", working for Hughes, had tapped the telephone of Sen. Brewster. He said he had found evidence of the tap while trailing Lappin.

On Sept. 11 and 12, a man named Henry W. Grunewald was a witness before the Subcommittee, which wanted to hear him because he was reported to have been the intermediary between Sen. Brewster and Shimon during the Hughes investigation. Shimon had said during his appearance that he knew Grunewald, a former boxer and private investigator but denied he had reported to him on wire tapping activities.

The Subcommittee elicited from Grunewald the explanation that he had spent much of the summer on a farm near The Plains, Va., recovering from an illness that kept him from reading the papers. He said he didn't know anyone was looking for him.

But when Grunewald was asked why he used the name of Harry Woodring, Secretary of War in the administraton of the late President Roosevelt, when he rented a suite he occupied at the Washington Hotel, he refused to reply. Sen. Neely, the Subcommittee's acting chairman, said the witness's citation for contempt of Congress would be considered. Grunewald, however, was communicative on several other points — he said he had worked for Samuel F. Pryor, vice-president of Pan American Airways, when Pryor believed his lines were being tapped, but he denied this was in 1947, at the time of the Hughes investigation.

On Sept. 12 Mrs. Frances Dustin, administrative assistant to Sen. Brewster, told the Subcommittee that in September, 1947, she had handed Shimon an envelope of cash on Brewster's orders in payment for his expenses at the Mayflower and Carlton Hotels. She said she also first knew of Shimon coming to the Senator's office to check his telephone for a possible tap in September, 1947.

Mrs. Dustin also told how Gruenwald visited Brewster at his office one or two times a week and sometimes less often during the previous three or four years.

Acting Chairman Neely on September 13 abruptly recessed the hearings, at least, he said at the time, until after the November elections. But the hearings were not resumed again during the year.

Bill Introduced

On Sept 14, Sen. Neely, together with Sen. Darby, (R Kan.), a member of the Subcommittee, introduced a bill (S 4154) outlawing the tapping of telephones in the District of Columbia except to run down criminals and subversives. The full District unit held hearings on it Dec. 20. Washington officials made their views known. The Committee reported the bill Jan. 2, 1951. But the Senate failed to act.

As introduced, S 4154 made unauthorized wire tapping a felony with penalties up to $10,000 or 10 years in jail, or both. Possession of tapping equipment with intent to use it unlawfully also was made a felony, punishable by not more than $5,000 or five years' imprisonment or both. Under the bill, only law enforcement officers of the District or federal government were permitted to engage in wire tapping, upon a showing to a court that the tapping would solve or prevent a crime or a subversive act.

Survey of Interstate Crime

S RES 202

SUMMARY

Sen. Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.) on Jan. 5, 1950, introuced S Res 202 calling for a nation - wide investigation into organized crime. Introduction of this resolution was the first step of an investigation that lasted throughout 1950 and which was not scheduled to end until the following year.

Kefauver's resolution was approved by the Senate Judiciary Committee Feb. 27. The plan called for an investigation by a subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee, of which Kefauver was a member. But at the same time Edwin C. Johnson (D Colo.), chairman of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, proposed a similar investigation, to be made by his group.

The Senate Democratic Policy Committee then decided on a compromise and merged the two plans into one, to be conducted by a special joint committee made up of Judiciary and Interstate Commerce Committee members appointed by the Vice-President. The Senate approved this plan May 3 after Republicans tried in vain to get the right to name their own members of the Committee.

The Committee, under Kefauver, subsequently held extensive hearings in Washington, Miami, Tampa, St. Louis, Kansas City, Mo., Chicago, Las Vegas, Los Angeles, New York City and Philadelphia. The group submitted an interim report Aug. 18 which said it had found evidence that a loose interstate crime network possibly existed. A final report was scheduled for Feb. 28, 1951.

COMMITTEE

Sponsored by Sen. Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.), S Res 202 called for a $100,000 investigation of alleged interstate crime syndicates by a subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee to be completed by July 31, 1950. Kefauver was a member of the Judiciary Committee.

The resolution was referred to a subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee headed by Kefauver. His group reported the measure favorably Feb. 20. The full Committee approved it Feb. 27 after adding an amendment by Pat McCarran (D Nev.) specifying that the proposed group would be barred from recommending any changes in state gambling laws.

The bill then went to the Senate Rules Committee for approval of the $100,0000 expenditure. Kefauver supported his plan before the Committee March 8; but on the same day Johnson (Colo.) appeared to ask that his own Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee be given money to make an interstate crime probe, since, he said, any interstate crime laws resulting would have to go through his group.

Rules considered the two plans until March 23, when it voted unanimously to approve a $50,000 investigation by the Judiciary Committee. The revised resolution then went to the Senate

On April 4 Johnson introduced S Res 249 asking for authorization to make a crime probe linked to the specific goals outlined in two anti-crime bills (S 3357, aimed at slot machines; S 3358, to ban transmission of gambling data) which were before Johnson's Committee (See page 433.).

Compromise Drawn Up

The Democratic Policy Committee stepped in April 4 and invited Kefauver and Johnson to appear before it to try for a compromise. A new plan was later announced by the Policy Committee April 11.

The Policy Committee's compromise plan provided for an investigation by a special five-man committee to be made up of Judiciary and Interstate Commerce Committee members who would be selected by the Vice-President. On the group would be three Democrats and two Republicans. It could spend $150,000 and would file its final report by Feb. 28, 1951, and recommend needed legislation.

Senate Republican leaders, however, made a counter-decision April 12 to wage a floor fight against the proposed plan. Robert A. Taft (R Ohio), chairman of the GOP Policy Committee, said his party's opposition stemmed specifically from what he said was the Democrats' attempt to eliminate Republicans Forrest C. Donnell (Mo.) and Homer Ferguson (Mich.) from the investigating group. Taft said the GOP favored the original crime probe resolution which would have placed the inquiry in the hands of the Judiciary Committee alone. Ferguson and/or Donnell would serve under this resolution, but under terms of the Democrats' compromise plan they might be excluded, he said.

Ferguson complained he had "been euchred out" of the inquiry. Pointing out he was third-ranking minority member of the Judiciary Committee, he inferred this will exclude him from being named one of the two Republicans on the inquiry panel.

Kefauver tried to call up his resolution for floor debate April 19, but Forrest C. Donnell (R Mo.) opposed a unanimous-consent request to consider the measure ahead of other bills.

The resolution was finally called up May 3. Kefauver offered the compromise plan as a substitute amendment to his original S Res 202.

Before the vote on the substitute, Republicans argued the investigation should be put into the hands of the Judiciary Committee. Ferguson argued the Judiciary was the proper place for such an investigation since the members are either lawyers or ex-judges.

Voting Begins

Republicans then sought to have their two representatives on the Committee named by the GOP leadership instead of Barkley. This move was defeated on a strictly party-line vote of 39 to 31.

The roll-call vote on Kefauver's motion to substitute the Policy Committee plan was a tie, 35-35. President of the Senate Alben W. Barkley cast the deciding ballot and the motion carried 36-35. The Senate then voted on the final bill as amended. Only Donnell voted against it, and the resolution was adopted 69-1. (Roll-call votes p. 562.)

Barkley named the five members of the Committee May 10, saying he had not discussed the appointments with the President. Kefauver was picked to head the Committee. With him were to be Herbert R. O'Conor (D Md.), Lester C. Hunt (D Wyo.), Charles W. Tobey (R N.H.) and Alexander Wiley (R Wis.).

HEARINGS

The new Committee launched its inquiry in Miami without previous announcement and behind locked doors. On hand in the Florida metropolis for the initial hearings, held May 26 and 27, were Kefauver and Hunt. Kefauver said the surprise opening of the inquiry was for the purpose of examining minutely the Florida activities of Frank Erickson, New York gambler and bookmaker, but he said a great deal also had been learned about Florida crime and gambling activities. Hunt disclosed the hearings had established a "definite link" between certain Florida gamblers and underworld characters in other states.

On June 9 the Committee held another closed-door session, this time in Washington. The Bureau of Narcotics gave the Committee a list of 800 persons alleged to be members of a criminal network. Tobey said names the Committee had encountered in Miami were on the list.

President Truman June 17 opened income tax files and other confidential date to the Committee. On June 22 the first public hearings were held.

Wayne Coy, chairman of the Federal Communications Commission, the first witness, suggested the Continental Press Service, of Cleveland, might be involved in violations of the anti-trust laws through its distribution of racing news to bookmakers.

The Committee June 23 heard James V. Bennett, director of the Federal Bureau of Prisons, urge a study of the means by which gang leaders in the country recruit their forces and enforce order in their mobs. He said universities and research agencies could be persuaded to make such a study, which would help in determining if legislative remedies would be helpful.

Another witness the same day, Clifton C. Garner, chief postal inspector, described for the Committee the Post Office Department's efforts to bring proceedings against an East St. Louis, Ill., firm — C. J. Rich and Co. — accused of conducting a lottery, based on the company's business of sending out tips on the races and accepting bets. Though the company did a gross business of $500,000 a day, Garner said, a Federal judge held that no Federal law covered the alleged offense and advised broadening of the postal statutes. The case was then dropped.

U. S. Narcotics Commissioner H. J. Anslinger June 28 told the Committee a boom was underway in counterfeiting, smuggling, narcotics peddling and illegal liquor traffic, and the Treasury Department was badly in need of more manpower to fight these criminal groups and break up their operations.

Return To Florida

The Committee returned to Miami for open hearings July 13. Initial witness at the Miami hearings was Daniel Sullivan, director of the Miami Crime Commission, who said Frank Costello, Frank Erickson and Joe Adonis were also top figures in south Florida gambling spots. Florida's Attorney General Richard Erwin took the stand to say law enforcement in the state was pretty much a local matter, but it was sometimes difficult to gather evidence in these local cases. Kefauver said his committee had easily subpoenaed "a whole carload of records". Melvin J. Richard, a member of the city council of Miami Beach, presented evidence purporting to show that Claude A. Renshaw, city manager of Miami Beach, gave orders to the police there on what gamblers and what gambling rackets were to be permitted to operate.

The Dade County (Miami) sheriff, James Sullivan, spent most of July 14 explaining to the Senators the $40,000 increase in his net worth he had enjoyed since he assumed the office six years ago. He submitted a statement showing that since 1944, he had drawn $51,000 as salary, made $30,000 in profits on real estate and had received $12,000 in rents and interest. It developed, however, that Sullivan had recently filed amended tax returns for the last three years and these, it was said, showed something like $50,000 more in income than the originals filed in those years. Sullivan contended the solution to the problem of gambling was to legalize it.

Sheriff's Role

The Committee heard July 15 these testimonial highlights: 1. Abe Allenberg said Frank Erickson, New York gambler, had bought $2,500 worth of tickets to a Democratic National Committee dinner in Florida in 1947. 2. Sheriff Walter Clark, of Broward County, Fla., acknowledged he was a partner in the Broward Amusement Co., large-scale operators of a "bolita" numbers lottery, an illegal Cuban gambling game. Clark also said he knew of no slot machines operating in his county, but when told by the Committee that the company in which he held a partnership paid Federal excise taxes on a number of slot machines, he said he didn't know anything about that.

The upshot of the Florida inquiry was that Florida Gov. Fuller Warren July 17 ordered a "full and complete" investigation, based on the gambling evidence unearthed by the Senators.

Missouri Hearings

Moving on to Missouri for a one-day, closed hearing, Kefauver announced at the end of the day July 18 that gambling operations in St. Louis were "nothing approaching the magnitude" of what the Committee had found in Florida. But he added the inquiry would be continued, with emphasis on overlapping of St. Louis and Chicago crime. Kefauver also said the Committee had uncovered evidence that Western Union agents in Missouri handled bets on a 25-per cent commission. He added that if WU officials had taken the pains to find out, " it was bound to come to their attention" that their agents were operating in a dual capacity.

The Committee held two days of closed hearings in Kansas City, Mo., July 20 and 21. Kefauver said he would return to Kansas City later for open hearings.

On July 31 another secret hearing was held in Washington which, Kefauver said, was in preparation for future open hearings in Kansas City and St. Louis.

Questioned in Washington were John T. English, East St. Louis police commissioner for the past 13 years, and Leo J. Dougherty, a former commissioner who was then a well-to-do contractor and Democratic State Treasurer.

Kefauver later disclosed English denied receiving any pay-offs for the open gambling in his town and Dougherty denied receiving any political contributions from gamblers or other racketeers. English, Kefauver said, was questioned about the open gambling in East St. Louis and he attributed it at least in part to the 60-member police force which has the job of protecting the city of 80,000 people. Questioned about the activities in his city of a firm which reportedly solicited horse race bets through Western Union employees—in at least 19 states, English said he had been advised there was no case against the firm because it maintained only a postoffice box in the Illinois city.

Resumption in Washington

The Senate's crime investigating committee shifted the scene of its Florida gambling probe to Washington Aug. 9 and took new testimony from some witnesses who had failed to show up when the Committee held its hearings in Miami.

Among those testifying were William H. Johnston, who operated horse and dog tracks in Chicago and Florida, and who acknowledged that he put about $100,000 into the 1948 compaign of Gov. Fuller Warren of Florida. But he described his contributions, not all of it his own money, as personal, and, therefore, not illegal. Among those who chipped in to make up the $100,000, Johnston said, were: C. V. Griffin, Florida citrus grower and Warren's 1948 campaign manager, who also testified at the hearing; Louis E. Wolfson, Florida industrialist and real estate owner; J. R. Johnston, (brother to William H.), who contributed $35,000; Max Silverberg, of Miami Beach, Fla., who gave $10,000; and James R. Bussey, of St. Petersburg, Fla., who gave $15,000.

In addition to Johnston, the Committee heard from officials of the multi-million-dollar "S & G" bookmaking syndicate in Miami Beach. Jules Levitt, one of the syndicate's six partners, said the outfit had closed down two weeks previously. Newspaper publicity, he told the senators, had ruined the once flourishing business. He denied a suggestion that Chicago bookmaking interests had muscled in on the syndicate in 1949, forcing it to take in a Harry Russell as a new partner. The Committee had been trying for three months to subpoena Russell but had been unable to locate him.

Besides hearing testimony from Jules Levitt, the Committee also heard from three other "S & G" partners—Leo Levitt, Harold Salvey and Edward Rosenbaum. Ben Cohen, lawyer for the syndicate, testified also.

Race Track Angle

Before hearing Johnston explain his contributions to Gov. Warren's campaign, the Committee took testimony from Griffin, who passed on the information that "strong-arm men," for powerful gambling interests threatened Warren's life last winter. Griffin said he got this only second hand, from several persons he did not identify, last December. At the time, he said, the Governor was in a hospital suffering from a "nervous condition." Griffin further testified that a Chicago and Florida race track operator — who was described as an associate of Al Capone gang members—contributed heavily to the Warren campaign, apparently with a view of winning subsequent protection for gambling operations in Florida.

Johnston, the race-track operator, then took the witness stand and denied his contributions were made with any such motive. "I didn't expect anything," he said.

Griffin had implied that it was Johnston who may have influenced Gov. Warren in 1949 to call off a special inquiry into Florida gambling and other matters, for which Griffin was to have been a special investigator.

The following day, Aug. 10, testimony was taken from Meyer Schine, Miami hotel owner, who said he hired detectives to keep bookies out of the premises.

INTERIM REPORT

The Senate's Special Crime Investigating Committee Aug. 18 submitted to Congress a 10,000-word report on its work since its organization, and the consensus of its findings was:

Organized criminals not only had a strong grip on gambling and related illegal activities but also were moving fast into legitimate business fields. They had been attracted particularly to enterprises where large amounts of cash were handled, or which had black market potentialities, including hotels, restaurants, night clubs, meat and provision companies, liquor stores, beer and whiskey firms, automobile agencies and small steel companies. Recently transportation companies and public utilities, which had large purchasing programs had attracted their interest.

But its inquiry, the Committee reported, did "not yet. . .warrant a conclusion as to whether or not the various criminal organizations are knit into one or more nation-wide syndicates."

NEW HEARINGS

Resuming hearings in Washington Aug. 22, the Committee heard testimony that a man took a $1,000 fee from a New York candy manufacturer in payment for using his influence to get the manufacturer a sugar quota from the Office of Price Administration during the war.

But the manufacturer, David Lubben, told the Committee Aug. 22 he never got the quota. Called before the Committee to relate his role in the intricate design of black marketeering in sugar in wartime New York. Lubben centered his main story on the difficulties of the Eatsum Food Products Company in getting sugar for the candy it made. It was a new firm, he said, and could get no sugar quota from the OPA. To continue in business, Lubben told the senators, he had sought to buy preferential treatment in Washington and avoid using the black market as a sugar supply source.

Lubben then created excitement when he related that he had paid a Washington lawyer — whom he later identified as Victor M. Messall — a fee of $1,000 to get a quota for him after he had been told Messall was "Harry Truman's campaign manager for Congress or the Senate or something."

Messall was in the Committee room and was called to the witness stand. He asked Chairman Kefauver to have Lubben stand up. Taking a good look at him, Messall said he had never seen him in his life and had certainly never accepted a fee from him.

Truman Secretary

Messall said he was secretary to Mr. Truman when the President was a senator between 1935 and 1941, and managed Mr. Truman's campaign for re-election to the Senate in 1940.

After Messall denied knowing Lubben, Committee Counsel Rudolph Halley read a letter written in 1945 to Army Lt. Frank G. Harris and signed by Messall, in which reference was made to efforts to obtain from the Commodity Credit Corp. an additional allowance of corn syrup for Lubben's company. Lubben had testified that Harris took him to see Messall in the first place. Upon hearing the letter, the witness said he might have acted for Lubben without remembering him. Messall said an associate in his firm probably dictated it and handled the transaction.

Asked by Kefauver if he had used his former connection with the President in his business, Messall replied: "I didn't advertise it, but I was proud of it." He asserted he had never told anyone he had any special influence in the capital because of his former association.

Sugar Quotas

Lubben further testified that the Messall fee was only one of several efforts he made to secure a sugar quota. He said he paid another fee of $2,500 to Frank S. Ketchum, also a Washington lawyer, but like the Messall expenditure, this proved too to be in vain. A man in the Committee room thereupon jumped up and shouted that the witness was lying. He identified himself as Ketchum and said he worked six or eight months on Lubben's case for the retainer, which he held was reasonable and proper. He added he billed the client for an additional $500 which was never paid.

Eventually, Lubben testified, he went to the black market for his sugar, after meeting a man named Louis J. Roth and selling him a half interest in the Eatsum Company. Roth, he said, told him of a firm named the Tavern Fruit Juice Company for which he had just secured a quota of 14 million pounds of sugar a year. But again, Lubben said, a sugar supply eluded him and he complained, "I never got enough to sweeten your coffee."

Later the real purchasers of the Roth interest in his business turned out to have been William Giglio and Frank Livorsi, owners of the Tavern Fruit Juice Company. Lubben said he finally lost control of the business and managed to save for himself only a plant the business had in the Bronx.

Witness Subpoenaed

One of the men named as a member of the Miami Beach S and G Syndicate, Harry Russell, finally was brought before the Committee Sept. 19. When asked why he had apparently avoided subpoena, Russell declined, on constitutional grounds, to answer. He also refused to answer questions about the Syndicate.

Russell was told to return for additional questions Sept. 22 and to bring a lawyer with him. He did not bring a lawyer, however, and he continued to refuse to answer questions.

The Committee voted Sept. 6 to ask the Senate to cite Russell for contempt of Congress. S Res 358 was introduced to that effect. The Senate approved the resolution unanimously Sept. 23. (See page 433.)

Meantime, a former Chicago police lieutenant, William Drury, who was expected to testify before the Committee in Chicago, was shot and killed in ambush Sept. 25 as he drove his car into the garage of his Chicago home. In Washington, Kefauver called Drury's slaying "a terrible and awful thing" but he added, "I don't know if it was related to our investigation." Kefauver said he had told George Robinson, the Committee's assistant counsel, about three weeks previously to get in touch with Drury, but he explained he had learned after the slaying Robinson had not done so. The Tennesseean also added he had had some correspondence at one time with Drury, about Drury's possible employment by the Committee, but he added nothing came of this.

Kansas City Revisited

The Committee returned to Kansas City for open hearings Sept. 28. First of the more than 30 scheduled witnesses was Hampton S. Chambers, a former Kansas City police commissioner who was removed from office by Gov. Forrest Smith after the slaying of Charles Binaggio and Charles Gargotta early in 1950. Chambers said he had been brought under pressure to make changes in the police department favorable to the late Binaggio.

Roy McKittrick, former Missouri attorney general, told the Committee that the underworld had put pressure on him to withdraw as a Democratic candidate for governor in 1948. It was Gov. Smith who won the Democratic primary and subsequent election that year. McKittrick said the first offer of $35,000 — to get out of the race — was made him through Clarence Owen, a St. Louis race news service operator. Later two direct offers — one for $1,000 a month beginning in May, 1948 — came from Binaggio, the witness said.

Slaying Victims

Two victims of Kansas City gang killings— Charles Binaggio, alleged underworld and political leader, and Wolf C. Rimann, spot slaying victim in 1949 — were mentioned frequently at the hearings.

Joe Digiovanni, wholesale liquor dealer and a reputed leader of the secret Sicilian society, Mafia, told the Committee his brother, Vinson, was interested in a firm which handled a brand of liquor for which Rimann was seeking a distributorship, but said he knew nothing about the slaying of the juke box and pin ball machine distributor.

Bribe Reported

R. Robert Cohn, police commissioner ousted by Gov. Smith, told the committee Binaggio once tried to bribe him—Binaggio wanted to "open up the town"—by tossing a roll of bills into his lap.

"I tossed them right back," Cohn said.

Gov. Smith appeared as a surprise witness and told the Committee Binaggio had had no influence in his office. He said Binaggio's political strength had been "exaggerated," and said he knew nothing about purported attempts by Binaggio to have Roy McKittrick, former attorney general, withdraw from the 1948 primary election for governor which was won by Smith.

The hearings produced a reference to the heyday of Tom Pendergast. James Balestrere admitted he had been in the gambling business and that during prohibition he sold sugar to bootleggers. He said that in the mid-thirties he asked Pendergast for a job and that without asking for funds Pendergast placed him in a gambling establishment. All he had to do, he said, was pick up his share of the profits, or about $900, once a month.

"Mr. Pendergast used to do that for a lot of people around here," Balestrere said.

Laxity Claimed

At the close Sept. 30 of three days of hearings in Kansas City, Kefauver recommended that citizens use the newly-formed City Crime Commission to keep Kansas City free of corruption. He said testimony showed some laxity in law enforcement in Jackson County, outside Kansas City.

Kefauver said the Kansas City hearings produced valuable and substantial information on interstate crime operations. Kefauver recommended that Digiovanni be indicted for perjury.

Digiovanni admitted on Sept. 30 he had been arrested for sending extortion notes, for murder and for kidnapping. Before the Committee in July and at an open hearing Sept. 29. Digiovanni denied he ever had been arrested on those charges.

Kefauver told the witness he was perjuring himself to protect his wholesale liquor permit.

Chicago Hearings

The Committee shifted to Chicago Oct. 5 for three days of closed hearings. After the hearings, Kefauver said the crime syndicate Al Capone once ruled still was operating. Kefauver said the syndicate's interests extended far beyond Chicago and that the hearings produced "evidence of gangsters muscling into legitimate business and of political ties between gangsters and politicians of both parties."

In Chicago, Illinois Gov. Adlai E. Stevenson appeared to appeal for federal aid in the fight against crime.

KEFAUVER PROPOSALS

Among Stevenson's recommendations was repeal of the federal stamp tax on slot machines. Kefauver made similar recommendations in a speech Oct. 6 to the Executives Club of Chicago.

He proposed federal legislation to ban interstate shipment of gambling devices, require a 5-minute delay in transmission of race results, keep racing wire services out of hoodulms' hands, forbid use of the mails to clear bets, require more information on money handled by gangsters and racketeers in income tax returns, prohibit conspiracy to violate state laws through interstate commerce and coordinate investigative and intelligence functions of the Post Office, Internal Revenue Bureau and Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Ricca Questioned

Among witnesses questioned in Chicago was Paul (The Waiter) Ricca, said to be top man in the national underworld setup of the Sicilian secret society, Mafia. Investigators said his answers as to what he did with $391,000 during the last three years were "unsatisfactory."

Kefauver described as "fishy" the story of another witness, Hugh Bennett, auditor for the Miami Beach, Florida, Kennel Club and the Sportsman's Park race track in Cicero, Chicago suburb. Bennett told of loans totaling $80,000 to Ricca.

A reluctant witness, Kefauver said, was Mrs. Ann Fischetti, wife of Charley Fischetti, himself a cousin of Al Capone and known in Chicago as the syndicate's "enforcer." She refused to reveal her husband's whereabouts.

Testimony of two witnesses from California, John Rosselli, once convicted of extortion, and Jack I. Dragna, a Sicilian, reportedly involved an attempt by the Capone syndicate to muscle into the racing news service field.

Committee staff members followed up the hearings with questioning of three police captains on their wealth and incomes and with a study of records of Continental Press, a racing news service, in preparation for resumption of the Chicago hearings.

New York Hearings

The Committee conducted hearings in New York City Oct. 11 and investigators claimed to have uncovered a link between New Jersey gamblers and plush establishments in Saratoga County, N. Y.

Kefauver said investigators were unable to locate Joe Adonis, linked with gambling operations by other investigations and considered a key witness.

The Committee chairman said Meyer Lansky, decribed by witnesses as an associate of Frank Costello, might be cited for contempt if he continued to refuse to say whether he met Charles (Lucky) Luciano on a trip to Europe and whether he had connections with the Flamingo club in Las Vegas, Nev., the Beverly club near New Orleans and "if he had any interests in Saratoga."

Four businessmen told the New York sessions of being lured from New York to a Lodi, N.J., gambling center, Kefauver said, and two gamblers told of operating dice games or roulette wheels in Lodi, Hasbrouck Heights, Palisades and Fort Lee, all in New Jersey, and near Miami, Fla., in Omaha, Neb., Denver and Saratoga.

Kefauver indicated the local phase of an alleged interstate gambling setup centered around Lodi.

New Chicago Inquiry

At a resumption of its Chicago sessions Oct. 18, the Committee learned of big financial dealings of police captains and of former Capone gangsters and was told of the operations of the racing news services.

Capt. Thomas Harrison testified at closed hearings he once received a gift of $32,500 from a former race wire service operator and gambler the late John Lynch. At the end of the week, Mayor Martin H. Kennelly said Police Commissioner John E. Prendergast had been asked to obtain from Harrison a formal statement on his testimony about the gift.

The Committee's activities had resulted in the firing of a race track police chief and his arrest. Robert (Big Bob) McCullough, 58, Cedar Lake, Ind., was removed from his job at Sportsman's Park under an order by the Illinois Racing Board. McCullough also had held a similar job at the Miami Kennel Club, Miami, Fla.

As he left the Committee hearing after testifying Oct. 18, McCullough was arrested for questioning about the slaying of William Drury, who had supplied data on the underworld to the Committee.

Thomas Kelly of Chicago, general manager of Continental Press Service, told of operations of his service and of the now-defunct Trans-American News Publishing Company.

Kefauver said testimony not then released showed clearly the Capone syndicate set up Trans-American to oppose Continental Press, then operated by the late James M. Ragen, a gang killing victim.

Philadelphia Probe

In Philadelphia, Kefauver summed up two days of testimony at closed hearings by saying "there were many expressions of opinion that there have been 'pay-offs' for protection. It is difficult to believe the operation could be so extensive without some protection. There would have to be some."

The hearings produced a conflict over testimony concerning the boss of a numbers racket with an annual take running into millions. The Committee announced that George F. Richardson, assistant superintendent of police, told it Harry (Nig) Rosen of New York, also known as Harry Stromberg, ran the Philadelphia operation.

Richardson denied giving the testimony and the Committee then released a letter it said was written by Richardson that attempted to link Rosen with organized crime in Chicago, New York, Miami, Fla., and Las Vegas, Nev.

Las Vegas Hearings

Closed hearings were held in Las Vegas, Nev., Nov. 15. Committee members said they were shocked and outraged by conditions they found. Wiley said "the same evils exist under legitimate gambling as under illegitimate gambling," and Tobey declared, "It's time that someone got damn mad and shouted, 'Unclean, unclean'."

The Committee had heard Nevada's $600-a-year Lieutenant Governor, Cliff Jones, testify that his 1 per cent of the Golden Nugget in Las Vegas pays him $12,000 a year and that he has an interest in two other gambling spots.

Moe Sedway said his income in 1949 from 7 1/2 per cent of the Flamingo was between $300,000 and $400,000. Benjamin (Bugsy) Siegel, former Los Angeles gambler, had an interest in the plush hotel until his gang-style slaying, the Committee was told.

Reno's Police Chief J. R. Greeson testified a reputed New York gambler, Joseph Stacher, boasted he'd spend $250,000 to change the city administration after Greeson turned down his petition for a club license.

California Survey

The Committee went to Los Angeles Nov. 17. With three members—Kefauver, Wiley, Tobey—present, the Crime Investigating Committee heard Mickey Cohen, reputedly top man in West Coast gambling, declare he was broke, harassed and in debt.

Cohen opened his wallet at a public hearing in Los Angeles and said the $285 it contained was all he had. Although he has been credited with taking over Benjamin (Bugsy) Siegel's gambling empire after Siegel was slain in 1947, Cohen said he was $300,000 in debt.

Siegel, described as a "very close" friend by Cohen, was among his creditors, Cohen said. He did some gambling in California, where gambling isn't legal, "at one time, not now", Cohen told the Committee.

Declaring it was unsatisfied with answers it received from Cohen and from a Los Angeles county undersheriff, the Committee prolonged its investigation in that city before moving to San Francisco to begin hearings Nov. 21. Tobey said it would inquire into a California Crime Commission charge that no major racketeer has been prosecuted for income tax fraud, despite evidence of violations.

The state commission reported several racketeers facing income tax difficulties put large sums into a "paper corporation" set up by federal Internal Revenue Bureau employees.

Return Again to Capitol

Back from the California sessions, the Committee heard a former Miami, Fla., deputy sheriff, George Patton, link gamblers in the Miami resort area with the Dade county sheriff's office. Patton testified he received bribe money to be split among deputy sheriffs.

Patton told the Committee that an oil man he identified as Harry F. Sinclair in January or February of 1950 lost $800,000 in two nights of gambling at the Golden Shores Club, north of Miami Beach, and was permitted to settle the debt for $500,000.

Criticism of the Committee's work came from Sen. Homer Ferguson (R Mich.), who said it had dealt only in widely known generalities and had not been specific enough in probing and exposing crime. In response, Kefauver said he did not believe Ferguson had followed the investigation closely.

Schoeneman Challenge

A challenge came from George J. Schoeneman, federal commissioner of internal revenue, who asked the Committee to produce any evidence that might lead to a tax evasion indictment.

It stemmed from Committee sessions in California, where Nov. 25 three bureau employees were suspended by Schoeneman in connection with charges linking them to transactions with underworld characters.

In another development stemming from the West Coast hearings, the Committee voted to cite David M. Kessel and William N. (Big Bill) Pechart, described as operators of a resort across the Bay from San Francisco, to the Senate for contempt. In Kessel's case, the Committee also voted to bring perjury proceedings.

Cohen Returns Probed

Kefauver revealed Nov. 25 that the Internal Revenue Bureau was investigating the income tax returns of Mickey Cohen of Hollywood.

In Chicago, Police Capt. Thomas Harrison Nov. 25 was suspended from the department because of his testimony before the Committee that he had accepted large loans and gifts from a gambler and a racing wire operator.

In East St. Louis, James J. Carroll, nationally known betting odds maker and a witness before the Committee last April, lost his telephone Nov. 27 after a state's attorney told a utility company the service was being used illegally.

"LAME DUCK" HEARINGS

During the "lame duck" session, the Kefauver unit Dec. 12 heard from Joseph (Joe Adonis) Doto, under bond in New York and New Jersey on gambling charges. Doto refused to answer question after question about gambling, saying a reply might tend to incriminate him.

Salvatore Moretti, Demarest, N. J., alleged to be a big - time gambler, also declined to answer many questions. Moretti told the Committee he had lost his business records and could not give "accurate" answers. Quizzed on his alleged association with gamblers, Moretti declined to answer on the same grounds of possible self-incrimination.

William Moretti, brother of Salvatore, testified Dec. 13 that he was a gambler, but denied that he engaged in illegal gaming. He denied ever mixing in politics, saying "I am a bipartisan. I know politicians of both parties.

James Lynch and Arthur Longano, of New Jersey, also testifed on Dec. 13, but declined to answer certain questions about alleged connection with gambling rings. At a closed session the same day, Emilio Giorgetti, of San Francisco, gave what Senators called "co-operative" testimony about a Las Vegas gambling club.

When the week's testimony had been concluded, Sen. Tobey, a member of the Committee, said state officials had failed to stop gamblers and racketeers, and that "We ought to be indicting some public officials."

Third Chicago Hearing

The Kefauver Committee took its inquiry to Chicago for open hearings Dec. 18, to peer at race wire services. Kefauver called one of them — the Continental Press Service — "the lifeblood of the bookie organization throughout the country."

Eugene Bernstein, attorney for Tony Accardo and Jack Guzik, alleged partners in the "Capone syndicate" told the Committee that he had made out income tax records for Accardo and Guzik which showed they were interested in Chicago bookmaking outfits as well as the giant S and G Syndicate in Miami Beach. The 1949 profits for the pair, according to the records, was $271,415.08.

Thomas F. Kelly, general manager of Continental Press, said the service sold only to publishers of scratch sheets and to area distributors. The latter, he said, sold to subdistributors who sold to bookies. Continental's operations, he averred, was legal.

Bilson R. Ing, vice president of Howard Sports Daily, Baltimore race wire service, said his organization both sent and received race information from Continental. He said all Howard profits were turned over to Continental, but insisted that Howard was not a dummy outfit set up by Continental.

Operators of a large Chicago "policy wheel", Edward P. Jones and Theodore Roe, testified their wheel took in about $8.7 million a year. Jones said the money came from South Side residents who bet a dime or quarter that three particular numbers would be drawn from the wheel. Jones and Roe were held by the State's Attorney after their testimony.

John O'Mara, who said he worked for his brother who was a reported bookie in Kenosha, Wis., testified that he had made payments of more than $7,500 to two city councilmen there—for protection from a crackdown on gambling, according to the witness.

During the Chicago hearings, the Senators were unable to serve a subpoena on Tony Accardo, whom Kefauver termed a leading figure in interstate operations, and whom the Committee wanted to quiz extensively.

Tampa Revisited

The Chicago hearings concluded Dec. 20. On Dec. 29, Sen. Lester C. Hunt (D Wyo.), acting as a Subcommittee of one, represented the Kefauver group at hearings held in Tampa, Fla. Declaring that "much of the criminal business in Tampa is hatched up in New Orleans," Hunt indicated the hearing would delve into liaison between Tampa and New Orleans operations.

Several witnesses appearing before Hunt linked Tampa Sheriff Hugh Culbreath with real estate deals, and an alleged bolita seller, Paul Giglia, testified he personally turned over $1,500 to Sheriff Culbreath. On Dec. 30, two witnesses claimed that besides Culbreath, Tampa's ex - police chief J. L. Eddings and State's Attorney J. Rex Farrior had received payoffs. The payoffs were said to have come from slain gambler Jimmy Velasco, whose cousins — Mario Lounders and Antonio Deschemps—were the witnesses.

When Culbreath took the stand, he defended himself stoutly. During the course of his testimony, he admitted he had filed no federal income tax returns during his pre-sheriff service as a constable. He said he hadn't known public officials were required to do this.

Sen. Hunt adjourned hearings on Dec. 30, after receiving assurances of a follow - up by a Florida grand jury of leads elicited from the testimony.

As 1950 and the life of the 81st Congress expired, the Kefauver Committee prepared to continue hearings in 1951. One of the initial witnesses at a scheduled session for Jan. 5 in Washington was to be Tony Accardo. Accardo, who had eluded Committee scrutiny during the December hearings in Chicago, voluntarily accepted a subpoena Dec. 29 which called for his appearance in the capital.

Trees Award

H. R. 5244—Private Law 1102

By a roll-call vote of 219-127, unusual for a private bill (HR 5244), the House Jan. 2, 1951, cleared to the White House legislation awarding $9,448 to former Lieut. Col. Charles J. Trees of Indianapolis. The money involved personal disbursements made by Trees in winning ultimate acquittal from a 1945 court martial conviction. The Senate had passed the bill on Dec. 15.

Republican opposition to passage of the bill centered on Rep. John Taber's (R N. Y.) assertion that the measure set a precedent for the U. S. to "pay the expenses of every person court-martialed who ultimately is acquitted." But in the end, Congressmen agreed Trees had been mistreated, and approved the bill.

Trees' conviction resulted from charges he unlawfully disposed of government property. President Truman ordered the conviction disapproved when he reviewed it in 1946.

The approved bill was a compromise. On July 27, the House deleted the originally proposed award of $21,948.86, and gave Trees only the right to sue the government. When the Senate considered the bill Sept. 13, it restored the money. The final sum actually granted was set by a conference committee on Dec. 18. The President signed the bill Jan. 12.

McCarthy Charges, Loyalty Probe

SUMMARY

On Feb. 9, 1950, Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy (R Wis.) made a Lincoln Day speech before the Ohio County Women's Republican Club of Wheeling, W. Va., which touched off the bitterest Congressional controversy of 1950, and supplied the Republicans with one of their principal campaign issues. (For chronology of developments in the controversy, see the timetable on page 456.)

In his speech McCarthy made sweeping charges that Communists were then employed in the State Department and were "shaping policy" in that Department. He added that the names of these persons were known to himself as well as to the President and Secretary of State Dean Acheson.

He made similar statements in a string of speeches in other cities. By the time he returned to Washington, McCarthy's allegations had created a sensation.

McCarthy expanded his charges on the Senate floor in a six-hour speech Feb. 20. The following day the Senate unanimously ordered an investigation into the loyalty of State Department employees, past and present.

A subcommittee of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee was set up to conduct the investigation. It held a long series of hearings. McCarthy charged 10 persons by name with having been Communists, spies, Communist sympathizers, or Communist "dupes".

While the hearings were going on the political implications gave election-conscious Administration critics plenty of ammunition. Verbal blasts and counter-barrages over the McCarthy charges filled the political air and continued to reverberate until election day.

The Subcommittee wound up the investigation and filed a formal report to the Senate July 20. The report, signed only by the Democrats in the group, virtually called McCarthy a liar on many counts and absolved the persons charged. One Subcommittee Republican filed a minority report saying the investigation had been inconclusive; the other Republican member promised to file a further dissenting opinion.

Amid bitter debate, the majority report was accepted by the Senate on a strict party-line vote on July 20. That ended the investigation, but debate over State Department loyalty and over McCarthy's tactics continued.

BACKGROUND

The seeds of the Senate's decision to investigate charges of disloyalty in the State Department — and the sensational hearings which sprouted from them — were planted in 1950 during the week of Lincoln's birthday, when Republican Congressmen traditionally make a series of speeches before party groups throughout the country.

In 1950 Sen. McCarthy chose for his subject: "Communism in the State Department". He made his first speech of wide public notice Feb. 9 before 275 guests of the Wheeling, W. Va., Ohio County Women's Republican Club.

According to the Wheeling News Register and the Wheeling Intelligencer, McCarthy made the following statement:

"While I cannot take the time to name all the men in the State Department who have been named as members of the Communist Party and members of a spy ring, I have here in my hand a list of 205 that were known to the Secretary of State as being members of the Communist Party and who, nevertheless, are still working and shaping policy in the State Department."

In Salt Lake City, Utah, on Feb. 10, and later at Reno, Nev., he made similar statements, but specified 57 unnamed persons in the State Department at that time whom he said were Communist Party members or sympathizers.

McCarthy also said that the President and Secretary of State were aware of the Communist infiltration.

When McCarthy returned to the Senate, he inserted in the Record a copy of what he said was the speech he had made in Wheeling. The paragraph alleging 205 Communists in the agency was not included. The speech in the Record said:

"I have in my hand 57 cases of individuals who would appear to be either card-carrying members or certainly loyal to the Communist Party, but who, nevertheless, are still helping to shape our foreign policy."

McCarthy took the Senate floor Feb. 20, and in a six-hour speech described, but did not name, 81 persons whom he said were disloyal employees of the State Department. Democrats denied that disloyal persons were working for the State Department and challenged McCarthy to reveal the names of the persons he was accusing.

McCarthy refused to name names despite repeated efforts by Senate Majority Leader Scott Lucas (D Ill.) to pry them out. McCarthy offered to give the names to any Congressional committee which would meet to weigh his charges. As Lucas pressed him for them, immediately, McCarthy replied that a Senate quorum was lacking, and this launched a series of parliamentary interruptions. At one point, Lucas successfully moved to have the Senate's sergeant-at-arms "compel" Senators to come on the floor to hear the proceedings — the first time in five years resort had been made to this tactic.

Night Session Vote

As the Senate continued into the night, Brien McMahon (D Conn.), recalled from a black-tie party, entered the chamber in formal attire to challenge briskly McCarthy's information sources. McCarthy again refused to divulge them on the floor. Sens. Owen Brewster (R Maine), Karl Mundt (R S.D.) and Wayne Morse (R Ore.) kept the debate going with observations that they all denied were political, but which dealt with the Administration's view of loyalty programs, the Hiss case, the Coplon case, and others. McCarthy's charge that one of the Communists he had in mind was a White House speechwriter touched off more GOP rhetoric.

Only one record vote was taken during McCarthy's six-hour speech, and it followed an exasperated motion by Lucas that the Senate adjourn. The move was rejected, 18-16. (See Page 542). The Senate did not quit for the night until 11:43 p. m.

The following day, Feb. 21, Lucas convened a Senate Democratic caucus which approved his plan of introducing S Res 231 calling for an investigation of McCarthy's charges. The ultimately-approved resolution was also backed by the Democratic Policy Committee, and brought the comment from McCarthy: "Good, I'm very happy about it." He said he felt the Foreign Relations Committee was too close to the State Dept. to handle the inquiry, but that he would not buck a Democratic majority and would cooperate in the probe.

Resolution 231 Approved

The resolution was introduced Feb. 21. Approval of it was by voice vote. and was unanimous. To secure this, however, Lucas accepted a series of Republican modifications to his proposal. These were:

1. By Homer Ferguson (R Mich.), permitting the Foreign Relations group to subpoena the loyalty files and records of State Dept. employees named during the group's inquiry;

2. By Wayne Morse (R Ore.), abetted by Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.), requiring that the Foreign Relations group grant an open, public hearing to individuals whom the group might formally charge with disloyalty.

3. By Ferguson, permitting the inquiry to extend, at the Committee's discretion, into the past employment by the State Dept. of possibly disloyal officials.

The Ferguson subpoena-amendment drew the sharpest debate. Loyalty files of the FBI would be involved, and Lucas and McMahon declared that confidential data and methods of the FBI could be impaired if the records were revealed during the course of the probe. Lucas noted that in the past, the Administration has refused to authorize the submission of such files.

Truman Stand

President Truman backed up Lucas on Feb. 23, saying he still stood by his orders of last year to government agencies which barred releasing confidential files on federal workers.

Republican Senators, scenting political capital, quickly challenged suggestions that submittal would hamper the FBI. Said Ferguson: "The public will never be satisfied if the committee does not look into files on loyalty of State Dept. officials." McCarthy said that without the power to subpena the information, the inquiry would be "completely useless, a complete farce, and nothing but a whitewash."

The investigating subcommittee was named by the Foreign Relations Committee Feb. 25. On it were; Millard E. Tydings (D Md.), chairman, Brien McMahon (D Conn.), Theodore F. Green (D R.I.), Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr. (R Mass.), and Bourke B. Hickenlooper (R Iowa). The Subcommittee was given the following instructions by the full Committee:

"Make a full and complete study and investigation of all government employees now in the Department of State and former employees of the Department of State now in other agencies of the government against whom charges are made, in order to determine whether or not said employees are, or have been, disloyal to the United States and to use the power of subpoena whenever necessary."

Tydings said the instructions would limit the study to charges against persons still working for the government. He said he also assumed the subpoena would not be necessary, but would use it if a request for information was denied.

HEARINGS OPEN

McCarthy was the principal witness during the initial hearings which began on March 8 under the authorizing provisions of S Res 231. During the course of his appearances before the Tydings Subcommittee, McCarthy charged 10 individuals by name with varying degrees of Communist activity. Those named were:

Prof. Frederick L. Schuman, Williams College; Prof. Owen J. Lattimore, Johns Hopkins University; Prof. Harlow Shapley, Harvard; Dorothy Kenyon, New York attorney; Gustavo Duran, former State Dept. employee, and then a UN official; Haldore Hanson, State Dept. officer; Philip C. Jessup, Ambassador at large; Mrs. Esther Brunauer, State Dept. Officer; John Service, Foreign Service officer; and Stephen Brunauer, Navy scientist.

CASES

Here is a summary of the charges McCarthy made against the 10 individuals as well as rebuttal testimony and the official decision rendered in the Subcommittee's majority report:

Owen J. Lattimore

On the case of Dr. Owen J. Lattimore, McCarthy said he would "stand or fall." The charges he made against Lattimore were the strongest and the most complex of the whole gamut of charges McCarthy made. Lattimore was a professor of political science and Far Eastern history at the Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, and director of the University's Walter Hines Page School. He had been an author of a dozen books and hundreds of newspaper and magazine articles on the Far East and had been a lecturer.

During the war, Lattimore was Far Eastern director of the Office of War Information and later a consultant to OWI. In 1945 he accompanied the Pauley group on reparations to Japan as a consultant. In 1941 he was adviser to Chiang Kai-shek at Chungking, an appointment suggested by the late President Roosevelt. He once lectured on a two-day panel before the State Department. He accompanied Vice President Wallace to Siberia and China in 1944.

McCarthy first publicly mentioned Lattimore before the Subcommittee on March 13. Then he said Lattimore was "pro-Communist" and "an architect of our Far Eastern policy." He said Lattimore "had a desk" at the State Department and was frequently consulted by high ranking State Department officials.

Then on March 20 before an executive session of the group, McCarthy charged: "He (Lattimore) is the top espionage agent (of Russia) in the United States. This man was the top of the ring of which (Alger) Hiss was a part." McCarthy added: "The FBI files will show in detail, not the case of a man who merely favors Russia, not the case of a man who disagrees with what we think of Russia, but the case of a man who is definitely an espionage agent."

He added: "I know there are some in the (Justice) Department who know the facts who feel the case (against Lattimore) is ready for prosecution." Asked if he was sure Lattimore was the biggest Russian spy, McCarthy said: "By far and away. I think he is the top Russian spy. He has been contacting and giving information to Russian agents as a member of an espionage ring."

Speech In Senate

On March 30 McCarthy took his case against Lattimore to the Senate floor. He said Lattimore was involved in the so-called Amerasia stolen documents case (see page 450); that he had affidavits that on the day before the FBI arrested Navy Lt. Andrew Roth and John S. Service, two defendants in that case, the two men were at the Lattimore home. When asked what they were doing, McCarthy quoted his source as saying Lattimore responded that they were "declassifying" secret government documents.

McCarthy cited a letter he said Lattimore had written to "his boss" in the OWI asking that a known Communist be kept on the OWI payroll, and suggesting that "stockholders" of a Communist newspaper in New York be hired to replace loyal friends of Chiang Kai-shek.

He also said he had an affidavit from a "Red general" who said he had talked with a Russian intelligence officer, and that the intelligence officer was pleased with the way the Institute of Pacific Relations was giving Russia information and that "he specifically mentioned Owen Lattimore."

Budenz Testifies

On April 20 the Tydings group called Louis F. Budenz, at McCarthy's request to testify. Budenz was a former managing editor of the Daily Worker in New York, organ of the Communist Party. Budenz said he didn't know Lattimore personally, and didn't know "of his personal knowledge" that Lattimore was a CP member. However, he said that on three occasions it had been brought to his attention, officially, that Lattimore was a party member.

At a 1937 CP meeting in New York, Budenz said, Earl Browder, then Party general secretary, and Frederick V. Field, whom he described as a "Communist leader," discussed Lattimore with Budenz. Field reported Lattimore had received his "instructions" to spread the CP line on China. At that time, Budenz said, it was decided to call the Chinese Communists "agrarian reformers, much like the North Dakota Partisan Leaguers."

Budenz said that several times between then and the time he was expelled from the CP, he saw "onionskin paper reports" referring to Lattimore by the initials "XL or L." These reports, he said, he had to tear up and flush down the drain. There was another meeting, in 1943, at which Browder and Field reported on Lattimore, Budenz said. This time, he said, Field commended Lattimore's work and reported on another switch in the Party line on China.

In 1944, Budenz said, Jack Stachel, a CP leader, told Budenz to "consider Lattimore a Communist." That meant, he said, that he was to consider anything Lattimore wrote as authoritative. It was, he emphasized, a code for meaning that Lattimore was not just a friend of the CP but an actual member. Lattimore was, he said, "under Party discipline," but could have had special permission at times to deviate from the Party line.

The next day, April 21, at an executive session, Budenz told the committee Lattimore had hired "well known" Communists for the Institute of Pacific Relations magazine, Pacific Affairs, of which he was editor "over a period of years."

On May 1, Mrs. Freda Utley, another of McCarthy's witnesses and a former British CP member, told the committee that a comparison of Lattimore's writings with the Communist line showed they were "identical."

LATTIMORE'S REBUTTAL

Lattimore, who had been in Afghanistan on a UN mission, flew back to Washington and spent three full days on the stand, April 6 and May 2 and 3. He was questioned by committee members as well as the committee's counsel, Edward P. Morgan. He also produced several witnesses in his behalf.

In his first appearance, April 6, Lattimore challenged McCarthy to repeat his charges off the Senate floor "so he can be held accountable in a court of law." He cited the variety of charges made by McCarthy, pointing out that he first had been called "pro-Communist," then a "top Russian Spy," and later still, merely a "poor security risk."

Lattimore pointed out that he had never worked directly for the State Department, and had never had a desk or a telephone there. His closest connections with the department, he said, had been a trip to Japan with the Pauley Commission, and a two-day lecture he delivered as one member of a panel.

Lattimore told the subcommittee he had not been "nor could be" a member of the Communist Party. He admitted having made a trip to Moscow in 1936, but that, he said, was in line with his job as editor of the Pacific Affairs magazine. He said that far from receiving instructions from the Russians, he had argued with them about their China border policy, and had delivered a lecture at a Moscow scientific gathering "which was poorly received." He said he delivered the same lecture later in Amsterdam and London where it received better notice.

He admitted that Roth and Service had been at his home shortly before their arrest in connection with the Amerasia case. But, he said, the visit was a combination of social and business affairs. Roth, he said, had brought with him the galley proofs of a new book he was writing, "Dilemma in Japan," and had asked Lattimore to go over the proofs with him. "We were not declassifying government documents," he said, and presented affidavits from other guests to bear out his testimony. He also admitted knowing Frederick V. Field, but only in his capacity as a director of the Institute of Pacific Relations.

Interim Witnesses

After Lattimore completed his first day's testimony on April 6, the Tydings group heard two additional witnesses before it recalled Lattimore early in May.

On April 25, Dr. Bella V. Dodd, who described herself as a former member of the National Committee of the Communist Party who was expelled in 1949, said that she had never, as a member of the Party or a CP "functionary" heard of Lattimore. She scoffed at Budenz's testimony about "onionskin paper reports" and described much of the Budenz testimony as being of the "cloak and dagger" type.

Earl Browder, former general secretary of the Communist Party, also appeared before the committee. He denied ever having been to a meeting in New York where Budenz and Field were present and at which Field either reported on or commended Lattimore's work. He said that Budenz would not have been invited to such a meeting anyway, since Budenz was not a top party official, but merely "technical editor" of the party's paper. He said that on a larger paper Budenz would have been considered nothing more than a copy editor.

Field also testified, and denied he had ever told Browder that he had given Lattimore orders, or had commended Lattimore for following out orders. He denied being a Russian agent, and challenged Budenz to make his statements outside Congressional immunity.

Lattimore Resumes

Lattimore returned to the stand May 2, and dealt at length with the letter McCarthy said Lattimore had written while with the OWI recommending the firing of those loyal to Chiang. Lattimore said the letter was written to Joseph Barnes, who ran OWI's Atlantic operations. He said that in the letter he did recommend keeping on a man, a Dr. Chi, but said he did not know Chi was a Communist. He said the letter dealt with "very delicate subjects," but presented the entire letter for the record; McCarthy had read only part of it.

In the letter Lattimore suggested that employees for the New York office of OWI be hired from the ranks of the New China Daily News, which, he said, was owned by small businessmen and was not Communist. He said that some of the Daily News staff could have been Communist. He also urged Barnes to steer clear of fights between various China Nationalist groups.

Lattimore criticized the Budenz testimony, charging that Budenz was "making a profit" and was a "professional informer." He pointed out that in the five years since Budenz left the Communist Party, he had never once mentioned Lattimore's name before the FBI or before any Congressional committee until after the McCarthy charges were made public.

Lattimore then produced the transcript of what he said was a meeting in 1949 between Budenz and Leonard Parris, an editor of Collier's magazine for which Budenz was doing an article on China. In that transcript Budenz was asked: "You are not saying (Lattimore and Barnes) acted as Communist agents in any way?" Budenz replied: "No."

Statements On Lattimore

Brig. Gen. Elliott R. Thorpe, former chief of intelligence for Gen. MacArthur, told the subcommittee on April 20 that he had investigated Lattimore three separate times, and that he had found him loyal. He said most of the criticism against Lattimore was actually aimed at his writings, adding: "Were I called on to commit my personal safety and that of my command on information supplied by Dr. Lattimore, I would do so with confidence that he would always act as a loyal American citizen." Thorpe said he investigated Lattimore once during the 1930's and twice during the war and had never found the slightest trace of evidence that he was a Communist or was pro-Soviet. During the war, he said, Lattimore had been cleared to handle confidential information.

In addition, Tydings released on April 29 letters he had received from Secretary of State Acheson and former Secretaries James Byrnes, George Marshall and Cordell Hull saying that Lattimore had never influenced State Department policy as charged by McCarthy.

COMMITTEE DECISION

In the final majority report, the Tydings group said of the case against Lattimore:

"We find no evidence to support the charge that Owen Lattimore is the 'top Russian Spy', or for that matter, any sort of spy. Even the testimony of Louis Budenz, if given the fullest weight and import, could establish no more than that the Communists used Lattimore to project a propaganda line in China . . . . We found absolutely no evidence to indicate his writings have been anything but the honest opinion and convictions of Owen Lattimore . . . . We do not find that Mr. Lattimore's writings follow the Communist, or any other line, save as his very consistent position on the Far East may be called the Lattimore Line."

John Stewart Service

McCarthy charged before the subcommittee March 14 that John Stewart Service, a State Department Foreign Service officer, was a man whose "Communist affiliations are well known." He said the Civil Service Commission had ordered Service's recall from India so that he could appear in person before a loyalty board to clear up his status. He pointed out that loyalty boards had cleared Service three times. He was being checked again "as a bad security risk," McCarthy said.

McCarthy added: "He was a friend and associate of Frederick Vanderbilt Field, the Communist chairman of the editorial board of the infamous Amerasia." McCarthy pointed out that on June 6, 1945, Service had been arrested by the FBI, along with Phillip J. Jaffe, Kate Louise Mitchell, Mark Gayn, Emmanuel Larsen and Navy Lt. Andrew Roth in connection with the stolen document case involving Amerasia. (See page 450.)

McCarthy quoted Larsen, one of the defendants in that case, as saying later that Service was one of the "pro-Soviet" group in the State Department. "Some of the members of the grand jury (in the Amerasia case) voted for (Service's) indictment," McCarthy charged.

McCarthy went on to say that, since his connections with the Amerasia case, Service had not only been reinstated in the State Department, but had been promoted and had also been given the post of advising on the promotion of other Foreign Service Officers. McCarthy quoted one source as saying that Service was among that "pro-Communist" group in the State Department that had tried to "sabotage" the U. S. policy in China and had advocated the abandonment of Chiang to the Chinese Communists.

Service was in Calcutta, India, when the charges were made. He was recalled by the State Department to answer them, and arrived in this country March 27. However, it wasn't until June 22 that he appeared before the subcommittee.

SERVICE'S REBUTTAL

At that time Service denied ever having known Field, or ever having been in his home. He admitted knowing Jaffe, Roth, Miss Mitchell and Gayn, but said that for the most part their acquaintanceship was of a social rather than a business nature. His acquaintanceship with them, he said, was only during the Spring of 1945, and did not go back "many years" as had been charged.

Service denied having any Communist leanings or having been a member of the Communist Party.

Concerning his connection with the Amerasia case, Service gave the subcommittee his version of the affair. He said that he had been in China, as a member of the staff of Gen. Stilwell and had gone, on Stilwell's orders, to Yenan, Chinese Communist headquarters, to study the political situation there. He said that he returned to Washington on April 12, 1945, over a month after the government had made its raid on the offices of Amerasia and found the stolen documents. "They (Amerasia) must have gotten their lines laid long before that," Service observed.

He said that it wasn't until April 18, 1945, the day that the FBI told the State Department it had an airtight case against the Amerasia defendants, that he met Gayn. It wasn't until April 19, the day after the FBI said it was ready to go ahead with the case that he met Jaffe, the principal defendant, Service said.

Meets Amerasia Defendants

Service said he was introduced to Jaffe by Roth, whom he thought to be a bona-fide naval lieutenant and whom he couldn't suspect of anything subversive. He said Roth introduced Jaffe as being a journalist interested in the Far East. He pointed out to the committee that at the time he knew a number of journalists and that "it was commonplace" for State Department Foreign Officers, returned from aboard, to give newspapermen "background information" on events that were taking place in the areas they covered.

He said that Jaffe was interested in his recent trip to Communist-held China, and that he had agreed to show Jaffe some of the reports he had written on the subject. "These reports," Service said, "were of a descriptive, reportorial nature only. They were not policy reports." He said he had given Jaffe copies of the reports and had given him permission to take them with him to New York where he agreed to pick them up later. Service emphasized that none of the reports was taken from a State Department file; they all came from his own personal file, Service said.

He said that Gayn had invited him to spend the night at his apartment in New York whenever he wanted to, and that he took Gayn up on the invitation when he did visit New York later. He said that while in New York he met Miss Mitchell socially and had discussed with her the "trend towards Confucianism" in China. He also discussed that subject with Jaffe, Service said.

He said that the grand jury which returned the indictments in the Amerasia case had cleared him unanimously, and that at all times during the course of the investigation and legal proceedings he had tried to be of help to the FBI.

Article Repudiated

Service told the subcommittee that Larsen had repudiated the article in which he referred to Service as one of the "pro-Soviet" group in the State Department. He said that it was from this repudiated article that McCarthy had quoted extensively in his Senate speech of March 30 and also before the committee on March 14.

Service denied ever having done anything to "sabotage" the State Department policy in China, and also denied having done anything to "sabotage" Gen. Patrick Hurley when he was ambassador to Chiang.

Service said that during the time he had served as a political officer with the army in China during the war he had visited Chinese Communist headquarters on orders, and that he had written reports to the State Department on those visits. He added that his contacts with Chinese Communists had been of a purely business character and that he had not been in any way influenced by them in writing his reports. "They were objective," he testified.

COMMITTEE DECISION

In the final report of the subcommittee, the following decision was made regarding Service:

"We must conclude that Service was extremely indiscreet in his dealings (in the Amerasia case) . . . But we cannot and do not find that his indiscretion in the Amerasia matter is sufficient to brand an otherwise competent and loyal employee . . . as disloyal, pro-Communist or a security risk."

Haldore E. Hanson

McCarthy charged on March 13 before the Subcommittee that Haldore E. Hanson, a State Department official connected with the so - called "Point Four" program to aid underdeveloped areas of the world, had "a mission to communize the world." He quoted from a book by Hanson in 1938 to back up his charges. He said Hanson had a "proclivity for Communists." From reading Hanson's book, McCarthy said, it could be shown that Hanson had taken a "consistent position of hero worship toward the Chinese Communists."

McCarthy said: "Gentlemen, here is a man with a mission — a mission to communize the world — a man whose energy and intelligence coupled with a burning, all - consuming mission has raised him from a penniless operator of a Communist magazine in Peiping in the middle thirties to one of the architects of our foreign policy in the State Department today. Can there be any doubt as to whether the Communist or anti-Communist forces in Asia will receive aid under the Point Four program with Hanson in charge?"

On April 21 when Budenz testified before the Subcommittee in executive session he identified Hanson as a "communist" writer who had contributed articles to Pacific Affairs. This was in connection with Budenz's testimony on Lattimore. (The Subcommittee said the information had been turned over to the FBI and that a further loyalty check would be made on Hanson, but the group tended to discount the Budenz statement in view of the fact "it had not been substantiated by factual evidence.")

HANSON'S REBUTTAL

Hanson prefaced his statement before the Subcommittee March 28 by stating under oath that he was not, had never been "and could not be" a Communist or a Communist sympathizer. He denied ever having run a magazine in Peiping. He said he had contributed an article to a magazine in 1938 whose aim was to help coordinate the efforts of the Chinese Nationalists and Communists in their war against Japan.

He also admitted writing articles for Amerasia, but that, he said, was six years before the stolen documents case, and he did not know that it had any Communist connections, if it had.

Hanson pointed out that for four months he had covered the Chinese Communist armies for the Associated Press in 1938. "It is no more sensible to say I was pro - Communist because I spent four months behind the Chinese Communist lines, than to say I was pro - Japanese because I spent 11 months behind the Japanese lines."

He added "I have never knowingly associated with the espionage agents of a foreign power."

Concerning his articles for Amerasia, Hanson said: "If we have got to the point in America where writers must assume responsibility for the political opinions . . . which all the editors, or owners or stockholders or writers on a magazine hold or later develop — then we have traveled far indeed from those basic principles upon which this country was founded."

COMMITTEE DECISION

The final report of the Subcommittee made the following statement about Hanson:

"On the basis of our record and the FBI investigation as indicated in the Loyalty Board action, we do not find Haldore Hanson to be disloyal, or a man with pro-Communist proclivities or a mission to communize the world."

Mrs. Esther Caukin Brunauer

On March 13 before the Subcommittee, McCarthy charged that Mrs. Esther Caukin Brunauer, State Department and UNESCO official, had Communist-front tieups, and that she had presided at a Washington meeting of the Council of American - Soviet friendship. Mrs. Brunauer, McCarthy said, was a State Department officer in charge of liaison between the Department and UNESCO. He said she helped "commit" the American Association of University Women to a Communist Party line, "particularly in the consumer field." He said her association with the American Friends of the Soviet Union dated back to 1936.

MRS. BRUNAUER'S REBUTTAL

On March 27 Mrs. Brunauer testified she had not belonged and "could not possibly belong" to the Communist Party or any Communist front organization. She submitted a letter to the committee from Kathryn McHale, general director of the AAUW, which stated that Mrs. Brunauer had never had anything to do with the group's consumer program.

Mrs. Brunauer also submitted letters from Dr. Milton Eisenhower, brother of the general, and from former Sen. Joseph Ball (R Minn.), both of which stated she was anti-Communist. Ball said he had investigated the State Department personnel in 1948 and was "convinced" the Brunauers were not linked with Communists in any way.

Mrs. Brunauer said that since the McCarthy charges were published she and her family had been plagued with anonymous telephone calls "at all hours of the day and night" threatening her and her family. The charges, she said, did "not follow the principle of fair play."

COMMITTEE DECISION

The Subcommittee report said of Mrs. Brunauer:

"The conclusion is inescapable on the basis of our inquiry that there is no evidence that Mrs. Brunauer is disloyal, a Communist sympathizer or a security risk."

Dr. Stephen Brunauer

March 13 McCarthy told the Subcommittee that Dr. Stephen Brunauer, a naval scientist and husband of Esther Caukin Brunauer, had access to the "topmost secrets" of the Navy, and asked the Subcommittee to find out if he "ever admitted to associates he was a member of the Communist Party."

DR. BRUNAUER'S REBUTTAL

Brunauer did not appear before the Subcommittee. However, he admitted to reporters that once, in 1926-27 before he came to the U. S. he had been a member of the Young Workers League of Hungary, an organization which approved communism but was not a Communist party. He said he had resigned from the League before coming to the U. S. and had not been a member of that or any other Communist-front organization since then.

On March 27, when his wife went before the Subcommittee, she also defended her husband. She said that her husband was opposed to Communist principles, and added that in 1948 a Hungarian Communist had approached her husband with another man and asked him to help get donations in this country for the new Communist government in Hungary. She said her husband refused flatly "to aid the Communist government of Hungary" and that the men discussed some method of taking "revenge" on her husband for his refusal.

Brunauer pointed out to reporters that the Navy had cleared him to handle secret documents, and the Navy announced later that a thorough investigation had proved that Brunauer was not disloyal nor had any connections with the Communists.

COMMITTEE DECISION

The Subcommittee report made no decision on Brunauer, because, it said, Brunauer had never been a State Department employee.

Dr. Philip C. Jessup

In his first appearance before the committee, on March 8, McCarthy charged that U. S. Ambassador-at-Large Philip C. Jessup had "an unusual affinity" for Communist causes. Why, he asked, did Jessup always "join Communist-front organizations and not anti-Communist organizations?" He said: "Here is a gentleman now forming top-flight policy in the Far East with an unusual affinity for Communist causes." He added that Jessup was a member of the American-Russian Institute, which, he said, was on the Attorney General's subversive list.

JESSUP'S REBUTTAL

Jessup appeared before the Subcommittee March 20 and in a lengthy statement denied any connection with communism. He cited his long list of "anti-Communist activities" including his fight against the Communists in Asia and his attempt to work out a method of controlling the Communists and their satellites.

Jessup submitted letters from Gens. Dwight D. Eisenhower and George C. Marshall praising him for his anti-Communist efforts. He also listed these "anti-Communist" organizations to which he belonged: The American Legion, The American Bar Association, The American Philosophical Society and the Foreign Policy Association.

Commenting on his connection with the American-Russian Institute, Jessup said his name had been used in connection with a dinner sponsored by the Institute May 7, 1946, to make a posthumous award to the late President Roosevelt. He said he had not been at the dinner; that he had been in the hospital from February to June of that year. Sen. Hickenlooper asked about Jessup's connections with the Law Students League. Jessup said he recalled once having been asked to sponsor the Columbia University chapter of the League, but couldn't recall whether he had sponsored it or not.

COMMITTEE DECISION

The Subcommittee made the following statement on Jessup:

"This Subcommittee feels that the accusations against Dr. Philip C. Jessup are completely unfounded and unjustified and have done irreparable harm to the prestige of the United States."

Miss Dorothy Kenyon

Dorothy Kenyon, New York lawyer and former U. S. representative to the United Nations, was accused by McCarthy March 8 of having been affiliated with "more than a score" of Communist-front organizations. He said she had "deep-rooted Communist leanings."

"The case of Miss Kenyon," McCarthy said, "is one of repeated association with more than a score of Communist - front organizations." Among these he listed the National Council of American-Soviet Friendship, which, he said, had been declared subversive by the Attorney General.

He added she had associated with "such well-known pro-Communists as Ben Gold, Paul Robeson and Irving Potash, who is one of the 11 convicted Communist conspirators." She joined with Gold and Robeson in 1948 in welcoming to the U. S. "the Red Dean of Canterbury," Dr. Hewlett Johnson, McCarthy said.

McCarthy added: "The Communist activities of Miss Kenyon are not only deep-rooted but extend back through the years. It is inconceivable that this woman could collaborate with a score of organizations dedicated to the overthrow of our form of government by force and violence, participate in their activities, lend her name to their nefarious purposes and be ignorant of the whole sordid and un-American aspect of their work."

MISS KENYON'S REBUTTAL

Miss Kenyon March 14 denied categorically ever having been a Communist or having "knowingly" associated with or allowed her name to be associated with Communist-front organizations. Under cross-examination by Hickenlooper, she admitted she probably had joined at least one, possibly several, organizations but added that at the time they "seemed to be engaged in activities that I could and did approve."

She pointed out that in 1939 she had supported aid to Britain and France, a program opposed by the Communist Party then, and that she had been one of the first to join the William Allen White Committee to Defend America by Aid to the Allies, another organization which the CP had opposed.

At the end of the session Hickenlooper said "there is not the least evidence" that Miss Kenyon had been "disloyal or subversive."

COMMITTEE DECISION

The Subcommittee majority report said of Miss Kenyon:

"We do not find that her employment in the past by the State Department is evidence of the fact that that department has employed disloyal persons." (However, the committee commented in connection with the Kenyon case that "some persons" fail to understand "the nature of the Communist-front movement.")

Gustavo Duran

McCarthy charged before the Subcommittee March 14 that Gustavo Duran, a former State Dept. officer, was known to have been a member of the Communist counterpart "of the Soviet Secret Police in Spain" during the Spanish Civil War. He said Duran had resigned from the State Department in 1946 "under pressure" and had gone to work for the UN.

In 1943, McCarthy said, Lt. Edward J. Ruff, assistant military attache at the U. S. embassy in the Dominican Republic, wrote a report in which he stated "officially" that he believed Duran to be a Communist. McCarthy quoted from a book by Indalecio Prieto, former Spanish war minister, in which Prieto said Duran had "been forced on" him by Soviet agents as an officer of the Spanish S.I.M., "counterpart of the Soviet secret police."

DURAN'S REBUTTAL

Duran did not appear before the Subcommittee in person. However, he answered the McCarthy charges from Lake Success. He said that he "is not" and "never was" a member of the Communist Party. He added that he had become a citizen of the United States, but that during the Spanish Civil War he was a citizen of Spain and a legal "officer in the Spanish Republican army."

"I was not," he said, "a member of the International Brigade."

He added: "The statements about my activities in Spain, attributed to United States military intelligence and other sources, are in fact a literal translation of a fabricated statement in Arriba, the official organ of the Falange Party of Franco Spain. In fact, the full report handed by Mr. McCarthy to the subcommittee is, I suspect, nothing else but a translation of that article."

Spruille Braden, former Assistant Secretary of State, said: "When charges were made during Mr. Duran's employment in the State Department, I sent for J. Edgar Hoover and asked him for a thorough investigation, despite my long previous knowledge of the man. As he was in my office, I disassociated myself from the departmental inquiry and asked Donald Russell, Secretary Byrnes' former law partner, to conduct it. Both inquiries completely cleared Duran."

COMMITTEE DECISION

The Subcommittee report detailed the charges against Duran and his answers to the charges, but pointed out that Duran had resigned from the State Department in 1946, before the loyalty program was instituted. For that reason, the report said, it was felt an investigation of his case was not within the jurisdiction of the Subcommittee.

Dr. Harlow Shapley

On March 14 McCarthy told the Subcommittee that Dr. Harlow Shapley, Harvard astronomer, had been appointed to the U. S. Commission for UNESCO by Marshall, and hadn't been fired by Acheson although he had "been prominent in the affairs of the Scientific and Cultural Conference for World Peace" in 1949. The Conference, McCarthy said, had been "denounced as a sounding board for Communist propaganda," by Acheson himself.

SHAPLEY'S REBUTTAL

Shapley, at Cambridge, Mass., denied the charges. He said that the Conference had "not been Communist-inspired." He added that his only connection with the State Department had been when that agency approved his expenses while he was serving on UNESCO. He said the Conference to which McCarthy alluded had been sponsored by the National Council of the Arts, Sciences and Professions, of which Shapley was national chairman. He said "I was never once approached by the Communists" during the time the conference was going on. He added that the sponsoring organization is not on the Attorney General's list of subversive organizations.

COMMITTEE DECISION

The Subcommittee report said: "Our inquiry established that Dr. Shapley is not an employee of the Department of State in any real and proper sense . . . Within the proper purview of our inquiry, no consideration need be given the charges made against Dr. Shapley."

Dr. Frederick L. Schuman

McCarthy told the committee that Prof. Frederick L. Schuman of Williams College, was "one of the closest collaborators in and sponsors of Communist-front organizations in America," and that if he were not a "card-carrying Communist the difference is so slight it is unimportant." He added that Schuman is "a highly placed lecturer" at the State Department.

SCHUMAN'S REBUTTAL

At Williamstown, Mass., Schuman, who did not appear before the Subcommittee in person, said: "Senator McCarthy is mistaken in supposing I have ever held a position in the Department of State. Perhaps he is confusing this with my lectures at the National War College to which I was invited by Maj. Gen. L. L. Lemnitzer, Lieut. Gen. H. H. Bull, and Vice Admn. W. H. Hill. I am as opposed to communism as is Senator McCarthy, but I do not believe we shall ever be in agreement as to the definition of Communist-front organizations."

COMMITTEE DECISION:

The Subcommittee report said:
"Our inquiry establishes that Dr. Schuman has never been an employee of the State Department. In fact, his one and only connection with the Department in any way was to deliver an 1-hour lecture without remuneration at the Foreign Service Institute on June 19, 1946."

Amerasia Magazine

Although it was an organization rather than an individual, Amerasia Magazine was one of the "cases" virtually "tried" before the Tydings Subcommittee during the course of its investigation of McCarthy's charges.

At the insistance of McCarthy and other Republicans, the Subcommittee reopened the Amerasia magazine "stolen documents" case, which had been formally settled in 1945.

Background Of Case

In 1945, Amerasia was found printing material apparently copied from secret Office of Strategic Services documents. The OSS investigated, bringing in the FBI. An OSS investigator entered the office of Amerasia without legal authorization and found official government documents, many classified "top secret."

On June 6, 1945, six persons were arrested. They were Philip Jaffe, managing editor; Kate Mitchell, editor; Mark Gayn, free - lance writer; John S. Service, Foreign Service officer; Lt. Andrew Roth, Naval Intelligence; and Emmanuel Larsen, researcher in the State Department's Division of Far East Affairs. Several hundred Government documents were recovered.

A Federal Grand Jury returned true bills Aug. 10, 1945, against Jaffe, Larsen and Roth. They were arrested. Then, according to State Department attorney Robert H. Hitchcock, the defendants indicated they would ask that evidence based on documents seized be suppressed, since some of it had been obtained illegally. According to Hitchcock, the Justice Department decided to compromise.

Jaffe pleaded guilty on a lesser charge and was fined $2,500; Larsen pleaded nolo contendere and was fined $500; charges against Roth were dropped.

McCarthy claimed in 1950 that State Department officials and other high governmental figures had blocked effective prosecution of the Amerasia case in order to protect the defendants, whom he called members of an important Russian spy ring. Other Republicans wanted to know in 1950 why the case had not been prosecuted more vigorously in 1945.

Defendants Requested

The Tydings Subcommittee questioned Service, John E. Peurifoy, Deputy Undersecretary of State; Larsen, Joseph C. Grew, former Under Secretary of State; Gen. Julius Holmes, former Assistant Secretary of State; Frank Bielaski, former OSS director of investigations; and others. At the same time, Service was questioned by a New York Grand Jury. (For Service's Congressional statements, see Page 447.)

Case Again Closed

The Subcommittee majority, after listening to explanations of the complex case, said no evidence was shown that the Amerasia principals were part of a State Department spy ring.

Blame for taking the documents was put on Larsen, who, the Subcommittee report said, was compiling a private file on Far East personalities. The documents were taken to add to his private file, according to the report, and then traded to Jaffe for more information for his file. The report said the Justice Department had done all it legally could to prosecute the case.

SENATE

Although the Tydings Subcommittee's hearings were held in the Senate Office Building's caucus room, developments in the probe were by no means limited to that chamber. The investigation furnished both the House and the Senate with scores of opportunities which Congressmen readily seized for scores of speeches on communism, disloyalty, politics and related subjects during the months' long hearings.

In the Senate especially, the Tydings probe was kept prominently in the foreground. McCarthy was not a member of the Tydings group, and accordingly used the Senate chamber as his rostrum, taking the floor dozens of times to present his views of the proceedings in the Office Building caucus room.

Some of the most important developments which arose in the Senate chamber during the hearings are described in the following.

Skirmish of the Files

McCarthy insisted repeatedly during the investigation that all his charges would be proved if Executive Department loyalty and personnel files were thrown open to the Tydings Subcommittee. The President, however, was reluctant to open the files. The resulting controversy was one of the most important elements of the investigation.

Senate Resolution 231 authorizing the investigation had specifically directed the Subcommittee "to procure, by subpoena, and examine the complete loyalty and employment files and records of all the Government employees in the Department of State and such other agencies against whom charges have been heard." Democratic Senators had objected to that provision on the grounds that FBI files should be kept closed. But the provision was accepted by the Senate on voice vote.

After the first of McCarthy's charges were made before the Subcommittee, Chairman Tydings made an informal request of the President that State Department and FBI files on persons charged be shown to the Subcommittee. The Subcommittee was then shown a "summarization" of the FBI file on Lattimore. It was not revealed publicly what the summary contained. Tydings said there was nothing in the file to show Lattimore had been a Communist or spy. Lodge said the summary was incomplete and inconclusive.

Full Disclosure Opposed

Attorney General J. Howard McGrath and FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover said on March 27, they opposed further disclosure of the files. They said that if the "raw" files were made public it would jeopardize the entire loyalty program, cut off sources of information, "smear" innocent persons and could result in published "half truths".

The following day President Truman announced that he would follow Executive precedence and withhold the documents. He also directed the Civil Service Loyalty Review Board to make an immediate review of all of McCarthy's 90-odd cases.

Tydings then carried out the Senate directive setting up his Subcommittee and issued a subpoena for the FBI, State Department and Civil Service files on the individuals charged. Mr. Truman March 30 directed the men receiving the subpoenas to forward them to him.

Then on May 4 the President announced that he would show the Subcommittee the loyalty files of 81 persons accused by name or number by McCarthy. Tydings said Truman had changed his mind because it was found that all of McCarthy's cases had been reviewed previously by four Congressional Committees.

According to Tydings, the material originally had been gathered from State Department loyalty files in 1947 by the House Appropriations Committee of the Republican 80th Congress. The same information was then studied by the House Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments in March, 1948; the Senate Appropriations Committee in March, 1948; and the House Foreign Affairs Committee in August, 1948. None of these Committees, Tydings said, saw anything in the information meriting citation of any State Department employees as disloyal.

Subcommittee members were allowed to examine the files at the White House, but they were not allowed to take notes or reveal the names of individuals. The files proved so cumbersome that few members managed to read every file. Both Lodge and Hickenlooper said the 81 loyalty files were in such "an unfinished condition" that they were useless. When the laborious examination of the files was halted, neither Tydings, Lodge, Hickenlooper or McCarthy had changed his opinion of the content of the files.

"Raped" Files Charged

. Meanwhile McCarthy said the files had been "stripped" and incriminating material removed. He asserted in a speech at Janesville, Wis., May 7 that the file on his No. 2 case had been "thoroughly raped". He demanded that "all the files must be broken open."—specifically files of the FBI, Civil Service Commission, Central Intelligence Agency, Army Intelligence, Navy Intelligence and Secret Service.

But Subcommittee Chairman Tydings countered that the files to be examined "contain not only all of the data which the State Department investigators have assembled but also all the loyalty data which the FBI has gathered and referred to the State Department and which has been made a part of these files."

McCarthy hit back saying the person in question was "a foreign agent" and promising to name him on the Senate floor if the Subcommittee doesn't "show any semblance of really looking into this case."
McCarthy never named the individual.

Counter-Charge Feud

During the course of the investigation, McCarthy and State Department spokesmen kept up a running battle of charges, denials and countercharges. McCarthy made many speeches during that period; State Department officials, including Acheson, made as many.

After each McCarthy speech, the State Department issued a detailed criticism of McCarthy's statements, listing what the Depatment said were "deliberate misstatements of fact".

McCarthy reiterated his charges, and repeatedly demanded the ouster of Acheson, Jessup and others. He said they were shielding Communists. The President backed the State Department, saying repeatedly that McCarthy's charges were political and were an aid to Russia.

Statement of Principles

On the Senate floor June 1, Margaret Chase Smith (R Maine), read a statement also signed by six other Republicans criticizing Democratic handling of the government security problem and blasting "certain elements" in the Republican Party which the signers said had tried to exploit "fear, bigotry, ignorance and intolerance" to make political hay out of the confusion. Other signers were Charles W. Tobey (R N. H.), George D. Aiken (R Vt.), Wayne Morse (R Ore.), Irving Ives (R N. Y.), Edward J. Thye (R Minn.), and Robert C. Hendrickson (R N. J.).

The statement said in part: "The Democratic Adminstration has initially created the confusion by its lack of effective leadership, by its contradictory grave warnings and optimistic assurances, by its complacency to the threat of communism here at home, by its oversensitiveness to rightful criticism, by its petty bitterness against its critics.

"Certain elements of the Republican Party have materially added to this confusion in the hopes of riding the Republican Party to victory through the selfish, political exploitation of fear, bigotry, ignorance and intolerance.

"It is high time that we stopped thinking politically as Republicans and Democrats about elections and started thinking patriotically as Americans about national security based on individual freedom."

On his part, Lattimore hit back at McCarthy in a book "Ordeal by Slander" published July 31. The book recounted his part in the State Department Loyalty Investigation set off by McCarthy's charges, and warned that "bully boy politicians of the McCarthy stripe . . . are demagogues who are skilled in exploitation of fear." He said his "ordeal" could be experienced by any person unless we "reestablish the freedom to inquire and the freedom to express opinions based on independent inquiry."

Loyalty Commission Proposals

The investigation into State Department loyalty produced several suggestions that the whole problem of the government loyalty program be turned over to a special commission for examination. It was said frequently that a group of Senators did not have the time to investigate the problems thoroughly. McCarthy himself called repeatedly for a special investigation by a group outside Congress.

Sens. Elbert Thomas (D Utah) and Irving Ives (R N. Y.) introduced a bill (S 3775) June 15 providing for a seven-member commission to probe future allegations of disloyalty among government employees.

The Commission would include four Congressmen, two each from the two major parties, and three public members appointed from a panel of private individuals named by the President. The private citizens, said Ives, would "minimize those excesses which sometimes come with potential political motivation."

Thomas said his sponsorship of the proposal did not mean disapproval of the probe of disloyalty by Sen. Tydings and the Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee.

The proposal was turned over to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, headed by Sen. Hubert Humphrey (D Minn.) and including Ives, Clyde R. Hoey (D N. C.), Herbert O'Conor (D Md.) and Margaret Chase Smith (R Maine). No action was taken.

Ralph E. Flanders (R Vt.) had previously introduced a resolution (S Res 268) May 8 instructing the subcommittee to continue its probe in executive hearings and to recommend improvements in the government loyalty program. The resolution was referred to the Foreign Relations Committee. No action was taken.

Amerasia Echoes

A separate inquiry into the Justice Department's handling in 1945 of the Amerasia "stolen documents" case was urged June 13 by 21 Republican Senators. They introduced a resolution calling for the Senate Judiciary Committee to study the Amerasia case instead of the Foreign Relations group.

The 21 Republicans, unofficially led by Homer E. Capehart (Ind.), included: Robert C. Hendrickson (N. J.), Homer Ferguson (Mich.), Kenneth Wherry (Neb.), Edward Martin (Pa.), Owen Brewster (Maine), John Bricker (Ohio), William Langer (N. D.), William Jenner (Ind.), Karl Mundt (S. D.), Styles Bridges (N. H.), Harry Cain (Wash.), Arthur V. Watkins (Utah), Henry Dworshak (Idaho), George Malone (Nev.), Hugh Butler (Neb.), Zales Ecton (Mont.), Milton Young (N. D.), Andrew Schoeppel (Kan.), James Kem (Mo.), and Joseph McCarthy (Wis.).

Capehart indicated the move was prompted by a fear the Tydings group, which had not then completed its probe, would whitewash the Administration's handling of the Amerasia case five years ago.

Tydings denied this. Senate Majority Leader Scott Lucas (D Ill.) warned June 13 he would strongly oppose any plan for "two investigations of the same subject going on at the same time." He added, "There is politics, and there is obstruction around here."

On June 15, however, the federal grand jury in New York dropped the Amerasia case. It cleared the Justice Dept. of remissness in prosecuting the case, and urged it to make a public statement giving full details of the way it had handled the matter in 1945. The grand jury praised the FBI. Sen. Brewster declared the action killed the new inquiry demand.

FINAL REPORT

On June 28, the Tydings Subcommittee voted to halt its investigation. Only the Democratic majority supported the motion to end hearings; the two Republicans voted against it. At the same time the Subcommittee voted unanimously to recommend contempt of Congress citations against Earl Browder, Frederick Vanderbilt Field and Philip Jaffe, witnesses who had refused to answer some questions put by the Subcommittee.

The Subcommittee majority filed a 313-page report with the full Foreign Relations Committee July 18. The report cleared all persons called Communists or Communist sympathizers by Sen. McCarthy. The report took hefty swings at McCarthy himself, saying, in effect, that he had wilfully lied when presenting his "evidence" on the cases.

Tone of Report

The tone of the Subcommittee report was set in its section of "General Observations." It said, in part:

"It is, of course, clearly apparent that the charges of Communist infiltration or influence upon the State Department are false. This knowledge is reassuring to all Americans whose faith has been temporarily shaken in the security of their Government by perhaps the most nefarious campaign of untruth in the history of our Republic. . .

"We have seen the technique of the 'Big Lie', elsewhere employed by the totalitarian dictator with devastating success, utilized here for the first time on a sustained basis in our history. We have seen how, through repetition and shifting untruths, it is possible to delude great numbers of people. . .

"This has been done without the slightest vestige of respect for even the most elementary rules of evidence or fair play or, indeed, common decency. Indeed, we have seen an effort not merely to establish guilt by association but guilt by accusation alone. . .

"We sincerely believe that charges of the character which have been made in this case seriously impair the efforts of our agencies of Government to combat the problem of subversion. Furthermore, extravagant allegations, which cannot be proved and are not subject to proof, have the inevitable effect of dulling the awareness of all Americans to the true menace of communism."

Specific Replies

The 313-page report took each of McCarthy's allegations, examined them, rejected them and labeled McCarthy with a wide variety of synonyms for "liar." Each of the primary "cases" submitted by McCarthy was either found to be without substantiation or was rejected because the person involved had never been an employee of the Government.

(For typical excerpts of the report's findings on the so-called "primary cases", refer to pages 445-51.)

The Amerasia magazine case was also discussed with the conclusion that the Justice Department had done everything legally possible to get convictions of the employees charged with taking secret State Department documents.

The report wound up with the recommendation that a special commission be appointed to study general security requirements in federal service. The commission members would be appointed — four by the President, four by the Speaker of the House and four by the President of the Senate. It was also recommended that a joint House-Senate committee be appointed to study misuse of Congressional immunity to civil libel suits.

Lodge's Minority Report

Sen. Lodge's minority report criticized the Subcommittee for not going farther than just a check on McCarthy's charges. His report said, "The fact that many charges have been made which have not been proven does not in the slightest degree relieve the Subcommittee of the responsibility for undertaking a relentlessly thorough investigation of its own." The report summarized the investigation "superficial and inconclusive," and added, "The proceedings often lacked impartiality; the atmosphere was too often not that of seeking to ascertain the truth. The Subcommittee's record is a tangle of loose threads, of witnesses who were not subpoenaed, of leads which were not followed up."

Lodge's report also recommended appointment of a special bipartisan commission to study questions left unanswered by the Subcommittee.

Final Action

After the Tydings Subcommittee had drafted its majority report, it submitted the document to the full Foreign Relations Committee. On July 19, after a stormy two-hour closed session, the full Committee was reported to have voted 11-0 to "receive" the Subcommittee report. It then voted 9-2 to pass the report on to the Senate without a recommendation of acceptance or rejection. Dissenting voters were Republican Subcommittee members Bourke B. Hickenlooper (R Iowa) and Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr. (R Mass.). In compliance with a request by the two Republicans, paragraphs in the report criticizing their attendance record at Subcommittee meetings and pointing out that they could not agree on whether sessions should have been open or closed were stricken from the findings.

The full Committee then voted unanimously to end the investigation.

Filing Date Postponed

The same afternoon Tydings, chairman of the Subcommittee, attempted to file the report with the Senate — making it an official Senate document. But he acquiesced to a request by Minority Leader Kenneth S. Wherry (R Neb.) to postpone his move 24 hours so that Senators would have a chance to read the report in full.

The Republicans then called a late afternoon meeting of their Policy Committee. Robert A. Taft (R Ohio), chairman of the Committee, issued this statement at the end of the session:

"The Policy Committee completely concurs with the criticism of Senator Lodge that the Tydings investigation entirely failed to do its job. Its report is of a purely political nature and is derogatory and insulting to Senator McCarthy."

Report Submitted, Approved

Tydings again submitted the report to the Senate July 20. Wherry objected, saying the document had not been approved by the full Committee. Chairman Tom Connally (D Tex.) replied that the Committee had authorized Tydings to transmit the report to the Senate. Vice President Alben W. Barkley ruled that a report could be filed automatically and was not subject to objections.

Wherry appealed Barkley's ruling, and Majority Leader Scott W. Lucas (D Ill.) moved to table Wherry's appeal. The motion to table carried on a party-line roll-call vote 45-37, so the report was accepted as an official Senate document.

Recommittal Efforts

Wherry next moved to send the report back to the Committee with a recommendation that either a new investigation be made or a special bipartisan commission be set up to carry on the inquiry. Barkley ruled that motion out of order. Wherry appealed. Lucas moved to table the appeal. His motion carried again on strict party lines 46-37, a roll-call vote.

Forrest C. Donnell (R Mo.) then moved to send the majority report back to the Committee on a technicality. Brien McMahon (D Conn.) moved to table Donnell's motion. For the third time the Democrats had their way on a strict party-line roll-call vote, 45-35.

Wherry then introduced a bill to instruct the Foreign Relations Committee either to make a new investigation or turn the job over to a special commission. He also submitted a bill which would keep committee reports from impugning the motives or veracity of another Senator. Both bills were referred to the Foreign Relations Committee.

Vote on Counsel

Later Wherry demanded that a Subcommittee counsel, Edward P. Morgan, who was helping Tydings with a speech scoring McCarthy, be ejected from the Senate chamber on the grounds he was not a Senate employee as the Subcommittee had been dissolved. Tydings insisted Morgan was still employed by the full Committee.

The matter was put to vote, and Morgan was allowed to stay on a 43-31 roll-call vote. Wayne Morse (R Ore.) and Donnell joined the Democrats in an otherwise party - line vote.

Tydings Oration

After the Committee report had been officially accepted by the Senate, Tydings took the floor in a long speech castigating McCarthy. Tydings said McCarthy had not told the Senate the truth when he quoted himself as having said there were 57 Communists or sympathizers in the State Department. Tydings charged that McCarthy doctored the speech before inserting it into the Congressional Record.

What McCarthy had actually said at Wheeling, W. Va., Tydings told the Senate, was that there were 205 Communist Party members in the State Department. Tydings held up what he said was a recording made of McCarthy's Wheeling speech. He introduced affidavits from Wheeling radio announcers saying the recording was bone fide.

Then he asked unanimous consent to play the record to the Senate. Minority Leader Kenneth S. Wherry (R Neb.) said the record ought to be played "some place else than on the floor of the United States Senate," but technically he did not object to the unanimous consent request. Tydings withdrew his request and said he would play it in his office.

Tydings went on to say that evidence, presented by McCarthy against State Department employes was all old, discredited material. No evidence has been produced, Tydings said, that would indicate the presence of Communists or Red "dupes" in the State Department.

Debate Echoes

William E. Jenner (R Ind.) took the floor July 21 to answer the speech Tydings had given the previous day in defense of the investigation. Jenner accused Tydings of having perpetrated "the most scandalous and brazen whitewash of treasonable conspiracy in our history."

Jenner claimed Tydings had deliberately ignored the existence of traitors in the State Department. He told the Senate, "I have never heard a more blasphemous perversion of the truth than Senator Tydings' outburst yesterday giving a clean bill of health to the entire personnel of the State Department."

Irving Ives (R N. Y.) also criticized the Subcommittee, saying it had not investigated the entire State Department loyalty program as directed by the Senate. Henry Cabot Lodge (R Mass.), Subcommittee member, voiced the same criticism, saying the probe had been incomplete. While the Communist charges of Joseph McCarthy (R Wis.) had not been proved, he said, the investigation had not been thorough enough to completely clear persons accused by McCarthy.

Homer Ferguson (R Mich.) took the ball July 24 and accused the Subcommittee Democratic majority report of an "untruth" in saying that all persons originally tagged as Communists by McCarthy had been investigated and cleared by four Congressional Committees during the GOP 80th Congress. Ferguson read what he said was a confidential memo sent the State Department by the Republican-controlled Senate Appropriations Committee in 1947. The memo said that an FBI report named several State Department employees as members of a Red spy ring. These persons, whom Ferguson did not name, were not fired, according to the memo.

McCarthy Resumes Charges

McCarthy took the Senate floor July 25 and resumed his charges against "Mr. X", whom he described as a Moscow-born Communist high in the State Department. McCarthy said an FBI report in 1948 said a special agent concealed in the Communist Party knew "Mr. X" to be a Communist. Brien McMahon (D Conn.) said McCarthy's description made it plain to whom he was referring. So McMahon put in the Congressional Record 21 affidavits supporting "Mr. X's" loyalty. One of the letters was signed by Wayne Morse (R Ore.).

Morse then revealed "X's" name to the Senate. It was Edward G. Posniak, State Department economist in the East European division. Morse said Posniak had worked under him from 1936-38 in the Justice Department. At that time, Morse told the Senate, Posniak showed no signs of being a Communist. Posniak himself told reporters that his family had been driven from Russia by the Reds in his childhood and that he had always hated communism. He said he had been cleared by a State Department loyalty board in 1948.

POLITICAL ASPECTS

The aggressive hunt carried on by Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy (R Wis.) for any Communists in government was a major campaign issue in several states.

Although the Republican leadership of the Senate never backed up the tactics used by McCarthy in a conference statement, the majority of the GOP Senators felt that McCarthy pointed out many soft spots in the nation's security program. President Truman was accused of attempting to "whitewash" the investigation into McCarthy's charges. The GOP hurled the same charge at Chairman Millard E. Tydings (D Md.), of the Senate Foreign Relations Subcommittee handling the McCarthy accusations. Tydings was himself a candidate for re-election.

President Truman called McCarthy's attacks "the greatest asset that the Kremlin has." He said the Republicans were making a "partisan attempt in the Senate to sabotage the bipartisan foreign policy of the United States." Tydings lambasted McCarthy for his "smear" campaign and accused him of using "police court" methods to advance his case. Administration stalwart Dennis Chavez (D), Senior Senator from New Mexico, personally attacked McCarthy's star witness, Louis Budenz. Seven Republican Senators joined in a "declaration of conscience" decrying the use of the Senate as a "forum of hate and a publicity platform for irresponsible sensationalism."

The criticism was censure of McCarthy's technique of making charges under the protection of Senatorial immunity. Three influential GOP governors, Earl Warren of California, James Duff of Pennsylvania and Alfred Driscoll of New Jersey, criticized McCarthy and asserted he did not prove any charge he made against the State Department.

Issue in N. H. Primary

New Hampshire's primary election in September was fought on the Declaration of Conscience among other issues. Sen. Charles W. Tobey (R) was a signer of the Declaration. His opponent, Wesley Powell, former administrative assistant to Sen. Styles Bridges (R), believed that the Tobey stand did not properly represent the feeling of the state's GOP voters on the tactics of McCarthy.

Sen. Wayne Morse (R Ore.) and Sen. George D. Aiken (R Vt.), other signers of the Declaration who were up for re-election, did not find the statement used against them in the campaign as Morse had already won his primary and Aiken had no opposition.

The delay of the Tydings Subcommittee in holding open hearings on the Amerasia case, in which documents were "stolen" from the government and found in the offices of the magazine Amerasia, prompted 21 GOP Senators to ask for a separate inquiry into the case. (See page 451.)

The Tydings group's probe was an issue in the Maryland primary as well. Tydings won renomination easily, although the investigation had been expected to react somewhat against him.

Atomic Program Tied-In

The question of the handling of security in the atomic energy program and criticism of the Atomic Energy Commission on this point tied in as a campaign issue with the McCarthy charges against the State Department in several states. Charges of "incredible mismanagement" were hurled at former AEC Chairman David E. Lilienthal, by Sen. Bourke B. Hickenlooper (R Iowa). Chairman Brien McMahon (D Conn.) stoutly defended Lilienthal and the AEC administrative officials. Tydings lined up with McMahon and Sen. Eugene Millikin (R Colo.) lined up with Hickenlooper in separate reports on the investigation. All four were up for re-election. Security in this vital defense program was an issue in Colorado, Connecticut, Iowa and Maryland.

The general question of alleged Communists in government and the attitude toward communism held by incumbent Senators up for re-election was an issue in every campaign. Winners against Claude Pepper (D Fla.) and Frank P. Graham (D N. C.) tried to pin the "red" tags on both men. Pro-Communist charges were hurled at Sen. Glen H. Taylor (D Idaho), candidate for Vice Presidency on the Progressive Party ticket in 1948.

Republicans also charged Democratic candidates with a "soft" approach toward communism in the Senate races of Rep. Helen Gahagan Douglas (Calif.), Rep. John A. Carroll (Colo.), Sen. Millard E. Tydings (Md.), Sen. Herbert H. Lehman (N. Y.), Francis J. Myers (Pa.), Elbert D. Thomas (Utah), and Warren G. Magnuson (Wash.).

Issue In McCarthy's State

McCarthy himself was not up for re-election in 1950, but he campaigned actively in several states in behalf of Republican candidates — stressing his charges of Communist infiltration of the State Department.

Alexander Wiley (R Wis .), senior Wisconsin Senator, endorsed McCarthy's fight in his own campaign for reelection, and McCarthy backed Wiley.

McCarthy's back income tax returns were investigated by the FBI and Wisconsin officials after opponents said his past returns did not tally with his apparent income. McCarthy also was criticized for accepting $10,000 from the Lustron Corp. for a 37-page article on housing. McCarthy said he merely sold the piece to the highest bidder.

LOBBY STANDS

The so-called China Lobby, composed of groups, organizations and individuals supporting the Nationalist China regime of Chiang Kai-Shek, took an active part in the McCarthy proceedings. Such organizations and individuals as the American China Policy Association, Committee to Defend America by Aiding Anti-Communist China, Alfred Kohlberg, wealthy New York importer of Chinese textiles, and William J. Goodwin, registered lobbyist and agent for the Chinese Nationalists, figured prominently in the case.

Owen J. Lattimore charged that Kohlberg had prepared much of the material used by McCarthy. He submitted a chart to the Committee showing a close parallel between the charges made by McCarthy and charges made earlier by Kohlberg when, Lattimore said, the New York importer was "attempting to take over" the Institute of Pacific Relations. Kohlberg admitted in newspaper interviews that he had supplied information to McCarthy.

Goodwin, in an interview with the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, said he had "laid the groundwork" for the McCarthy charges. He also said he had had a dinner party in Washington during the episode at which McCarthy was one of the guests.

The American China Policy Association issued a flood of printed and mimeographed material, and sent much of it to Congressmen and Committee members, supporting the McCarthy charges in their entirety. Kohlberg was chairman of the board of the Association. The Committee to Defend America by Aiding Anti-Communist China also issued a good deal of material, criticizing Lattimore and supporting the McCarthy - GOP charges.

Kohlberg himself sent out a number of "open letters" on yellow stationery with the heading: "ALFRED KOHLBERG Inc. Chinese Textiles, 1 West 37th Street, New York, 18, N. Y.," which called for fuller investigation of the charges, and defended his activities in connection with the case. In an "open letter" to Tydings, Kohlberg charged that none of the "distinguished Americans who have charged pro-Communism in the State Department" was called by the committee to testify. He also sent an "open letter" to McCarthy complimenting him on his brave action.

In a newspaper interview at one point in the proceedings, McCarthy admitted receiving financial support "from an outside source", but declined to say from where it derived. McCarthy hired several investigators of his own during the proceedings.

The China Lobby group was joined by such organizations as Business Consultants, Inc., publishers of the newsletter Counterattack, which was critical of Lattimore and charged that he was one of the principal influences in getting the U. S. into the war with Japan.

Kohlberg came in for some criticism by the Committee for his actions, and the group's report said that one of the main sources of McCarthy's material was Kohlberg.

McCarthy Probe Chronology

Here is a timetable of the chronological development of the investigation of alleged Communism in the State Department:

Feb. 9 — Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy (R Wis.) speaks at Wheeling, W. Va., charging "I have in my hand a list of 205 (names) that were known to the Secretary of State as members of the Communist party."

Feb. 11 — McCarthy speaks at Reno, Nev.; wires President Truman that there are 57 members of the Communist Party in State Department.

Feb. 20 — McCarthy makes six-hour speech on Senate floor, outlining 81 cases of persons he said worked for State Dept., and who were bad security risks or members of Communist party.

Feb. 21 — Senate passes by voice vote resolution by Democratic Majority Leader Scott W. Lucas of Illinois, setting up a subcommittee of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee to investigate charges. GOP demands for public hearings and right to subpoena written into resolution.

Feb. 25 — Subcommittee is named: Millard E. Tydings, (D Md.), chairman; Brien McMahon (D Conn.) Theodore F. Green (D R. I.), Henry Cabot Lodge (R Mass.) and Bourke B. Hickenlooper (R Iowa), members.

March 8 — McCarthy appears before Tydings committee and charges Dorothy Kenyon, New York attorney and former delegate to U. N. belongs to "long list" of Communist front organizations, Dr. Phillip C. Jessup, U. S. Abassador-at-Large, has "unusual affinity" for Communists and Communist causes.

March 9 — He outlines more on Kenyon case, asks for State Dept. files.

March 13 — McCarthy first mentions name of Owen J. Lattimore, Johns Hopkins University professor and Far Eastern expert; also lists Haldore Hanson, State Dept. China expert and Mrs. Esther Caukin Brunauer, DOS UNESCO liaison officer.

March 14 — McCarthy names Gustavo Duran, former State Dept. employe; Dr. Harlow Shapley, Harvard astronomer and former UNESCO delegate, and John S. Service, consular officer at Calcutta and former consular official in China. DOS announces it will recall Service to answer charges. Frederic Schuman, Williams college professor, also named by McCarthy.

March 14 — Dr. Kenyon testifies, denies ever having been Communist, bitterly assails McCarthy tactics. Duran at Lake Success denies flatly he ever was a Communist.

March 21 — McCarthy gives name of "top Russian spy in U. S." to Committee in secret session. Again McCarthy demands DOS file.

March 26 — After "leaks" to newsmen, Committee members admit McCarthy has named Owen Lattimore as "top Russian spy".

March 27 — Mrs. Brunauer takes stand, denies she is or has been a Communist. Hoover opposes release of FBI files.

March 28 — Hanson on stand says McCarthy "twisted" facts from his writings, says charges have hurt him in his standing in community. Truman refuses to give committee access to DOS personnel files.

March 29 — Committee subpoenas personnel files.

March 30 — Truman orders subpoenas sent to him, blasts McCarthy as "asset to Kremlin." McCarthy takes to Senate floor to denounce Lattimore as "chief architect" of U. S. Far East policy, and says he's a Communist spy.

April 1 — Lattimore returns to U. S. from Afghanistan, scores McCarthy, says he is not and never has been Communist.

April 3 — Lattimore releases a hitherto secret memorandum he wrote for DOS on China; Lodge asks for secrecy in hearings, his request denied.

April 5 — Seth W. Richardson, head of Civil Service loyalty program says McCarthy charges false.

April 6 — Lattimore in lengthy statement before Committee denies ever having been Communist, again hits at McCarthy.

April 8 — In Passaic, N. J., speech McCarthy avoids mentioning names or dates; had been dared by Lattimore, others, to repeat his charges off Senate floor.

April 11 — McCarthy asks Committee to call Louis Budenz, former managing editor of Daily Worker, to testify.

April 12 — Committee in uproar when Tydings temporarily blocks appointment of Frederick Ayer, Jr., as GOP counsel because Ayer running for Attorney General in Massachusetts.

April 20 — Budenz testifies, identifies Lattimore as one "under Communist discipline" but admits he has no first-hand knowledge. McCarthy speaks to American Society of Newspaper Editors, flays Acheson, DOS.

April 22 — "Amerasia" case thrown into investigation; GOP demands full-dress hearings on case.

April 25 — Dr. Bella V. Dodd, identified by herself as former member of the Communist Central committee, denies Budenz testimony. McCarthy says Budenz identified Hanson in secret session.

April 26 — Earl Browder, former CP head, calls Budenz testimony false.

April 28 — Frederick Vanderbilt Field, described by McCarthy as "millionaire Communist" says he doesn't know Lattimore and had never heard him mentioned as a Communist.

April 29 — Former Secretaries of State Byrnes, Marshall, and Hull join with Acheson to deny Lattimore ever had anything to do with China policy. Tydings suggests contempt charges be filed against Field, Browder for not answering questions. (See page 000)

May 1—Freda Utley, former British CP member, says Lattimore not a Communist, but his writings followed CP line.

May 2-3—Lattimore on stand two days, calls Budenz "pathological liar."

May 4—Truman releases personnel files on 81 cases.

May 7—Tydings says cases "will be proved or disproved from files." McCarthy at Janesville, Wis., says files were "thoroughly raped."

May 10—Committee starts going through files.

May 12—Dennis Chavez (D. N.M.) attacks Budenz in bitter Senate speech.

May 15—In letter to American Society of Newspaper Editors, DOS denies McCarthy charges point by point, says Lattimore had no hand in shaping Far Eastern policy.

May 17—McCarthy admits to reporters he's getting "quite a bit of financial support" from outsiders to help in his campaign.

May 19—Tydings says important national defense legislation is being held up because of Committee hearings.

May 22—McCarthy charges committee "doing a foul job deliberately", asks for special, out-of-Congress commission to investigate his charges.

May 23—Committee starts reexamination of Amerasia case.

May 26—Robert M. Hitchcock, who handled original Amerasia case testifies before Committee.

May 29—State Dept. issues statement saying McCarthy has "failed utterly" to prove a single case of a Communist in Department.

May 31—Hickenlooper says some "very important" documents were among those found in Amerasia offices, including one top secret item.

June 1—Sen. Margaret Chase Smith (R Me.) and six other GOP Senators sign statement criticizing McCarthy for his tactics, but not naming him specifically.

June 4—Sen. Thye of Minnesota calls for "responsible Republican position" on investigations.

June 5—Former Undersecretary of State Joseph Grew testifies on Amerasia case.

June 6—McCarthy says FBI has identified three persons "in high places" as members of CP.

June 31—21 GOP Senators ask for complete, separate Amerasia investigation, Lucas refuses.

June 15—Green and Lodge return from Europe, recommend firing all aliens employed in U. S. embassies abroad.

June 22—Service goes before Committee, denies he has Communist leanings. Tydings says FBI proves McCarthy charges files "raped" false.

June 24—Lodge says he isn't convinced material in files is "finished" and that they either prove or disprove anything.

June 28—Tydings ends investigation.

July 18—Tydings, Democrats, issue committee report, charging McCarthy statements, charges "a hoax and a fraud."

July 20—Lodge, Hickenlooper issue separate report, saying investigation wasn't complete enough.

July 22—After bitter Committee fight, Democrats on Foreign Affairs Committee accept Subcommittee reports.

July 25—After long debate, bitter accusations, Senate accepts Democratic version of Foreign Affairs Committee report.

July 25—McCarthy on Senate floor identifies "Mr. X" in DOS as CP member; Wayne Morse (R Ore.) identifies man as Edward G. Posniak, DOS economist, says he's a loyal American; Posniak issues statement he's loyal, has a long record of anti-Communist activities, fled Russia in 1917 to escape Communist revolution.

July 25—McCarthy says Theodore Geiger of ECA is C. P. member; William C. Foster, ECA deputy administrator, issues statement saying Geiger is loyal, cleared by ECA Administrator Paul G. Hoffman.

July 29—"Ordeal By Slander," book by Lattimore, is published.

Sept. 13—Senate Foreign Relations Committee asks for contempt citations against Browder, Field and Jaffe.

Sept. 22—Senate by voice vote passed S. Res. 349-351, citing Field, Browder and Jaffe for contempt of the Senate. (See page 423.)

Oct. 6 — Frederick Vanderbilt Field registered with the Justice Dept. as an agent for Red China financial interests.

Oct. 6 — State Dept. Loyalty Security Board cleared John S. Service of McCarthy charges.

Oct. 16 — McCarthy told a convention of insurance agents in New York that 14 of 91 State Deparment employees dropped as sexual perverts were taken back into government positions.

Nov. 24 — The State Dept. published a detailed outline of the methods used to check the loyalty and security of its employees in order to counteract "seeds of distrust planted all over America."

Nov. 27 — A federal grand jury Nov. 27 indicted Browder, Field, and Jaffe for contempt of Congress.

Dec. 15 — In the Senate McCarthy described Drew Pearson, newspaper columnist, as "the voice of international Communism." Pearson denied McCarthy's charges.

Dec. 22 — Pearson' radio network sponsor announced it would not renew Pearson's contract when it expires Feb. 18. A company spokesman said the decision was made several weeks before the McCarthy - Pearson exchange.

Dec. 24 — AVC requested the 82nd Congress to institute impeachment proceedings against McCarthy.

Civil Defense

H R 9798—P. L. 920

SUMMARY

Capitol Hill on Dec. 1 received a $3.1 billion federal-state program drawn by the Administration to provide for civil defense against atomic attack. The program called for creation of a Federal Civilian Defense Administration to handle independently federal-state co-operative defense endeavors.

Prepared by the National Security Resources Board, the program was to give the CD chief authority to act immediately in the event of an emergency. He could grant federal funds to the states to set up civilian defense organizations, and he would be co-ordinator of all civil defense activities.

Responsibility of the federal and state governments in the CD program were spelled out. The program would be paid for on a 50-50 matching basis by the U. S. and state governments.

In addition, the program included the following aims and costs:

1. The training of personnel and acquisition of supplies: cost, $200 million, borne by state and local governments; 2. acquisition of fire-fighting, communications and rescue equipment: cost, $200 million, shared equally by federal and state and local governments; 3. construction of communal - type shelters: cost, $2.25 billion, shared between federal and state and local governments; 4. stockpiling of critical materials such as plasma and medical supplies: $400 million, paid entirely by federal government; 5. establishment of communications and control centers: $32 million, borne entirely by federal government.

The Armed Services Committees of the House and Senate held hearings on the Administration's proposals, and made extensive changes in them. The two Committees then reported their own versions of a civilian defense program. The House unit produced its bill (HR 9798) on Dec. 18. The Senate group's bill (S 4268) had been reported Dec. 16.

The two bills were alike in broad outline but differed in some details. Both proposed measures established a permanent Federal Civil Defense Administration to direct over-all civilian preparations for dealing with dangers and problems of new warfare. The legislation authorized appropriations without specifying the amount, but both Committees estimated the cost, to be shared by federal and state governments, would be about $3.1 billion over a three-year period.

Both bills divided the Administrator's powers generally into those he might exercise in preparing the nation against attack and those for seizure and spending which he might use upon a presidential proclamation of emergency. Both bills were divided into four titles.

Final Action

The House passed its bill on a 247-1 roll-call vote on Dec. 20. The Senate made extensive changes in the legislation, and then approved it by voice vote on Dec. 22. A conference ensued to reconcile the two versions, and on Jan. 1, 1951, reported a compromise. The House promptly approved the conference report the same day. The Senate endorsed it Jan. 2, clearing the bill to the White House.

Provisions

The major provisions and four titles of HR 9798, the "Federal Civil Defense Act of 1950," follow:

Declaration of Policy: To provide a plan of civil defense for protection of life and property with responsibility primarily vested in the States and their political subdivisions, and the federal government providing necessary co-ordination and guidance.

Definitions were given in detail for such terms as "attack", "civil defense", "organizational equipment", "facilities", "United States" or "States", and "neighboring countries".

TITLE I—ORGANIZATION

A Federal Civil Defense Administration is established to be headed by an Administrator at an annual salary of $17,500, and a Deputy Administrator at an annual salary of $16,000, both to be appointed by the President.

A Civil Defense Advisory Council is created, consisting of an Administrator and twelve additional members, all to be appointed by the President. Three members to be representatives of State governments; three of political subdivisions of the States; the remaining to be selected among the citizens of the United States — all to be appointed for specified, staggered terms of office.

TITLE II—POWERS AND DUTIES

Functions of Administration are detailed. The Administrator is authorized to: (a) Prepare, sponsor and direct national plans and programs, and request reports on State plans and operations; (b) delegate responsibilities to federal agencies and coordinate federal activities with those of states and other countries; (c) make provision for civil defense communications and for dissemination of warnings of enemy attacks; (d) study and develop civil defense measures to protect life and property;

And to (e) conduct, or contract for, training programs for instruction of civil defense officials — subsistence and quarters to be furnished trainees and instructors — with proviso that not more than one national civil defense college and three civil defense technical training schools be established; (f) disseminate information; (g) encourage states to make interstate compacts, subject to Congressional consent, for mutual aid in the event of an attack which cannot be adequately met by a State;

And to (h) procure by condemnation or otherwise, construct, lease, store, maintain, renovate or distribute materials and facilities for civil defense, with provisos on time limitation and approval of property acquisitions; (i) make financial contributions to the States for civil defense purposes, excluding personnel or administrative expenses, with detailed provisos on how funds are to be allotted to the States; and (j) arrange for sale or disposal of materials and facilities found unnecessary or unsuitable for civil defense purposes.

Mutual aid pacts between states and neighboring countries are to be facilitated by the Administrator.

The Administrator may prescribe insignia and arm bands. Manufacture, possession, or wearing of such insignia, other than in accordance of rules and regulations, to be unlawful.

TITLE III — EMERGENCY AUTHORITY

The existence of a civil defense emergency may be proclaimed by the President or by concurrent resolution of the Congress. Any such emergency shall be terminated similarly.

The President is authorized to direct any federal agency to provide personnel or materials for the aid of the States, emergency construction and repairs.

During such emergency the Administrator is authorized to: (a) exercise his procurement authority without regard to the limitation of any existing law; (b) sell, lease, lend materials or perform services for civil defense on such terms and conditions as he prescribes; (c) coordinate and direct relief activities; (d) reimburse States for services of their employees outside State limits; (e) provide financial aid to civilians injured or in need as a result of attack; and (f) employ additional personnel without regard to civil service laws.

The federal government is removed from liability claims in case of death or personal injury. However, nothing shall affect the right of any person to receive compensation to which he might otherwise be entitled.

The Administrative Procedure Act is waived during such emergency.

The handling of compensation for nongovernmental property acquired is delineated.

TITLE IV — GENERAL PROVISIONS

The Administrator is authorized to: (a) employ civilian personnel for duty in the United States, including the District of Columbia, subject to civil service laws; (b) employ not more than one hundred part-time or temporary advisory personnel, including no more than 25 Britons and Canadians; (c) utilize the services of federal agencies and, with the consent of the States or local governments, their services and agencies; (d) accept and utilize gifts of supplies, equipment and facilities; (e) reimburse any federal agency for expenditures or compensation of its personnel; (f) purchase necessary printing; and (g) prescribe rules and regulations necessary to carry out provisions of this Act.

The Administrator is authorized to establish security requirements and regulations. No employee of the Administration shall have access to restricted information or occupy any position of critical importance until it is determined that no information is contained in the files of the Federal Bureau of Investigation or any other investigative agency of the Government indicating a question of loyalty or reliability. Loyalty oaths are mandatory for all employees.

The President may transfer to the FCDA such functions, property and personnel of the National Security Resources Board as are concerned with civil defense activities.

The Administrator shall cooperate with, and utilize to the maximum extent, existing agencies, facilities and resources of the federal government, and refrain from any activity which would result in duplication.

The Administrator shall annually submit a written report with recommendations to the President and the Congress.

Necessary funds are authorized to be appropriated. Allocations or transfers of funds to other agencies are to be approved by the Bureau of the Budget, and reported to the Congress within thirty days.

The Administrator is authorized to certify to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation as to the necessity of purchasing securities or making loans connected with civil defense projects. The RFC is authorized to purchase such securities or make such loans, provided financing is unavailable on reasonable terms. The total amount of loans, purchases and guarantees shall not exceed $250,000,000 outstanding at any one time.

Nothing in this Act shall be construed to amend or modify the provisions of the Atomic Energy Act of 1946, as amended.

HOUSE

Committee

Rep. Carl T. Durham (D N. C.), vice chairman of the Joint Congressional Committee on Atomic Energy, promptly incorporated the Administration's program into a bill (HR 9798). But the bill was referred to the House Armed Services Committee, instead of being sent to Durham's atomic energy group.

Headed by Rep. Durham, a special subcommittee of the Armed Services group opened hearings on the measure. It took testimony from James J. Wadsworth, acting deputy director, Federal Civil Defense Administration, Samuel Sadin, assistant general counsel, National Security Resources Board, and Col. Barnet W. Beers, Office of Defense Secretary. All assured the Congressmen the civil defense bill would not duplicate military efforts in any field, infringe upon rights of Congress and the states in matters of interstate compacts or open the door for the federal civil defense director to investigate subversive activity.

On Dec. 8, the Durham Subcommittee ended open hearings and went into closed-door sessions to rewrite the measure. Chairman Carl Vinson (D Ga.) of the full Armed Services Committee, suggested that considerable redrafting would be necessary. He thought broad authority proposed for the new Federal Civil Defense Administration ought to be "tightened up."

Some of Vinson's suggestions were adopted, and on Dec. 18, the full Armed Services group endorsed HR 9798 and reported it to the House.

Report

As reported, these were the four titles of HR 9798:

Title I prescribed the Administrator's position and pay.

Title II set forth his extensive powers and duties in the preparatory phase. He was directed to: 1. Co-ordinate federal activities with those of states and other countries; 2. Set up an adequate communications warning system and health and sanitation measures to meet all types of attack; 3. Train key state personnel who in turn would train local civil defense workers and units; 4. Develop and disseminate educational material; 5. Encourage states to make agreements or compacts, subject to Congressional consent, so that agencies and manpower of one may be used in another in case of a disaster; 6. Procure materials, equipment and facilities for civil defense, including blood plasma, emergency food and items not normally provided on the local level; 7. Make financial contributions to the states for authorized purposes such as bomb shelters, except for contributions to self-liquidating project or pay of personnel; 8. Prescribe insignia and arm bands.

The President also was authorized to requisition materials and facilities for civil defense under terms of the Defense Production Act of 1950.

To offset possible surprise enemy bombs or attacks Title III, the emergency powers section, authorized the President to proclaim a "national civil defense emergency," and thereupon, the administrator was directed to: 1. Use all federal resources, including personnel and materials, for controlling panic and destruction and dealing with post-attack problems; 2. Exercise his procurement authority without regard to limitation of any existing law; 3. Sell materials or perform services for civil defense under terms he prescribes; 4. Reimburse states for services outside state limits; 5. Grant financial assistance to injured or needy civilians; 6. Employ additional personnel without regard to civil service laws.

The Administrative Procedure Act also was waived in the prescribed emergency and the government was removed from liability claims.

Title IV set forth the organization outlines of the agency. Appointment of advisory and part-time advisory personnel was authorized including employment of 25 British and Canadian citizens. An FBI investigation was required of every employee in a "critical" position and a name check was required of all others. Loyalty oaths were mandatory for everybody the agency employed.

Floor Action

The House commenced formal action on HR 9798 on Dec. 20. During debate, there were references to the possibility Russia would bomb American industrial cities in event of war. Rep. Edgar A. Jonas (R Ill.) questioned whether the Russians really have the atom bomb. Rep. Melvin Price (D Ill.), a member of the Joint Atomic Energy Committee, told Jonas that "positively" the Russians do have the weapon, are stockpiling them and have the planes to deliver them.

Durham said in the event of war it was probable "an enemy would attempt at the outset to destroy or cripple the productive capacity of the United States and to carry direct attack against civilian communities to disrupt support of the war effort."

Clare Hoffman, (R. Mich.) the bill's lone opponent, critized it as too broad and open to "boondoggling." He said he thought first things, i.e. the man on the battlefront, should come first. He said he would approve funds to protect the war industries.

By a roll call vote of 247-1, the House then passed the measure. Hoffman cast the only vote against it.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Walter H. Judd (R Minn.) — Require the administrator to evaluate the FBI report in writing if he should hire an individual notwithstanding derogatory information.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) — Eliminate ban on contributions to self-liquidating state projects. Voice.

Edwin Arthur Hall (R N.Y.) — Mobilize hunters and gun-carrying sportsmen into a stand-by army. Voice.

SENATE

Committee

The Administration's civil defense program became the object of contention between two Senate committees. Both Brien McMahon (D Conn.), chairman of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, which had previously handled civil defense matters, and Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.), chairman of the Civil Defense Subcommittee of the Armed Services Committee, together with Harry P. Cain (R Wash.), introduced two identical bills (S 4219 and S 4217) embodying the Administration proposals. Both claimed their Committees had jurisdiction over the program.

Vice President Alben Barkley, the Senate's presiding officer, Dec. 4 sent S 4219 to the Armed Services Committee, on the ground that an atomic bomb was only one type of attack which might take place. Therefore, said Barkley, the bill went "far beyond" the jurisdiction of the atomic group.

McMahon's group opened hearings on Dec. 4 and heard James J. Wadsworth, deputy administrator of the Civil Defense Administration, which had previously been under the NSRB. Wadsworth spelled out the purposes of the proposed program.

Two days later, on Dec. 6, the Kefauver Subcommittee of the Armed Services group opened hearings on S 4219, with the hearings pitched on the theme that Russia has developed the atomic bomb. Richard Graves, chairman of the civil defense committee of the American Municipal Association, which was then holding a Washington conference, presented a resolution recommending establishment of a Civil Defense Administration as a fourth department of the military establishment, instead of as an independent agency.

The AMA spokesman also said the proposed bill "bypassed" the cities and provided only for dealings between federal officials and state governments. Deputy Defense Administrator Wadsworth defended the legislation and said the proposed Civilian Defense Administration should be an independent body, apart from the Defense Department.

On Dec. 7, Col. Barnet W. Beers, of the Office of the Defense Secretary, told the Kefauver unit that civil defense was a civilian job. Millard F. Caldwell, Jr., named by President Truman to head the independent Civil Defense Administration established by executive order, urged speedy action on S 4219.

Allen Cozier, Justice Department spokesman, Dec. 8 stated that the FBI could not undertake the job of investigating civil defense employees, as the proposed bill provided. He suggested requiring loyalty oaths of the agency's employees would be sufficient. Dr. Shields Warren, on behalf of the Atomic Energy Commission, urged enactment of S 4219, as did Federal Security Administrator Oscar Ewing.

James E. Palmer, Jr., spokesman for the Justice Department's lands division, Dec. 12 opposed the bill's provision for requisition of private property. He said the condemnation procedure would be better and quicker.

Meanwhile, much the same testimony was being brought forth by the McMahon group which was holding simultaneous hearings.

Highlight of testimony before this unit came Dec. 11 when Govs. Frank J. Lausche of Ohio and Val Peterson of Nebraska, on behalf of the Council of State Governments, questioned the advisibility of the extensive bomb shelter program, scheduled to cost $2.25 billion, which the administration wanted to undertake. The two said they thought the length of time it would take to reach the shelters would reduce their usefulness. They did not question the cost.

Report

On Dec. 16, the full Armed Services Committee took the various recommendations made by the Kefauver group and worked them into a "clean" bill — S 4268. This measure followed the major provisions of the House bill which had been reported a few days previously, but carried the following changes:

President Truman was authorized to initiate all or part of the broad emergency powers by merely notifying the Congressional Armed Services Committees, instead of proclaiming a national civilian defense emergency. If Congress did not agree, it could veto the Presidential order. The Committee said it included the "trigger" provision because the time might come when the President would be "acting upon intelligence which it would be unwise to divulge to the public generally (and he) may wish to expedite the completion of certain phases of the civil defense program."

Contributions to self - liquidating municipal projects such as underground parking garages which might be used as bomb shelters were authorized, as were contributions to cost of state personnel.

Floor Action

The Senate began consideration of S 4268 on Dec. 21, and started to vote on amendments to it the following day. The measure was amended to withhold the sweeping powers it gave to the civil defense Administrator until an attack on the U. S. was actual or direly imminent. The President was required, under the terms of this amendment, to proclaim when "the national safety" called for the Administrator to wield all his powers — but the President was directed to notify the Congress in advance that such a proclamation impended.

Sens. Robert A. Taft (R Ohio) and Spessard Holland (D Fla.), who jointly framed the amendment, respectively stated that without it, "the manner of stepping into" an emergency which would permit the Administrator to use all his powers would be "almost too easy . . . emergencies nowadays come pretty cheap . . ." and that the amendment "localizes any occasion in which these emergency powers would be utilized . . ."

An amendment was also adopted requiring the Administrator to consult with the Defense Department in determining which are critical target areas to receive especial civil defense attention. The alteration, drawn by Brien McMahon (D Conn.) and modified by Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.), was adopted by unanimous consent.

Other amendments approved included one putting FBI checks of key personnel on an optional basis, and one requiring the Administrator to set promptly the sums to be paid for property acquired under the program and subsequently to give the owner a chance to re-acquire the property when no longer needed.

Taft withdrew two amendments he had placed before the Senate. One would have set an expiration date of June 30, 1953, for the Act. The second would have raised from 40 to 50 years the maturity period of loans made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to self-liquidating concerns which borrow to construct defense facilities.

During the debate, Sen. Pat McCarran (D Nev.) rose on the floor to challenge the constitutionality of two sections of the bill as it had originally reached the Senate. These were features that: 1 - virtually exempted some Civil Defense Administration actions from juridical review; and 2- virtually exempted the government from suits arising from CDA actions.

Calling them "startling provisions," McCarran indicated that these two sections violated the Fifth Amendment to the U. S. Constitution, which establishes that the right of one person to sue another for a wrong is a property right, which can not be taken away without due process of law.

Kefauver assured McCarran that the Taft - Holland amendment partially met the latter's objections. But the Nevadan moved to strike out the offending sections altogether. Kefauver assented on behalf of the backers of the bill. The two sections were dropped without objection.

Nearing a final vote on S 4268, the Senate decided to substitute the language of this bill for the House - approved measure (HR 9798), and send the legislation to conference under the House bill's number.

The substitution was done by unanimous consent, and the final measure — with the House number of HR 9798 but the text of the original Senate bill—was approved by voice vote.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Irving Ives (R N.Y.) and Ralph Flanders (R Vt.) — Require the civil defense Administrator to determine promptly the sum to be paid for property acquired for the program, and to afford the owner an opportunity to re-acquire the property when no longer needed. Voice.

Brien McMahon (D Conn.) — Require the Administrator to consult with the Secretary of Defense in determining which areas are critical target ones. Adopted without objection.

Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.) — Modify McMahon amendment so that it required "consultation" with the Defense Secretary instead of committing the Administrator to follow through solely on "recommendations" of that official. Adopted without objection.

Styles Bridges (R N.H.) — Put FBI checks of key personnel on an optional — instead of mandatory—basis in case a Civil Service field investigation casts doubt on a person's loyalty. Adopted without objection.

Robert A. Taft (R Ohio) — Invoke Act only when the President has proclaimed a national emergency or when Congress passes a concurrent resolution to that effect, and require the President to notify Congress when a proclamation impends. Voice.

Spessard Holland (D Fla.) — Modify Taft's amendment to narrow it down also to "a localized area or areas. . ." and "any exposed area or areas. . .". Voice.

Pat McCarran (D Nev.) — Strike out portion of bill tending to exempt actions of Civil Defense Administration from juridical review and exempt the government from suits growing out of CDA operation. Adopted without objection.

Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.) for Wayne Morse (R Ore.) — Administrative change respecting "such obligations on behalf of the United States as may be required to meet the civil-defense requirements of an attack or imminent attack." Voice.

AMENDMENTS WITHDRAWN

Taft — Provide that the Act expire on June 30, 1953.

Taft — Raise from 40 to 50 years the time in which projects—which received loans from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation as "self - liquidating" projects to build civil defense facilities — could, in fact, become self-liquidating.

CONFERENCE

The differing House and Senate bills on civil defense were sent to a joint conference committee on Dec. 26 for reconciliation. Agreement was reached shortly, and on Jan. 1, 1951, the conference report was formally set before the House. Major differences resolved by the conferees included:

1. The Senate version had stipulated creation of a Civil Defense Advisory Council to aid the Administrator. The Council was to be drawn partially from state and municipal governments. The House had not written provision for such a Council into its bill. It decided to accept the Senate's feature. As Rep. Durham explained to the House, "after all, the States are expected to do a good deal of the civil defense program themselves, and they are further expected to match federal funds. It therefore seems only fair and just that they should have a voice in the program."

2. Both the House and Senate bills gave broad authority to the Administrator to procure, construct and lease materials and facilities for civil defense. The conferees agreed the authority was so broad that a limitation was needed. Accordingly, they wrote a time limit of Jan. 1, 1952, into the compromise version. After this date, the Administrator could acquire land only when specifically authorized to do so by the Congress.

3. The House bill had barred the Administrator from making contributions to self - liquidating projects connected with civil defense facilities. The Senate conferees agreed to this prohibition after the provision had been liberalized somewhat administratively. The Committee agreed upon a section that would permit the Administrator to match state funds for the purpose of renovating, constructing, or enlarging self-liquidating projects to the extent that the costs involved were purely for civil defense functions. The conferees retained a provision to give the Reconstruction Finance Corporation $250 million in additional borrowing power to make loans to municipalities and private individuals for self-liquidating projects.

4. A House provision that the entire act would die June 30, 1954, was replaced with stipulation that only the emergency sections would expire on that date.

5. The revised measure which the conferees prepared for submission to the chambers rewrote the so - called "trigger" provisions dealing with the Administrator's powers in an emergency. Under the conference version, existence of a civil defense emergency may be proclaimed by the President or by concurrent resolution of Congress if either finds that an attack on the United States or its territories or possessions had occurred or is anticipated, and the national safety requires the civil defense administration to have the emergency powers.

6. The compromise bill also included a provision giving the President power to declare an emergency for local geographical areas only, should he find the need exists.

Final Action

At its unprecedented New Year's Day session, the House approved the conference report on HR 9798 by voice vote. There was relatively little debate.

The Senate took up the conference report on Jan. 2, 1951. Sen. Pat McCarran (D Nev.) called the legislation "one of the most drastic, dangerous laws ever put on the statute books" but Sen. Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.) asserted it was a "well - worked out proposal" which met the "insistent demands" of state and local civil defense authorities.

The Senate then passed the bill by a voice vote, clearing it to the White House, where President Truman signed it into Public Law 920 on Jan. 12, 1951.

In letters on Dec. 18 to Vice President Alben Barkley and Speaker Sam Rayburn (D Tex.), President Truman asked that two titles of the First War Powers Act of 1941 be restored. The 1941 Act had expired after the war. The two sections of this measure that Mr. Truman wanted revived were:

Title I, permitting the President to reorganize certain federal agencies, notably maritime and manpower units; and Title II, permitting him to renegotiate existing defense production contracts in order to facilitate economic mobilization.

The Senate swung into action promptly, but split up the two Presidential requests. It passed a bill (S 4266) giving the President the requested renegotiation powers on Dec. 21, by voice vote. But it deferred action on the reorganization feature.

The House, on the other hand, had a Committee - backed measure (HR 9932) before it which would have revived both Titles I and II of the 1941 Act. The House tried to vote on this measure on Dec. 21, but lack of a quorum prevented this. Too many lawmakers were away for the Christmas holidays.

On Jan. 1, 1951, the House reconvened, but took up the Senate bill (S 4266) instead of its own broader measure. After amending S 4266 so that renegotiated contracts were required to carry a clause permitting the U. S. Comptroller General to inspect books and records of government contractors and sub-contractors, the House passed the bill on a voice vote Jan. 2. A few minutes later the Senate endorsed this House change, thus clearing the measure to the White House where President Truman signed it Jan. 12, 1951.

SENATE

Committee

Shortly after Mr. Truman had requested the restoration of Titles I and II of the 1941 Act, Senate Majority Leader Scott W. Lucas (D Ill.) introduced a bill (S 4264) embodying the President's proposals. The bill was referred to the Senate Expenditures Committee, headed by John L. McClellan (D Ark.)

Over protests of GOP leader Robert A. Taft (Ohio) that the Administration was "trying to rush through" a measure that deserved closer scrutiny than the "lame duck" session could give it, McClellan opened hearings at once. Frederick J. Lawton, director of the Budget, and Archibald S. Alexander, under secretary of the Army, testified in favor of the renegotiation aspect of the bill on Dec. 20.

Taft, Karl Mundt (R S.D.) and Andrew F. Schoeppel (R Kan.) were opposed to giving the President permission to reshuffle government agencies and the Committee decided to defer action on it until Charles E. Wilson, newly-named chief of the Office of Defense Mobilization, could be called to testify.

Therefore, the McClellan unit divorced the renegotiation section of S 4264 from the rest of the bill, and wrapped it up in a separate measure, S 4266. After setting a termination date of June 30, 1952, on the President's power to renegotiate contracts, the Committee unanimously approved S 4266 late Dec. 20.

Floor Action

The Senate took up S 4266 on Dec. 21. The same Republicans who had opposed it during the Committee stage recast their arguments and presented them again on the Senate floor.

One amendment was approved. This altered S 4266 so that the renegotiation powers it conferred on the President would expire on June 30, 1952.

By a voice vote, the Senate then passed the measure.

HOUSE

Committee

Chairman Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.) convened his Judiciary Committee on Dec. 19 within a few hours after President Truman's requests had been received, and the Committee promptly endorsed them after wrapping them up in a single measure, HR 9932. But Celler attempted to bypass the Rules Committee which normally clears bills to the House floor for action.

When Celler tried to bring HR 9932 up directly in the House on Dec. 20 via a unanimous consent agreement to vote on it at once, Rep. Charles A. Halleck (R Ind.) objected. This killed the tactic. Calling Halleck's objection "disheartening . . . Republican intransigeance", Celler was then obliged to route his bill through the Rules group.

This Committee approved it over brisk GOP opposition on Dec. 20 — but a day had been lost.

When the House did take up the measure on Dec. 21, two hours of debate had been formally set aside for its consideration. But Speaker Sam Rayburn (D Tex.) found that the House was short of a quorum for nearly 3 hours, announced that a final decision would be put off to Jan. 1, 1951.

Floor Action

On Jan. 1, 1951, however, Administration forces bowed to Republican opposition to HR 9932 and elected to press instead for approval of the Senate measure which only granted the President renegotiation powers. But when Rep. Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.) tried to bring up S 4266 for consideration via unanimous consent, Rep. Vito Marcantonio (ALP N.Y.) objected. Marcantonio called the bill "in the interest of increasing war profiteering."

Marcantonio supported an amendment offered by Rep. Porter Hardy (D Va.) which sought to alter the bill so that all contracts renegotiated under its terms would carry a special proviso. This proviso would be a clause permitting the U. S. Comptroller General to inspect the books and papers of government contractors and sub-contractors.

The Hardy amendment was accepted by Celler. On Jan. 2, a final flurry of debate came on the bill. Rep. Robert Rich (R Pa.) criticized the measure, saying passage would simply be "bailing out a bunch of businessmen dumb enough not to cover themselves with necessary manufacturing materials before contracting with the government." Majority Leader John McCormack (D Mass.) countered, saying the bill was "an attempt to bring about practical justice to business." Celler reiterated that the bill actually attempted to "bail out the government" in connection with its purchases of strategic materials. Rep. Dewey Short (R Mo.) said without the bill "it will be absolutely impossible to accelerate our defense program."

After this discussion, the House passed S 4266 by a voice vote. The amended bill was returned to the Senate for concurrence in the change. The Senate granted this also by a voice vote. Within minutes, the measure was on its way to the White House, where President Truman signed it into law Jan. 12, 1951.

Knauff Case

The House Judiciary Committee April 4 approved a private bill (HR 7614) cancelling a deportation order against Mrs. Ellen Knauff, a Czechoslovakian war bride held at Ellis Island since August, 1948, as a questionable security risk. Members said the approval was unanimous.

Mrs. Knauff, who was born in Germany, was brought to Washington from New York April 3 to testify before a Judiciary Subcommittee, which characterized as "outrageous" the refusal of the Immigration and Naturalization Service to admit her to the United States. After taking her story, the Subcommittee voted within five minutes to send the cancellation bill to the full committee.

On the witness stand, 35-year-old Mrs. Knauff brought out that:

1. She was WAF flight sergeant in British Air Force intelligence for nearly four years in charge of top-secret charts for briefing German bombing raids.

2. She suspected it was a jilted ex-girl friend of her husband who spread malicious tales that led to the security charges blocking her admission to the United States.

The House Committee's action followed earlier study of the question of bringing contempt-of-Congress proceedings against Edward J. Shaughnessy, acting New York Immigration Commissioner, was weighed by the Subcommittee after Shaugnessy March 27 ignored a subpoena ordering him to produce Mrs. Knauff as a witness.

Rep. Francis E. Walter (D Pa.), Subcommittee chairman, accused the immigration official of "an abuse of administrative power." Walter contended Mrs. Knauff never had a hearing and did not know why she was not allowed to enter this country. He said he wanted to find out if her civil rights have been violated.

The House itself took up HR 7614 on May 2. After Rep. Walter told members the exclusion order was a "stupid blunder", the lower chamber voted by voice to pass the bill setting the order aside. But in the Senate, where the measure was then sent, Sen. Pat McCarran (D Nev.) recommended that his judiciary Committee pigeonhole the bill. This was done, and no further action was taken in Congress with respect to Mrs. Knauff.

Nominations

President Truman suffered two rebuffs in connection with his nominations of individuals to be permanent federal judges. The Senate overwhelmingly turned down the nominations of Carroll O. Switzer to be a district judge in Iowa and M. Neil Andrews to be a district judge in Georgia.

SWITZER REJECTED

In 1949, President Truman gave a recess appointment to Carroll O. Switzer to serve temporarily as U. S. district judge for southern Iowa. On Jan. 5, 1950, the President nominated Switzer to continue on the bench as a permanent appointee. As soon as the nomination was announced, Sen. Guy Gillette (D Iowa) declared that he would fight to prevent confirmation.

Gillette repeatedly criticized Switzer, who ran for governor of Iowa on the Democratic ticket in 1948 and lost. Gillette called the nomination a "direct affront" to him, and said he had recommended other men for the post. Bourke B. Hickenlooper (R Iowa) joined Gillette in opposing the nominee.

XUM

Chairman Pat McCarran (D Nev.) of the Senate Judiciary Committee, said Jan. 25 that "serious objections" had been raised to the nomination of Switzer and that "lengthy hearings" would be necessary.

When Committee hearings on Switzer were opened in April, Gillette again protested against the nomination. He called it "political trafficking" in the judiciary.

Gillette's objection was on the ground that Switzer was lacking in poise and temperament to be a federal judge. He asserted that Switzer had figured in a political deal in 1948 whereby if he were defeated in a race for governor he would be offered a judgeship. Switzer asked for Gillette's support, according to the Senator, but he declined because he did not want to be a party to such a promise.

Also opposed to Switzer were the American Bar Association and Iowa State Bar Association, according to McCarran. He said, however, that he had received a number of letters from Iowans in support of Switzer's nomination.

On July 31, however, the Senate Judiciary Committee flatly turned down Switzer, voting 10-0 to report his nomination to the Senate with a recommendation against confirmation.

When the upper chamber took up the nomination on Aug. 9, it turned down the nomination by voice vote. The "ayes" were hardly audible.

ANDREWS REJECTED

M. Neil Andrews was also serving under a temporary, recess appointment as a federal judge for the northern district of Alabama when the President in 1950 formally nominated him to the bench on a permanent basis. But the Andrews nomination also encountered stiff opposition when the Senate Judiciary Committee considered it.

Andrews was opposed by Sens. Richard B. Russell (D Ga.) and Walter F. George (D Ga.). Russell said the opposition was based on the fact that he (Russell) had recommended another Georgian for the post and had not been consulted when President Truman appointed Andrews instead. George lent his support to Russell in the same matter.

They said they had nothing against Andrews' character or legal qualifications but they protested that they had been ignored by the President in making the appointment. They said they had recommended Boyd Sloan, of Gainesville, a former Superior Court judge.

On July 14, a subcommittee of the Judiciary group recommended unfavorable endorsement of Andrews. The full Judiciary Committee voted 9-1 on July 31 to urge the Senate to turn down the nomination, and the Senate did so by voice vote on Aug. 9.

RITTER CONFIRMED

A third Presidential nominee to a federal judgeship was ultimately confirmed by the Senate, but only after considerable speechmaking by the nominee's opponents. The jurist involved was Willis W. Ritter, named to be a permanent district judge in Utah after serving as such under a 1949 recess appointment.

When Ritter's permanent nomination was submitted to the Senate Judiciary Committee, Sen. Arthur Watkins (R Utah) on Jan. 20 urged a full investigation of the nominee. While Ritter was "not personally obnoxious", said Watkins, various questions had been raised with respect to Ritter's qualifications for the bench.

The Judiciary group considered the nomination in April, after Watkins asked it to summon 16 witnesses who could testify unfavorably about Ritter. At the same time, Sen. Elbert Thomas (D Utah) asked that 49 witnesses be summoned to support the Ritter nomination. Not all of these appeared at private hearings later held.

After these, the Judiciary group decided to recommend Ritter's confirmation, and the Senate did this by a voice vote on June 29 despite a two-hour speech against Ritter by Watkins.

Senate Votes: Hatch Act, Cloture, Loyalty Probe

1. Hatch Act Amendment (HR 1243). Give Civil Service Commission discretionary powers in dealing with certain violations of Hatch Act. Conference report. Passed, 42-32, June 21, 1950. (See p. 384)
2. Federal Fair Employment Practice Act (S 1728). Invoke cloture on motion to take up the bill. (64 yeas required). Rejected, 52-32, May 19, 1950. (See p. 375)
3. Federal Fair Employment Practice Act (S 1728). Invoke cloture on Lucas (D Ill.) motion to take up the bill. (64 yeas required). Rejected, 55-33, July 12, 1950.
4. Loyalty Investigation. Lucas (D Ill.) motion to adjourn during McCarthy (R Wis.) speech on Communists in State Department. Rejected, 16-18, Feb. 20, 1950. (See p. 444)
5. Loyalty Investigation Report. Lucas (D Ill.) motion to table Wherry (R Neb.) appeal from ruling of Chair. (Wherry had made a point of order against filing of the report, and the Chair had overruled the point of order, whereupon Wherry appealed the ruling, and Lucas moved to table the appeal.) Agreed to, 45-37, July 20, 1950.
6. Loyalty Investigation Report. Lucas (D Ill.) motion to table Wherry (R Neb.) appeal from ruling of Chair. (Wherry moved to recommit the report with instructions, Lucas had raised a point of order against Wherry's motion, and the Chair had sustained the point of order; Wherry appealed, and Lucas moved to table the appeal.) Agreed to, 46-37, July 20, 1950.
7. Loyalty Investigation Report. Benton (D Conn.) motion to table Donnell (R Mo.) appeal from ruling of Chair. (Donnell moved to recommit the report, the Chair ruled the motion out of order, Donnell appealed the ruling, and Benton moved to table the appeal.) Agreed to, 45-35, July 20, 1950.
8. Loyalty Investigation Report. Lucas (D Ill.) motion to table Wherry (R Neb.) appeal from ruling of Chair. (Wherry had raised a point of order against presence on the floor of the counsel of the Foreign Relations subcommittee, on grounds that the subcommittee had been discharged and was no longer in existence. The Chair overruled the point of order, Wherry appealed the ruling, and Lucas moved to table the appeal.) Agreed to, 43-31, July 20, 1950.

Senate Votes: Security, War Contractors

1. Internal Security Act of 1950 (S 4037). Establish a Subversive Activities Control Board, require registration of Communist-controlled organizations, and deny certain privileges to members of such organizations. Lucas (D Ill.) amendment to delete registration and substitute provisions for detention, in periods of national emergency, of persons who may reasonably be suspected of engaging in espionage or sabotage. Rejected, 29-45, Sept. 12, 1950. (See p. 390)
2. Internal Security Act of 1950 (S 4037). Lucas (D Ill.) amendment to add detention provisions, as modified by Holland (D Fla.) limiting definition of emergency to actual invasion, declaration of war by Congress, or insurrection within the U.S. (McCarran (D Nev.) substitute for this amendment later adopted by voice.) Rejected, 35-37, Sept. 12, 1950.
3. Internal Security Act of 1950 (S 4037). Kilgore (D W.Va.) amendment in the nature of a substitute, to strengthen espionage laws and provide for detention, in periods of national emergency, of persons who may reasonably be suspected of engaging in espionage or sabotage. Rejected, 23-50, Sept. 12, 1950.
4. Internal Security Act of 1950 (S 4037). Connally (D Tex.) amendment to delete provisions for establishment in the State Department of an autonomous Bureau of Passports and Visas. Agreed to, 40-33, Sept. 12, 1950.
5. Internal Security Act of 1950 (HR 9490). Passage of bill (as amended by substitution of text of S 4037). Passed, 70-7, Sept. 12, 1950.
6. Internal Security Act of 1950 (HR 9490). Establish a Subversive Activities Control Board, require registration of Communist-controlled organizations, deny certain privileges to members of such organizations, and provide for internment of subversives in a national emergency. Conference report. Agreed to, 51-7, Sept. 20, 1950.
7. Internal Security Act of 1950 (HR 9490). Establish a Subversive Activities Control Board, require registration of Communist-controlled organizations, deny certain privileges to members of such organizations, and provide for internment of subversives during a national emergency. Passage of bill over President's veto (two-thirds majority, or 45 yeas, required). Passed, 57-10, Sept. 23, 1950.
8. War Contractors Relief Act (S 3906). Passage over President's veto (two-thirds majority, or 46 yeas, required). Rejected, 30-39, Sept. 13, 1950. (See p. 402)

House Votes: FEPC Maneuvers

1. Calendar Wednesday. (Calendar Wednesday provides for the calling of committees in regular order. When a committee is named it may call up any bill it has previously reported which is on the House Calendar.) Williams (D Miss.) motion to dispense with Calendar Wednesday. Rejected, 104-271, Feb. 1, 1950. (See p. 375)
2. Parliamentary Maneuver. Question of dispensing with further proceedings under call of the House. (The question, ordinarily carried without objection as a matter of routine, was put to the House by the Speaker after Davis (D Ga.) had objected -- a maneuver to delay consideration of FEPC). Agreed to, 258-82, Feb. 15, 1950. (See p. 375)
3. Parliamentary Maneuver. Richards (D S.C.) motion to adjourn (to delay consideration of FEPC). Rejected, 97-236, Feb. 15, 1950.
4. Parliamentary Maneuver. Williams (D Miss.) motion to dispense with Calendar Wednesday (to delay consideration of FEPC). Rejected, 94-239, Feb. 15, 1950.

House Votes: FEPC

1. Fair Employment Practice Act (HR 4453). Rogers (D Fla.) motion to dispense with Calendar Wednesday. (Calendar Wednesday provides for call of committees, with Education and Labor Committee scheduled to be called Feb. 22.) Rejected, 121-285, Feb. 22, 1950. (See p. 375)
2. Fair Employment Practice Act (HR 4453). McCormack (D Mass.) motion to dispense with further proceedings under call of the House. (If this motion had failed further delay would have ensued while absentees were called in). Agreed to, 290-115, Feb. 22, 1950.
3. Fair Employment Practice Act (HR 4453). Sikes (D Fla.) motion to adjourn. Rejected, 127-284, Feb. 22, 1950.
4. Fair Employment Practice Act (HR 4453). Smith (D Va.) question of consideration of the bill. Agreed to consider, 287-121, Feb. 22, 1950.
5. Fair Employment Practice Act (HR 4453). Smith (D Va.) motion to adjourn. Rejected, 165-239, Feb. 22, 1950.
6. Fair Employment Practice Act (HR 4453). Smith (D Va.) question of consideration of the bill. Agreed to consider, 271-133, Feb. 22, 1950.
7. Fair Employment Practice Act (HR 4453). McConnell (R Pa.) amendment substituingt text of HR 6881 (deleting reference to unlawful employment practices, and establishing FEPC with investigating and recommending powers only). Agreed to, 222-178, Feb. 22, 1950.
8. Fair Employment Practice Act (HR 4453). Brehm (R Ohio) motion to recommit. Rejected, 177-239, Feb. 23, 1950.

House Votes: Internal Security

1. Government Security Strengthening (HR 7439). Permit Secretaries of State, Defense, Army, Navy, Air Force, Treasury (Coast Guard), and heads of Dept. of Justice, Atomic Energy Commission, National Security Resources Board, and National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics to suspend without pay any civilian officer or employee in the interest of national security. Hagen (R Minn.) motion to recommit with instructions to report back with amendment giving suspended employee right of appeal to Civil Service Commission. Rejected, 144-193, July 12, 1950. (See p. 398)
2. Government Security Strengthening (HR 7439). Passage of bill. Passed, 327-14, July 12, 1950.
3. Internal Security Strengthening (HR 4703). Increase penalty for disclosure of classified information, extend statute of limitations, amend Foreign Agents Registration Act, and authorize Defense Secy. to issue orders and regulations under this act. Passage of bill. Passed, 368-2, March 15, 1950. (See p. 400)
4. Subversive Activities Control and Communist Registration (HR 9490). Resolution (H Res 826) providing for consideration and 2 hours general debate of HR 9490. Adopted, 357-1, Aug. 29, 1950. (See p. 390)
5. Subversive Activities Control and Communist Registration (HR 9490). Establish a 5-member Subversive Activities Control Board and require registration of Communist-action and Communist-front organizations; bar organization members from government or defense-plant jobs; prohibit government or defense-plant employee contributions to such organizations; deny passports to organization members; and require identification and labeling of radio broadcasts and mail originating with such organizations. Passed, 354-20, Aug. 29, 1950.
6. Internal Security Act of 1950 (HR 9490). Resolution (H Res 847) providing for disagreement to Senate amendments and sending bill to conference. Adopted, 324-9, Sept. 14, 1950.
7. Internal Security Act of 1950 (HR 9490). Establish a Subversive Activities Control Board, require registration of Communist-controlled organizations, deny certain privileges to members of such organizations, and provide for internment of subversives in a national emergency. Conference report. Agreed to, 313-20, Sept. 20, 1950.
8. Internal Security Act of 1950 (HR 9490). Establish a Subversive Activities Control Board, require registration of Communist-controlled organizations, deny certain privileges to members of such organizations and provide for internment of subversives during a national emergency. Passage of bill over President's veto (two-thirds majority, or 223 yeas, required). Passed, 286-48, Sept. 22, 1950.

House Votes: D.C., Claims, "Welfare"

1. District of Columbia Alcoholic Beverage Control Act Amendment (HR 3247). Klein (D N.Y.) motion to consider the bill. Rejected, 70-242, March 13, 1950.

   Daylight-Saving Time for the District of Columbia (HR 6354). Authorize District Board of Commissioners to establish daylight-saving time in the District of Columbia from the last Sunday of April, 1950, to last Sunday of September, 1950. Passage of bill under suspension of rules (two-thirds majority, or 188 yeas, required). Passed, 194-87, May 1, 1950. (See p. 405)

3. D.C. Airport Construction (S 456). Authorize $14 million for construction of an additional public airport for the District of Columbia. Byrnes (R Wis.) motion to recommit. Rejected, 124-226, Aug. 25, 1950. (See p. 415)

4. Omnibus Private Claims Bill (HR 7468). Dolliver (R Iowa) motion to delete claim of Harry Tansey. (Claim was for $34,272, as reimbursement of tax paid on liquor stocks subsequently destroyed by prohibition agents.) Agreed to, 184-119, June 6, 1950. (See p. 408)

5. Private Claim (S 784). Resolution (H Res 818) providing for consideration and one hour of general debate of bill directing a Treasury refund to the First, Second and Third National Steamship Companies of $384,256.26, deposited as security with U.S. Shipping Board in 1920. Rejected, 139-159, Aug. 31, 1950. (See p. 426)

6. Private Claim (HR 5244). Confer jurisdiction upon U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Indiana to hear, determine and render judgment upon the claim of Lt. Col. Charles J. Trees for damages allegedly sustained as the result of court-martial sentence of Nov. 29, 1945, nullified July 22, 1946, and appropriate $9,448.88 therefor. Conference report. Agreed to, 219-127, Jan. 2, 1951. (See p. 443)

7. "Welfare" Department Proposal. Disapprove Reorganization Plan No. 27, to create a Department of Health, Education and Security (H Res 647). Adoption of resolution. Adopted, 249-71, July 10, 1950. (See p. 373)

8. Electoral College Amendment (S J Res 2). Amend U.S. Constitution to provide that electoral votes of each state for President and Vice President shall be divided in proportion to the popular vote within the state. Passage under suspension of the rules (two-thirds majority, or 230 yeas, required). Rejected, 134-210, July 17, 1950. (See p. 388)

TAXES and ECONOMIC POLICY

Major Actions

Taxes:

Revenue Act of 1950 (legislation increasing individual and corporate income taxes) - enacted into law (page 573).

Excess-profits tax - enacted into law (page 669).

Defense production legislation - enacted into law (page 624).

"Basing point" bill, legalizing freight absorption - vetoed by President (page 564).

Rent control extensions - enacted into law (pages 662 and 668).

Federal aid to highways - enacted into law (page 602).

Rivers, harbors, flood control authorization - enacted into law (page 607).

"Basing Point" Act

S 1008—Vetoed

SUMMARY

The 1950 story of "basing point" legislation was one of extensive debate and maneuvering in efforts to get Senate and House agreement to a conference report on a 1949 compromise bill.

In 1949, the Congress had threshed out conflicting House and Senate views on "basing point" legislation, and reconciled them in a compromise version. Carried in a conference report, the compromise generally stipulated that companies would not run afoul of existing anti-trust statutes if the companies handled their delivered-pricing practices without conspiracy or collusion. Freight absorption and certain price discriminations were legalized so long as they were done in good faith and not for monopolistic ends.

The House adopted the conference report on Oct. 14, 1949, a few days before the Congress adjourned its first session. But the Senate refused to do so, and decided instead to defer consideration of the compromise to Jan. 20, 1950. The postponement was secured by opponents of the bill, led by Sens. Russell B. Long (D La.) and Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.).

When the second session met, and the Senate took up the conference report on Jan. 20, however, Senators found it unacceptable. They voted to send the compromise back to a new conference committee, again largely because of the opposition of Sens. Long and Douglas.

The House did not readily agree to the Senate's request for a new conference. Rep. Wright Patman (D Tex.) strongly resisted the proposal, urging public hearings on the measure. The way the pending legislation would affect small businesses drew most of the debate in the House, as it had in the Senate.

On Feb. 28, however, the House overrode the objections of Patman and other opponents of the conference report, and sent it to conference for the second time.

Dispute Over Language

Disputes in this second House-Senate conference on S 1008 centered largely on the language of one section of the bill pertaining to the reasons justifying intervention by the Federal Trade Commission in delivered-pricing practices of companies. But agreement was reached relatively promptly, and conferees reported out a new version of the original 1949 compromise.

The House adopted the new version on March 14. The Senate was asked to act on the measure on April 10, but deferred a final decision to June 2. Then, after a week of debate during which Douglas and other opponents of the measure made a futile, last-ditch stand against it, the Senate adopted the compromise.

This cleared the measure to the White House, but instead of signing it into law, President Truman vetoed it on June 16. He said the legislation would further confuse existing statutes on "basing point" matters, instead of clarifying them.

The legislation was returned to Congress, which made no attempt to override the veto.

Provisions

The provisions of the ultimate compromise version of S 1008 paralleled fairly closely the features embodied in the orginal compromise the Congress had worked out in 1949. (For detailed data on this refer to P. 704-715 in CQ Almanac, Vol. V.)

In general, the legislation would have legalized certain practices in the so-called "basing point" pricing system. The basing point system had been used in the cement, steel, bottle cap, sugar beet, etc., industries until outlawed by Supreme Court decisions. The bill would have legalized elements such as the use of delivered pricing, freight absorption and price discrimination to meet competition—all in the absence of conspiracy. Under the basing point system, the price to the consumer equals the mill price plus rail freight from the nearest established basing point—no matter from where or how the goods are actually shipped.

In other words, the bill would have made it legal for manufacturers to use certain basing-point practices (delivered pricing, freight absorption, price discrimination to meet competition)—providing there was no conspiracy between manufacturers to fix prices. Paul Douglas (D Ill.) and Russell Long (D La.) who led the fight against the bill, said approval would foster monopoly. Supporters said the measure would promote competition. Basing point practices are now outlawed by a Supreme Court decision.

Basic Laws Amended

The bill would have amended two basic anti-trust laws — the Federal Trade Commission Act (1914) and the Clayton Anti-trust Act (1914) as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act. And the discussion of the measure involved three economic issues:

(1) Price fixing and other "restraints" of competition among competitors;

(2) Big business against small business and "hard" competition against "soft competition"—outlined by the conference report;

(3) Industrialization of new regions, the South and West, especially, and the decentralization of heavy industry.

The final conference report on S 1008 carried a section which had drawn considerable dispute during the legislation's long and knotty progress through Congress. This was language permitting the Federal Trade Commission to swing into action if there were a "reasonable probability" of anti-trust law violation.

The final measure carried this phrase, originated by the House, but strongly contested by the Senate which had held out for FTC action only if there seemed to be "substantial and probative evidence" of violation.

Votes

(See pp. 722,716)

The Senate rejected the 1949 House-approved conference report on S 1008 by a voice vote on Jan. 20, 1950, and asked for a new conference by voice vote the same day.

The House decided to reopen a conference by a 240-144 vote on Feb. 28, after tabling a motion to block this by a 211-161 vote the same day.

The House voted by voice to accept on March 14 the new conference report submitted from the second conference. The vote came after a 175-204 ballot defeated a move to recommit the measure.

The Senate decided to postpone immediate action on the conference report by a 35-36 ballot on April 10.

The Senate adopted the conference report on June 2, 1950, by a roll-call vote of 43-27.

President Truman vetoed the bill on June 16.

Party Stands

Democratic Platform: "We advocate the strengthening of existing anti-trust laws by closing the gaps which experience has shown have been used to promote concentration of economic power.

"We pledge a positive program to promote competitive business and to foster the development of independent trade and commerce."

Republican Platform: "Small business, the bulwark of American enterprise, must be encouraged through aggressive anti-monopoly action, elimination of unnecessary controls, protection against discrimination, correction of tax abuses, and limitation of competition by governmental organizations."

BACKGROUND

Enactment of S 1008, to clarify delivered-pricing practices, was dogged by controversy throughout the 81st Congress.

The controversy really began April 26, 1948, with the Supreme Court decision in the Cement Institute Case. The Court upheld a Federal Trade Commission order against the company on two counts: (1) The cement makers had conspired to use the basing-point system and through it had "restrained and hindered competition"; and, (2) The system involved discrimination in price among various buyers with the effect of injuring and lessening competition in violation of Sec. 2 of the Clayton Act, a basic anti-trust statute.

Because this Court ruling was held by many Congressmen to complicate further the entire picture with respect to anti-trust laws and their enforcement, legislation was drafted in order, as its sponsors said, to clarify the situation.

Myers Offered Bill

Early in 1949, Sen. Francis J. Myers (D Pa.) introduced a bill calling for a two-year moratorium on prosecutions of anti-trust violations in basing point cases. In the House, Rep. Francis E. Walter (D Pa.) sponsored a similar bill.

Myer's proposal was favorably reported by the Senate Judiciary Committee. But on the Senate floor, on May 31, Sen. Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.) substituted permanent legislation, which permitted absorption by companies of freight, quotation and sale at delivered prices, and certain instances of price discrimination in the absence of conspiracy. Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.) and Russell Long (D La.) persuaded O'Mahoney to accept two amendments which they hoped would safeguard small business against such discrimination. The Senate passed the modified bill June 1 by voice vote.

The House Judiciary Committee substituted this bill for the moratorium which it had reported earlier, but struck out the Kefauver amendments. The House passed this substitute July 7, by voice vote, after adopting two amendments by John A. Carroll (D Colo.) in place of the Kefauver amendments.

The Senate sent the bill to conference July 26, unnoticed by Long. As soon as he discovered this action, Long moved to reconsider. The Senate Aug. 12 rejected that motion 28-49, and the bill went to conference. Long and his supporters preferred two alternatives to a conference: (1) Concurrence in the House bill with the Carroll amendments (which they said would give stronger protection to small business than Kefauver's); or, (2) No conference, and thus no further action on the bill.

Conferees Agree

The conferees Oct. 13 reported a bill which contained none of the Carroll amendments, only one of the Kefauver amendments, and some changes in the definition of the key phrase of Sec. 2 (a) of the Clayton Act (as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act), relating to prohibited price discrimination.

The House adopted the report Oct. 14 by roll call, 200-104, after rejecting by roll call, 138-178, a motion by Wright Patman (D Tex.) to recommit.

The measure came up in the Senate Oct. 17 and 18, where Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) spoke as chief opponent. He moved to postpone further consideration until Jan. 20, 1950, and the Senate adopted this motion by voice vote after rejecting by roll call, 28-29, a move by Robert R. O'Conor (D Md.) to table Douglas' motion. (The Vice President announced he would have voted against tabling if his ballot had been necessary.)

Two sponsors of the bill disowned their own bills after the conferees had reported it. Chairman Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.) of the House Judiciary Committee, which had reported the bill, refused to sign the conference report, and voted for its recommittal and against its passage. In the Senate, O'Mahoney who had written the substitute bill which passed the House and Senate, expressed satisfaction that the Senate had delayed further action until next year.

SENATE

Under the terms of a motion passed in 1949 (See CQ Almanac, Vol. V, Page 713), the Senate was committed to action on Jan. 20, 1950, on the conference report of S 1008. Accordingly, Sen. Herbert R. O'Conor (D Md.) promptly opened debate at that time.

O'Conor, who had been one of the conferees in 1949, was joined by Kenneth Wherry (R Neb.) in preliminary discussion of the conference report. Both Senators stressed the fact that the measure — with one exception— was approved in its present form by the Justice Department, which is charged with enforcement of anti-trust statutes.

The single exception failing to draw the agency's approval was Sec. 4 (D) in the conference report. This section defined the phrase "the effect may be" (in Sec. 2 of the Clayton Act; which prohibits price discriminations whose "effect may be" substantially to lessen competition).

The conference report's definition required "reliable, probative, and substantial evidence" of the specified effect. Justice Dept. commented this language would "create an almost impossible burden of proof by requiring positive evidence of facts not yet in existence". (A majority of FTC disapproved of the entire bill, while the Acting Chairman, Lowell Mason, took the same position as Justice Dept.)

Small Business Cited

O'Conor, in opening debate, submitted a new statement of the conferees, and explained they had never intended "to withdraw from small business any of the protection now afforded by the present anti-trust laws". Wherry exclaimed, "all I am interested in is freight absorption;. . . I want a farmer to have the right to sell a mule 50 miles away from his home and be able to meet, if he has to do so, his competitor's price. That is all I want."

A. Willis Robertson (D Va.) and Edward J. Thye (R Minn.) urged speed in ending the confusion, which, they said, prevailed among businessmen. Robertson hoped "that we are not in effect permitting this important measure to be put to sleep indefinitely". He spoke of many letters he had received from retail druggists, who feared the bill might destroy them. He thought it would not.

Francis J. Myers (D Pa.), Edward Martin (R Pa.), Homer Capehart (R Ind.) and Edwin C. Johnson (D Colo.) repeated their approval of the measure. Capehart added that if it should cause injury to small business, he would join a move to repeal it.

Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) proved the most outspoken foe of the measure. Russell B. Long (D La.), Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.) and William Langer (R N.D.) ran close seconds. To those who cited Justice Dept. approval, Douglas replied "merely because the Dept. of Justice has made an error, that does not mean that the Senate . . . should compound that error." "This is a bad bill," he said. "Whatever the conference committee does, it will have to come back with a bad bill." He said he would prefer to kill the report and hoped, if the Senate ever passed it, the President would send it back with a "ringing veto".

Long Endorses Change

Long, like Douglas, attacked Secs. 1 and 2 of the bill, in which conferees could make little change. But he thought the proposed change in Sec. 4 (D) would be a "substantial improvement". He agreed to wait and see what the conference would report.

"I am in favor of low prices at any time," he said with respect to price discrimination, "but it is not fair to permit any large concern to sell at low prices to certain customers, usually chainstore customers, and sell at high prices to small independent retailers . . . It makes no difference whether someone is acting in good faith if he is following a practice which will drive hundreds of thousands of persons out of business."

Langer, who had been the first Senator to oppose the bill in his minority report from the Judiciary Committee, said that the conference report was "worse" than the bill had been, and said he would continue his fight against it.

Kefauver Suggestion

Kefauver suggested that the conferees be instructed to report after June 30, to give the Supreme Court time to decide a pending Standard Oil Co. (Ind.) case. Senators on both sides of the legislation had earlier admitted that Section 3 of the bill would permit those price discriminations which Standard had practiced, and which a circuit court had said violated the Robinson-Patman Act.

Kefauver quoted from proceedings before the Supreme Court in which counsel for Standard stated that passage of S 1008 would decide the case for his client. "In other words," summarized the Tennessee Senator, "the large companies could then discriminate against any little fellows they desired to discriminate against . . . and make the defense that they were meeting competition, which would be a complete defense."

By voice vote, the Senate then decided to reject the compromise version of S 1008. This decision cancelled out the 1949 vote by which the House had favorably accepted it.

In order to keep the legislation alive O'Conor then moved to have the Senate request another joint conference with the House managers. This would enable Representatives and Senators to make another try for provisions that would prove acceptable to the upper chamber as well as the House.

The Senate approved the O'Conor motion by a voice vote on Jan. 20.

HOUSE

The House received the Senate's formal request for reconvention of a conference committee on Jan. 20, but took no immediate action on it. Because the House had approved the conference report—as it then stood—in 1949, it had considered the matter closed, and had dismissed its conferees.

Re-opening a conference would have meant naming House managers for the second time. There was some argument against this.

On Feb. 28, Rep. Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.), Chairman of the House Judiciary Committee which had handled the legislation, moved to accept the Senate's overtures, and send S 1008 back to conference. Most of the debate and parlimentary jockeying came in connection with this pending motion of Celler's.

Rep. Clifford Case (R N.J.), one of the original conferees on S 1008, defended Celler's move to get the measure back to conference. Case said the place to clarify the legislation was, in fact, the conference committee. His reasoning was supported by Rep. Harry J. Davenport (D Pa.), who said a vote in favor of sending the bill back to conference was a vote in favor of clarifying the legality of the basing point system. Rep. Francis E. Walter (D Pa.) urged a second try at compromise in conference, and said "American business is entitled to this clarification".

Patman Resists

However, Rep. Wright Patman (D Tex.) strongly objected to Celler's move. He told the House: "I have never known a piece of legislation to come before this body which was less understood."

Patman argued, "This is not a legitimate bill". He asked for public hearings on it, which he said would be secured if the pending motion by Celler to send the bill back to conference were defeated.

The call for public hearings and for House refusal to recommit the bill was also sounded by Rep. Joe L. Evins (D Tenn.). He said sending the bill to conference again "would be putting the cart before the horse".

After debate, the Celler motion was approved 240-144, but before new conferees could be named by the Speaker, Rep. John Carroll (D Colo.) moved that the House instruct them to stand pat on certain features in the bill originally passed by the House but which the Senate conferees had sought to alter or delete. Rep. Walter immediately moved to table the Carroll motion, and the Walter tabling motion was accepted, 211-161.

Speaker of the House Sam Rayburn (D Tex.) then named as conferees to meet with their Senate counterparts: Rep. Celler, Walter, Case, Edwin E. Willis (D La.), and Earl C. Michener (R Mich.).

CONFERENCE

A second House-Senate conference committee to reconcile disputes over the compromise legislation the first conference group had drafted in 1949 convened shortly after the House's action Feb. 28.

The conferees reached accord relatively promptly. Within 24 hours, agreement was reached on one of the thorny points previously in dispute. Sen. Herbert R. O'Conor (D Md.), one of the Senate managers, disclosed March 1 that the Senate had reversed itself and opted for the original 1949 House wording in a section of the bill relating to definitions.

At the 1949 conference, the Senate had redrafted this language but the revamp was criticized strongly by the Justice Department. Its criticism helped bring rejection in the Senate of the first conference report. This set the stage for the House vote Feb. 28 to make a second try in conference to reach a bill acceptable to both chambers.

Victory For House

Ultimate approval of the compromise worked out in conference represented a victory for the House. From the beginning, it had insisted on language in the bill that the Federal Trade Commission could halt certain pricing practices if there was "reasonable probability" of anti-trust law violation. The Senate had wanted to permit the FTC action only if there was "substantial and probative evidence" of violation.

The broader House language — which did not put the burden of proof on the government before it could undertake to halt unfair practices—prevailed. House managers had claimed that the Senate wording would have slowed the government up so much in amassing data that the victim of unfair pricing might be put out of business before action could be taken.

The conference committee reported S 1008 embodying this major compromise on March 3. The rest of the legislation was relatively close to the original 1949 version, which basically provided that manufacturers independently selling the same products at different prices at different points, or absorbing certain freight costs to get the products there in order to compete in good faith with other manufacturers, would not be guilty of unfair pricing practices.

House Final Action

The House took up the revised conference report on March 14. Again, Rep. Patman bitterly assailed the measure, and singled out its provisions affecting small business as the most objectionable features.

Claiming the measure would penalize small business, Patman renewed his pressure for postponement of final action on S 1008 until public hearings could be held.

Rep. Hale Boggs (D La.) supported Patman. Boggs asserted that the measure would lead to "perpetuation of a system that prevents us (the South) from competing with other areas of the country". Boggs said votes for the second draft of compromise legislation would be votes to "perpetuate this system which has colonized so much of this country".

Speaking for the measure, Rep. Charles A. Halleck (R Ind.), a member of the House Small Business Committee, assured lawmakers that there was "nothing in the bill detrimental to small business" and that the measure "is fair and equitable". Other proponents of the bill reiterated claims that it was drawn to clarify existing anti-trust statutes, and nothing else.

Third Recommittal Asked

In a last ditch stand against the legislation as it had emerged from a second conference committee, Rep. Patman then moved to recommit S 1008 for a third look. Again he said hearings should be held.

But the House pressed ahead, and defeated Patman's recommittal motion by a 175-204 roll-call vote March 14. The House then proceeded to adopt the conference report on a voice vote which sent it across the Capitol to the Senate.

Senate Final Action

The revised conference report went before the Senate on March 14, but was not debated in detail until the end of the month. Then, on March 31, Sen. Russell Long (D La.) made a full-length speech outlining his opposition, and filled a score of pages in the Congressional Record with documents bolstering his position.

On April 10, Sen. Pat McCarran (D Nev.), chairman of the Judiciary Committee, moved to bring up the conference report on S 1008 for action. However, Majority Leader Scott Lucas (D Ill.) made a point of order against McCarran's motion. Lucas indicated that consideration at that time of the basing point measure would seriously interfere with the pending business: Rivers and harbors and flood control legislation. Long and Douglas had promised long speeches if S 1008 were taken up at that juncture.

On a vote, McCarran's motion was defeated 35-36.

Some Senators Switched

On this ballot, a "Nay" vote was to put off a decision on the legislation, and on this tally, seven Senators who had voted against postponement in 1949 switched their stands. They voted in 1950 to favor postponement. Three Senators who had urged delay in 1949 also switched, and voted for immediate consideration in 1950.

The seven who shifted from yes to no were Brien McMahon (D Conn.), Scott W. Lucas (D Ill.), Virgil Chapman (D Ky.), Guy Cordon (R Ore.), Edward Martin (R Pa.), Arthur V. Watkins (R Utah), and Harry P. Cain (R Wash.). The three changing from no to yes were Walter F. George (D Ga.), Homer Ferguson (R Mich.) and Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.).

On May 26, the final round of debate on S 1008 was launched. Supporters of the bill began their final summations of their positions, and opponents of the measure rallied around Sen. Douglas. Douglas declared: "If Senators do not like the American system of free and fair competition, they should vote for the bill. If, on the other hand, they believe in competition and in our anti-trust laws which are necessary to preserve competition, they should vote against Senate bill 1008; for this bill would put more holes in our anti-trust laws than there are in a large piece of Swiss cheese."

He added, "By using (basing points) all the producers in an industry, no matter where their plants may be located or how much actual freight charges may vary, quote exactly the same delivered price to any prospective buyer and thus destroy price competition".

Summation By Douglas

Douglas summed up his opposition to the bill with the following points:

1. The basing point system means price discrimination against some manufacturers and unfair advantages to other manufacturers.

2. Transportation facilities are wasted because there is no encouragement to buy from the nearest supplier when ordering standardized raw materials.

3. One big "leader" company controls prices of many small companies.

4. The basing point system is fixed to favor the East and Midwest and discriminate against the South, Southwest, West and New England.

5. Area discrimination and monopoly pricing restrict business growth.

6. "The purpose of the basing-point system is, first and foremost, to eliminate competition."

7. Basing points result in identical bids on public projects, which sometimes encourages corruption in deciding the winner.

8. Reservations contained in the bill would be no protection against monopoly.

Also opposing the bill was Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) who said: "In the undermining effect it will have on our anti-trust legislation and the enforcement of that legislation, this bill will take us back at least half a century."

Final Say By Supporters

Bill supporters had their say during the final day of debate after opponents had held the floor through most of the week. O'Conor urged Senate approval saying, "I am firmly convinced that small-business enterprises, which we all desire to protect, are at a greater disadvantage under present circumstances than they will be if this legislation is enacted into law. This enactment is an effort to make unmistakably clear to that great section of the American industry which is vitally concerned with freight costs just what can be done legally in the matter of independent action to meet competition by absorbing freight charges and what cannot be done . . . without running afoul of the (anti-trust) acts."

Wherry and O'Mahoney

Kenneth S. Wherry (R Neb.) said, "The solid fact is that if the conference report is not adopted the present confusion in business will increase, and the consequent chaos could be the forerunner of a planned economy such as now exists in Great Britain."

Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.) supported the measure saying, "This bill is good for business; it will promote competition; it will be beneficial to small business; it will aid in developing the economy of the United States."

Final Vote

The Senate climaxed its months-long running fight on "basing point" legislation by finally a proving the conference report by a 43-27 roll-call vote on June 2.

This final vote split the Democrats, but most Republicans sided with the measure. Thirteen Democrats and 30 Republicans voted "yes" while 25 Democrats and 2 Republicans said "no". The bill was passed after President of the Senate Alben Barkley overruled a point of order by bill-opponent Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.) that Senate-House conferees had erred on a technicality in the final compromise bill. Kefauver did not contest Barkley's ruling.

VETO

A few hours before the legislation would have became law with or without his assent. President Truman vetoed the so-called "basing point" measure (S 1008) on June 16. The bill would have permitted companies to absorb freight charges to sell their products at uniform delivered prices throughout the country, so long as such price discrimination was done in "good faith" without conspiracy, collusion, or fraudulent practice.

It was the President's fifth veto of 1950. In returning the legislation to Congress, he said it would "obscure, rather than clarify" existing laws about pricing practices. "This bill . . . is so far from clear that each of its major provisions is capable of widely conflicting interpretations."

Truman said "there is every reason to believe that if S 1008 were to become law, there would be as much uncertainty about its meaning" in the business world "as there has been in the Congress". This was an allusion to the long often-tortuous route of the bill through Congress during the past two years.

The veto followed a White House visit June 14 by six Democratic Senators and five Democratic Representatives, urging Presidential disapproval. The group included Senators Lister Hill (Ala.), Hubert H. Humphrey (Minn.), Herbert H. Lehman (D-Lib N. Y.), John J. Sparkman (Ala.), Paul H. Douglas (Ill.), and Estes Kefauver (Tenn.), and Reps. Wright Patman (Tex.), Hale Boggs (La.), Raymond W. Karst (Mo.), Joe L. Evins (Tenn.), and Hugh B. Mitchell (Wash.).

Veto Criticized, Supported

The actual veto, however, drew criticism from Democratic Sens. Joseph C. O'Mahoney (Wyo.), virtual author of the bill, Herbert O'Conor (Md.), Pat McCarran (Nev.), and Edwin Johnson (Colo.), Republican Senator Styles Bridges (N.H.), called the veto an "outrageous action".

Supporting the President were Democratic Sens. Paul H. Douglas (Ill.), Russell Long (La.), and Lister Hill (Ala.), and Rep. Wright Patman (D Tex.), Republican Sen. George D. Aiken (Vt.) associated himself with them.

No attempt was made in Congress to override the veto. However, five Senators who had strongly backed the "basing point" bill were appointed June 22 by the Senate Commerce Committee to be a "watch-dog" group checking the Federal Trade Commission's handling of cases the vetoed bill would have affected.

The Senators were Edwin Johnson (D Colo.), Francis Myers (D Pa.), Herbert O'Conor (D Md.), Homer Capehart (R Ind.), and John Bricker (R Ohio).

LOBBY STANDS

Most organizations having opinions to register on S 1008 made their views known in 1949, when the legislation was being drafted or making its course through Congress. (For a full listing of national groups testifying at hearings on S 1008 or otherwise going on record during 1949, see CQ Almanac, vol. V, pp. 713-715.)

In 1950, the "basing point" legislation continued to draw support and opposition from several organizations.

National Association of Manufacturers' publication, NAM News, in its May 6th issue, linked the legislative fates of the heavily controversial bills on basing points and civil rights to fair employment in a warning to industrialist backers of S 1008 — the basing point bill — to restate their views to their Congressmen.

NAM News said the "danger is increasing daily that legislation (S 1008) authorizing the individual shipper to absorb freight charges in meeting competition may be caught in the Congressional adjournment log jam and fail to be enacted."

Said the News: "Senator Herbert R. O'Conor (D Md.), floor leader of the fight for the absorption measure, may seek to get a majority vote to call up the report as soon as the filibuster on FEPC begins. Such a motion probably would win the support of many Southern Senators who are not sympathetic to the absorption measure. But the danger lies in the fact that once S 1008 is brought up it could be used as a target for a filibuster actually directed at preventing FEPC from being called up again".

Anti-Monopoly Committee

The bill had strong opposition from various business groups. The legislation was opposed by the Anti-Monopoly Committee — composed of representatives of 17 farm, small business, cooperative and labor groups — which was organized to help bring about the defeat of S 1008, according to National Farmers Union, one of the members of the Anti-Monopoly Committee.

According to one weekly Washington newsletter of the National Farmers Union, the Anti-Monopoly Committee "is primarily responsible for defeating the attempts of big business to railroad S 1008 through the Congress and thus sound the death knell for all small business and purchasing cooperatives".

Membership

The Committee was organized and operated with the cooperation of Rep. Wright Patman (D Tex.), chairman of the House Small Business Committee. CQ Log was told by George H. Frates, of the National Association of Retail Druggists, that the Anti-Monopoly Committee grew out of a similarly constituted but slightly smaller committee set up to fight against S 1008 — a committee of which he was steering committee chairman. Frates also said that he was not chairman of the Anti-Monopoly Committee, whose purposes included matters besides the basing point bill.

According to NFU, the organizations in the Anti-Monopoly Committee were:

American Farm Bureau Fedn.
American Fedn. of Labor
American Retail Fedn.
Congress of Industrial Organizations
Cooperative League of the U. S.
Credit Union Natl. Assn., Inc.
Intl. Assn. of Machinists
Natl. Assn. of Independent Tire Dealers
Natl. Assn. of Retail Druggists
Natl. Candy Wholesalers Assn.
Natl. Congress of Petroleum Retailers
Natl. Council of Farmer Cooperatives
Natl. Farmers Union
Natl. Fedn. of Independent Business, Inc.
Natl. Food Brokers Assn.
Natl. Grange
Natl. Rural Electric Cooperative Assn.
Railway Labor Executives' Assn.
U. S. Wholesale Grocers Assn.

Also against the legislation was the American Trucking Association. Pressing for it, according to Sen. Long, was the Council on Clarification of Pricing Practices. Long said Senators were being pressured by "interests" who employed a William Simon, former counsel of a Senate group, but registered in 1950 as a lobbyist for the CCPP

After the final conference version of S 1008 had been passed by Congress and sent to the President's desk, three organizations shifted their pressure to the White House. They asked President Truman to veto the measure. They were the National Association of Independent Businesses, the National Association of Retail Druggists, and the United States Wholesale Grocers Association.

Lobby Group Is Lobbying Target

A feature of 1950 pressures on S 1008 came in March, when a Congressman "lobbied" back at an organization that seldom fails to get its view before lawmakers on national legislation.

On March 4, Rep. Wright Patman (D Tex.), bitter foe of the "basing point" legislation as it then stood, wired the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, which supported S 1008, demanding that the Chamber President, Herman W. Steinkraus, "notify all your local member Chambers of Commerce of the stand that you are taking" so that the local chambers could arrange to "protect their own interests".

War-Risk Sea Insurance

SUMMARY

This law, which added a new title called "War Risk Insurance" to the Merchant Marine Act of 1936, permits the U. S. government in time of war danger to issue war-risk maritime insurance, which regular commercial companies normally will not write in such circumstances.

The law is stand-by legislation, to be put into effect only with the explicit approval of the President. Under the terms of the measure, the Secretary of Commerce may issue war-risk and certain marine liability insurance on vessels, cargoes, passengers and crews. These may also be reinsured. However, no insurance can be written unless it can not be obtained on reasonable terms and conditions from commercial insurance companies authorized to do business in the United States.

Recommended by the erstwhile Maritime Commission, later transferred to the Commerce Department (See Page 371), S 2484 was introduced in the Senate on Aug. 26, 1949, by Chairman Edwin C. Johnson (D Colo.) of the Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee. A similar measure (HR 6061) was introduced in the House, whose Merchant Marine Committee held hearings on it in 1949.

It was not until 1950, however, that both chambers of Congress took formal action on either measure. The Senate passed S 2484 by unanimous consent on Aug. 8. The House passed HR 6061 by unanimous consent on Aug. 21, after discarding its bill's number and accepting the Senate's tag of S 2484. At this point, the two bills were considerably different, but the Senate decided by voice vote on Aug. 28 to accept the House's version of S 2484 instead of its own. This cleared the bill to the White House, where the President signed it into law on Sept. 7.

The major features of S 2484 provide that:

1. The Secretary of Commerce, with the explicit approval of the President, may provide war-risk insurance and certain marine and liability insurance and re-insurance for protections of passengers, crews, vessels and cargoes in the event such insurance can not be obtained on reasonable terms and conditions from commercial insurance companies authorized to do business in the United States.

2. War-risk insurance, and marine and liability insurance is specifically requested, may be written to apply to:

a. American vessels, including those under construction; b. American-owned foreign-flag vessels; c. vessels engaged in U.S. national defense service or American commerce; and d. cargoes shipped—or about to be shipped—in such vessels, cargoes owned by citizens or residents, cargoes imported to or exported from the U.S. and sold or purchased by U.S. residents or citizens, and cargoes moving between U.S. ports; and

e. Freight and passage money of vessels, or vessel disbursements; f. personal effects of crews and passengers, and loss of life by these persons, or their sufferance of injury or detention after capture by an enemy of the U.S. (Secretary of Commerce entitled to write insurance against other than these risks if he believes it advisable); and

g. The vessel or its owner or charterer for statutory or contractual obligations customarily covered by insurance.

3. The Secretary of Commerce may issue war-risk insurance for any person working for, or providing facilities for, any American or foreign-flag vessel if the United States is at war. This covers legal liabilities in the performance of service, or the provision of facilities, but does not cover liability for employees.

4. The government may supply insurance if it is required in the prosecution of a war, or in connection with national defense, but again only in the event such insurance can not be obtained commercially.

5. The Secretary of Commerce may re-insure any country authorized to do business in the U.S. But re-insurance may be provided by the Secretary only at reasonable rates established by him, or at rates charged by a commercial carrier — whichever is higher.

6. The Department of Commerce may employ marine insurance companies to act as underwriting and settling agents, but fees to them may not include payments on account of solicitation or stimulation of the insurance business. Brokers may not receive fees for arranging insurance for any risk directly insured against by the Secretary, except to the extent the Secretary employs brokers as agents.

7. Government agencies or departments, if the President approves, may obtain federal war-risk insurance without premium, but they must reimburse the Department of Commerce for losses suffered under the insurance issued.

8. The U.S. may be sued in the admiralty courts if disagreements arise concerning losses.

9. Authority for the Secretary of Commerce to issue insurance will lapse five years after enactment of the law, i.e: by Sept. 7, 1955.

BACKGROUND

With respect to maritime insurance, commercial insurance companies normally issue policies with automatic termination clauses which invalidate the coverage of vessels in the event of war between any of four nations: Britain, France, the United States or the Soviet Union. Protection for vessels and cargoes at sea in the event of hostilities is usually granted only until the ships arrive at the next port, and for 24 hours thereafter.

Because of this arrangement, the government provided war - risk maritime insurance in both World Wars, but the insurance issued during the second conflict was discontinued in 1947. Two years later, however, the Maritime Commission recommended new legislation which would protect American shippers, shipowners, crew members and passengers against war-risks by permitting the government to issue war - risk marine insurance if commercial companies would not do so.

Accordingly, the late Schuyler Otis Bland (D Va.), then Chairman of the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, introduced HR 6061 embodying the Maritime agency's suggestions on Aug. 19, 1949. The companion bill, S 2484, was introduced in the Senate on Aug. 25, 1949, by Chairman Edwin C. Johnson (D Colo.) of the Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee.

Neither group reported its bill in 1949, and before the measures were reported in 1950, several changes had to be made in the initial drafts. This was because they originally provided for the Maritime Commission to issue war - risk insurance. On May 23, however, the President's Reorganization Plan No. 21 (See page 371) was approved and the Maritime Commission was transferred into the Department of Commerce. Therefore the bills had to be revised, so that the Secretary of Commerce was named throughout to handle the insurance program, instead of the Maritime Commissioners.

HOUSE

Committee

The House Merchant Marine Committee resumed hearings on HR 6061 — the House version of S 2484, the Senate bill that ultimately became law — in July, 1950. A subcommittee, headed by Rep. Edward J. Hart (D N.J.), heard favorable testimony from the National Federation of American Shipping, the American Institute of Marine Underwriters, the State of Pennsylvania, the Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce, the Association of American Ship Owners, the Navy Department and the Bureau of the Budget.

The CIO Maritime Committee, in a statement for the record of the hearings, said it considered the bill poor legislation. A main CIO objection was that the bill would provide insurance for other than American-flag vessels. The CIO group wanted to restrict war-risk insurance to American - flag vessels and crews.

The House committee worked several changes in the bill before reporting it. One alteration, suggested by the Treasury Department, located the fund to pay for the insurance in the Treasury Department, instead of in the Maritime Commission.

Private Gain Barred

This change was made, the group said, to prevent the recurrence of irregularities during World War II, when the government hired insurance companies to handle certain marine insurance, and paid premiums to these companies — who invested part of this money and earned $18 million on it, which they were permitted to keep.

Henceforth, under the Treasury-suggested amendment to the bill, premiums would be deposited with the Treasury, and could not be re-invested by private parties for private gain.

A second major amendment, supported by the U.S. Comptroller General, was also adopted by the House Committee. This proposal was to strike from the original version of the bill the clause giving the Secretary of Commerce the final authority to pay losses, settle claims and meet judgments arising from the insurance program against the government. Under this "finality clause", settlements could not be reopened or modified except on a showing of fraud, malfeasance or misrepresentation.

The Comptroller General felt such a clause was too broad, and consequently dangerous because such a great amount of the government's money could be involved.

Multiple Insurance

At the suggestion of the American Association of Ship Owners two additional amendments were added. One permitted persons with an interest in a vessel to insure, if the Commerce Secretary approved, with other underwriters for more than the amount insured for with the Secretary. The Secretary was not to be entitled to the benefit of such insurance.

The second Ship Owners proposal provided that the Secretary's authority to settle claims be limited to the vessel's "fair and reasonable" value as determined by the Federal Maritime Board.

Other amendments accepted by the House Committee before it reported the bill were those: 1. providing that insurance would not be issued on any consideration other than the war-risk involved; 2. providing that the law would expire five years after its enactment; 3. providing that no claim would be paid "unless and until" it had been approved by the Secretary of Commerce; and 4. providing that the Secretary make quarterly reports to Congress on contracts entered into or proposed, and the general progress of the war-risk maritime insurance program.

REPORT

HR 6061 was reported to the House on Aug. 10. The measure was accompanied by Merchant Marine Committee suggestions that any companies or syndicates hired to handle the insurance should be clearly told they were not authorized under terms of the bill to insure at the expense of the government.

Final Action

The measure came up in the House on Aug. 21 on the lower chamber's consent calendar. Under the unanimous consent procedure used in connection with this calendar, HR 6061 was passed without debate when no objection to it was heard.

The following day, S 2484 — which had previously passed the Senate— came up in the House, also on the consent calendar. Rep. Hart moved to substitute the language of HR 6061 for the language of this Senate bill, and his motion was approved by the House without objection or debate.

This substitution meant that the House agreed to relinquish the "HR" number under which its version of the insurance legislation had passed, and would henceforth press for Senate adoption of the House language under the number of the upper chamber's bill, S 2484.

SENATE

Committee

Unlike the House Merchant Marine Committee which held public hearings, the Senate's Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce considered S 2484 in closed, executive session. The bill was studied by a subcommittee headed by Sen. Warren G. Magnuson (D Wash.), which made several changes in the original draft.

As the House group had done, the Senate body incorporated into the bill the proposals of the Treasury Department and the Comptroller General which located the insurance premium fund in the Treasury Department and which struck out the "finality clause" granting wide powers to the Secretary of Commerce.

A third amendment, sponsored by the Civil Service Commission, was adopted, providing that employes to administer the insurance program should be hired according to the practices set up by the Civil Service Act.

REPORT

S 2482 was reported to the Senate on June 14, and the Magnuson group endorsing it said the House hearings had convinced the Senators that they should underscore the House committee's recommendations. These recommendations were that the legislation should not be construed to provide authority for marine insurance companies or syndicates to insure at the expense of the Government.

Final Action

S 2484 came up in the Senate on the chamber's consent calendar on July 26. Because Sens. George Aiken (R Vt.), Kenneth Wherry (R Neb.), and Herbert R. O'Conor (D Md.) felt that the bill was complex and thus warranted further explanation before action, objection was raised against immediate consideration of the measure.

Accordingly, S 2484 was "passed over" — put at the bottom of the consent calendar from which it would have to work up each time the calendar was called.

The second time that S 2484 came before the Senate was when the consent calendar was called on Aug. 8. Sen. Andrew F. Schoeppel (R Kan.), reserving the right to object and thus kill the bill's chances, asked Magnuson if the bill carried a five - year limit on its life.

Schoeppel withdrew his reservation after Lucas proposed — and the Senate adopted — an amendment stating that the authority of Secretary of Commerce "to provide insurance and re-insurance under this (bill) shall expire 5 years from the date of enactment. . .".

The Senate then approved S 2484 without further debate or objection. The action cleared the measure to the House, which struck out the Senate's language and substituted its own. This meant that S 2484 had to be returned to the Senate for approval or rejection of the bill as it then stood.

The Senate agreed to the House substitution, passing S 2484 by voice vote on Aug. 24.

LAW ENACTED

President Truman signed S 2484 into law on Sept. 7. In a statement, he said, "I am gratified at the promptness with which this legislation has been enacted. It provides an important additional step to insure the readiness of the shipping industry to deal with any emergency conditions which may in the future arise."

Mr. Truman said "an essential feature of any acceptable measure for such insurance is that the value of the vessel upon which indemnity is to be fixed must not be subject to the artificial enhancement which frequently characterizes the market value of ships during a wartime period when demand for shipping is abnormal."

He added that "it does not appear to me from a reading of the legislative history" of S 2484 that the Congress "intended to throw aside the no-enhancement concept. . . ." Mr. Truman said he referred to the provision "that the amount of an allowable claim 'shall not exceed the vessel's fair and reasonable value as determined by the Federal Maritime Board'."

The President concluded: "I therefore wish to make it clear that my approval of this measure is based upon the conviction that the legislative history is indicative of a desire by the Congress that any war-risk insurance claims be allowed only upon a standard of fair and reasonable value which will not be subject to the artificial inflation of a wartime shipping market."

LOBBY STANDS

Organizations generally favoring the enactment of S 2484 were:

National Foreign Trade Council, Inc.
Association of American Ship Owners.
Pacific American Tankship Association.

National Federation of American Shipping, Inc.

American Institute of Marine Underwriters.

American President Lines, Inc.
Coastwise Line.

Pacific Far East Line, Inc.
Pacific Transport Lines, Inc.
Matson Navigation Co.

Opposing major portions of the bill was the CIO's Maritime Committee.

Insured Bank Deposits

S 2822 — P. L. 797

SUMMARY

The House passed Sept. 15 and sent to President Truman the compromise version of a bill (S 2822) authorizing the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation to insure individual bank deposits up to $10,000 instead of the then-existing limit of $5,000. The Senate had passed the compromise Sept. 1.

Besides upping the insurance limit, the legislation also reduced premiums which the banks pay the FDIC for such insurance. The agency also was compelled to pay to the Treasury a sum of $80 million, representing two per cent simple interest on the government's original capital advance to the corporation.

President Truman signed the bill on Sept. 21.

BACKGROUND

The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation was born early in the depression when there were many bank failures. The FDIC was created to provide an insurance plan to protect investors and depositors in the event their banks did fail in the future.

By 1950, some 13,000 of the 14,000 banks in the country were insured under the FDIC plan, and some 96 per cent of all depositors had their accounts protected. Moreover, said the House Banking and Currency Committee, "there has been no failure of an insured bank since 1944."

SENATE

Committee

On Jan. 10, 1950, Chairman Burnet R. Maybank (D S.C.) of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee introduced S 2822, a 57-page measure amending the original Federal Deposit Insurance Act. He scheduled hearings forthwith.

Treasury Secretary John Snyder went before the Committee Jan. 23 to give Administration support to expansion of federal deposit insurance to cover the first $10,000 of individual bank accounts. At the same time, opposition to this phase of S 2822 was lodged by Arthur H. Vandenberg (R Mich.), a sponsor of the legislation which created the FDIC in 1934.

Snyder also praised the proposed reduction in cost of the insurance program to the banks. Vandenberg, in a leter to Maybank, went along with the Secretary on this provision of the bill but said he opposed increasing liabilities of FDIC by increasing its coverage responsibilities, while at the same time reducing the income of the agency.

The Senate Committee received an endorsement of S 2822 Jan. 30 from Thomas B. McCabe, chairman of the Federal Reserve Board. Lee M. Wiggins, former Undersecretary of the Treasury, also offered his endorsement. Both said the cost of the insurance would be reduced even further than provided in the bill.

The Committee informally approved S 2822 on Feb. 3. Chairman Maybank said the bill was recommended unanimously. He said the principal issue in the committee was whether the FDIC should have more authority to examine insured banks. The bill left the FDIC's present powers intact, and Maybank said the issue probably would have to be fought out on the Senate floor.

The Committee formally reported S 2822 on Feb. 10. As the bill emerged, it reduced the cost of federal deposit insurance by an estimated 55 per cent, and raised the coverage from $5,000 to $10,000 per individual account. The measure also provided for rebates to member banks on assessments they pay to finance the insurance system.

Floor Action

The Senate passed S 2822 on March 13. There was no debate. Passage was by voice vote. No amendments were offered from the floor.

HOUSE

Committee

The Senate - approved bill was referred to the House Banking and Currency Committee on March 14. The group, under Brent Spence (D Ky.), reported the measure on July 14 after making 23 changes in the Senate language. The major change was a Committee stipulation that the FDIC be empowered to examine any insured bank. The existing law and the Senate bill itself reserved such examination power to the Comptroller of the Currency and the Federal Reserve System in most cases.

Floor Action

The House took up the bill on July 19, but did not vote on it until the next day, although there were only two hours of debate on it. When the lower chamber did make its final decision, it was one of approval.

Passage was by voice vote, after members defeated a motion by Rep. Abraham J. Multer (D N.Y.) to recommit the bill by a division vote of 167 to 40. Before the final action, an amendment to authorize the FDIC to spend $15 million for a building of its own, was rejected by a roll-call vote of 90 to 227. The amendment was one offered by the Banking and Currency Committee. (The FDIC was housed in rented quarters.) In addition to doubling the insurance coverage, the measure provided a formula for reducing in years of normal operation the amount paid into the FDIC by the insured banks.

CONFERENCE

Because of the numerous changes the House had made in the original text of the Senate's bill, the entire measure was returned to the upper chamber for its concurrence. The Senate refused to give this, however, and so the legislation was sent to a conference committee on July 24, 1950.

Main point of difference that was ironed out by the House and Senate conferees was the question of bank examinations. The House wanted to authorize the FDIC to examine any insured bank, but the Senate preferred to continue the existing law unchanged. This provided a tri-pronged examination system, with national banks subject to examination by the Comptroller of the Currency, state banks that are members of the federal reserve system examined subject to provisions of the Federal Reserve Act, and insured non - member state banks examined by the FDIC.

The conferees agreed to permit the FDIC to examine any insured bank if, after the Federal Reserve or Comptroller examiners made their reports, a further examination was deemed necessary to protect depositors.

After reaching this agreement, the conferees reported their compromise version of S 2822. The Senate adopted the report on Sept. 1, and the House approved it Sept. 15. The President signed it into law on Sept. 21, 1950.

Revenue Act Of 1950

SUMMARY

President Truman signed into law on Sept. 23, 1950, an "interim" tax bill (HR 8920) boosting federal levies about $5.5 billion a year. Designated Public Law 814, it carried to virtually every segment of the public the first installment of a revenue - raising program designed to help finance the Korean war, pay for new armaments and curb inflation.

Even before final enactment of HR 8920, preparations were under way for a second tax - boosting measure for further gearing the nation's economy to needs of defense. On Sept. 23, even as HR 8920 was being signed at the White House, Chairman Robert L. Doughton (D N.C.), of the tax-writing House Ways and Means Committee, announced hearings would begin Nov. 15 on proposed excess profits tax legislation. Doughton said the Committee's aim was to have a bill ready for Congress Nov. 27 when a "lame duck" session was scheduled. (For story of "recess resolution" see page 593).

The history of HR 8920 was a downdale, up-hill one. The measure started out to slash excise taxes about $1 billion and to balance this loss of revenue with upward revision of corporation income rates and a batch of other levies. But the mid-June outbreak of war in Korea forced complete alteration of the bill. Although the House endorsed the original form of HR 8920 by the overwhelming vote of 375 to 14 four days after the June 25 invasion of Korea, the measure did not stay in that form for more than a few weeks.

Excise Repeal Shelved

On July 12, the Senate Finance Committee, at the request of the Administration, shelved the excise repeal provisions of the bill, and wrote in their stead a hike in individual income levies and a still greater boost in corporation levies than the increase the House had already approved. The reworked version of the bill provided about $5.3 billion in new revenues. The Senate approved the revamped measure by a voice vote on Sept. 1.

Excess Profits Row

The Korean war and the sudden rise in commodity prices that followed it also sparked a drive by some Congressmen and Senators for inclusion of an excess profits levy in HR 8920. This group had to fight it out, however, with others who wanted the excess profits levy, but wanted it later.

The former group finally compromised by agreeing to delay action on the issue until November, if Congress were in session, or if not, until the 82nd Congress convened in January, 1951. (For story of action on excess profits by the so - called "lame duck" session, see page 669).

Top Heavy Vote

The conference report containing this compromise settlement of the dispute was sent to the White House Sept. 22 by top - heavy votes in both the House and Senate. The House approved it by the vote of 328 to 7. The Senate followed suit a few hours later by voice vote.

While the excess profits instructions in HR 8920 were not technically binding—and amounted in effect to no more than an expression of Congressional intent — Rep. Herman P. Eberharter (D Pa.), an advocate of an immediate excess profits tax, declared members of the House and Senate, in voting for the compromise provision, were binding themselves "completely" to enactment of a profits levy later in the year when Congress returned.

Doughton's action in setting the Nov. 27 deadline for production of an excess profits bill in the House was considered to bear out Eberharter's contention that Congress "had" to act on such a measure in 1950.

The President signed the tax-boosting HR 8920 as promptly as possible so that employers would lose no time in starting to withhold taxes from individual income at the new, higher rates beginning Oct. 1, as required by the bill. He signed the measure without ceremony at Blair House, temporary Presidential residence.

Increases Specified

Collection of higher corporation income taxes called for by the new law presented no immediate problem since the new rates were payable in the year after that for which they were due.

Moneywise, terms of the bill were written to raise an estimated $3 billion a year through taxes on the income of 52 million individuals, and pick up another $1.5 billion a year from increased corporation taxes. They were meant, also, to produce about $1 billion more by revising other taxes and plugging what were termed "tax loopholes."

The new law increased the previous income tax rates by 11 to 20 per cent. It increased the tax on corporation incomes from 38 per cent to 42 per cent for 1950, and up to 45 per cent for 1951. The Administration had asked, however, that corporate income for 1950 be taxed at a 45 per cent rate.

Provisions

The following tables summarize HR 8920's provisions with respect to individual and corporation income:

4. Estimated effect of HR 8920 on tax liabilities over a full year of operation after fiscal 1951, and on collections in fiscal 1951 itself (in millions of dollars):

	Full Year (after fiscal '51)	Fiscal 1951
Income taxes:
Corporations
Rates Changes	$1,500	320
Accelerated payments	800*	800
Individual income-tax Payments	2,744	1,624
Charitable trusts, family foundations, educational institutions, etc.	60	...
Life-insurance companies	122	...
Miscellaneous loopholes	214	141
Excise Taxes	55	30
	5,438	2,915
Deduct revenue loss	—4	..
Total	5,432	2,915

*This will be the average annual increase in collections through 1956, at which time accelerated payments plan will be in full effect and no additional collections will be realized.

This amount will be collected from life insurance companies for years 1949 and 1950 only.

This is the biggest single measurable tax loss in HR 8920. Where the old law had provided that transfers made within two years of death were subject to the higher estate taxes rather than lower gift taxes, HR 8920 authorized a gift allowance in the case of transfers made three years before death.

Here is a summary of the bill by title:

TITLE I—Increase in Income-Tax Rates.

Individual Income Taxes: For 1951 and subsequent years, individual income tax rates were revised upward again to the old 1945 level, before the percentage reductions from the "tentative" tax granted by Congress in the 1945 and 1948 Revenue Acts. A ceiling of 85 per cent was placed on the amount of taxable earnings the government could take, replacing the previous limit of 7 per cent.

For full account of the 1945 and 1948 reductions, see CQ Almanac, Vol. I, P. 740ff. and Vol. IV, P. 344ff.)

The 1945 Revenue Act allowed individuals to reduce their "tentative" tax by 5 per cent in all brackets. The 1948 Act increased this cut in the "tentative" tax to 17 per cent on the first $400 of "tentative" tax, 12 per cent of the next $99,600 and 9.75 per cent on anything over $100,000. However, HR 8920 cut these percentages by one-fourth for the year 1950, and repealed them for 1951 and thereafter.

The increases in personal exemptions and dependency credits made in the 1945 and 1948 Revenue Acts, and the system of splitting the income of married couples adopted in the 1948 Act, were not touched by HR 8920. The new rates were made effective Oct. 1, 1950.

Special provision was made for the few individual taxpayers operating on a fiscal year basis rather than on a calendar year basis. Those with fiscal years ending before October 1 were required to pay their taxes on the basis of previous rates. Those with fiscal years beginning on or after October 1 had to take the full increase provided for in HR 8920. In cases where the fiscal year began before October 1 and ended after October 1, the year was divided into two parts for tax purposes. To the extent the taxable year preceded October 1, the individual was taxed at the old rates; to the extent the year came after September 30, the individual was taxed at the new, higher rates.

Corporate Income Taxes. Two new sets of corporate tax rates were set up, one for 1950, and one for 1951, thus limiting the retroactive effect of the tax boost. The new 1950 schedule laid a flat 23 per cent tax on any earnings under $25,000, and 42 per cent on any earnings over $25,000. For 1951 and subsequent years, the tax on earnings under $25,000 was set at 25 per cent, and the tax on earnings over that figure was raised to a maximum of 45 per cent. The old "notch" provision — or the 53 per cent rate applied previously to earnings between $25,000 and $50,000 — was eliminated.

Corporation Tax Schedule. An accelerated payments plan, speeding up the schedule of corporate income tax payments, gave firms five years to change over from the old 12-months payments plan to a faster, six-months plan. The plan was designed to increase collections in the changeover period.

Intercorporate Dividends. The 85 per cent credit allowance granted subsidiaries in the case of dividends declared in kind to a parent company was made computable on the basis of the cost of the property to the subsidiary and not on its fair market value, as permitted by the old law.

TITLE II Miscellaneous Income-Tax Amendments.

Amortization of Defense Facilities. A special, accelerated five-year amortization plan, similar to that used in World War II, was made available to owners of plants, facilities or portions thereof built after December, 1949, if the facilities were certified by the government as necessary for national defense. Owners were authorized to write off the cost of the property for tax purposes at the rate of 20 per cent a year.

Capital Gains. The favorable long-term capital gains tax treatment was denied movie producers, construction groups or others who organize special "collapsible" companies for a single transaction, then liquidate the firm before its product is sold and distribute the assets to stockholders. Stockholders of such companies were required to pay regular corporate or individual income taxes.

Non-resident Aliens. Capital gains of non-resident aliens not engaged in trade or business in the U. S. but temporarily present here, were taxed for the first time at 30 per cent of gross income.

Artists and Authors

Amateur artists, authors and similar persons who now pay long-term capital gains rates when they sell their work were required to pay on the basis of ordinary income rates, just as professionals.

Short Sales

Traders in securities and commodities were barred from using short sales to convert a short-term gain into a long-term gain, or even to create a short-term loss to charge against a long-term gain. All gain growing out of short sale transactions established as short-term gain.

Tax-exempt Bonds

Dealers in tax-exempt municipal and state bonds were required to amortize any premium they paid on high-interest, five-year or shorter bonds which they held for more than 30 days instead of, as previously, deducting the premium as a loss.

Loss Carry-Over

The old loss carry-over law, allowing operating losses to be carried back two years or forward two years, thus permitting taxes to be cut in more profitable times, was changed to permit losses to be carried forward five years and back only one year.

Convertible Bonds

Tax reductions for that part of a bond premium attributable to its convertibility rather than to its interest rate were denied.

Stock Options

Tax treatment for employees who exercise an option on company stock and then sell the stock was eased. An employee, who got stock for at least 85 per cent of the fair market value and who actually held the option and stock for a combined total of at least two years and the stock for at least six months, was permitted to pay regular income taxes on the profit between 85 per cent and 95 per cent of the stock's fair market value plus capital gains on anything over that. The old law levied a regular income tax rate on the difference between the option price and the stock's fair market value.

Percentage Depletion

Producers of minerals and metals already entitled to depletion allowances for tax purposes were authorized to take into account, also for tax purposes, the cost of transporting the mineral or metal from the point where it was extracted from the ground to the place where it was processed.

Trusts

The existing installment payment privileges allowed previously to trusts and certain non-resident aliens were thrown out.

Stock Redemptions

The indirect redemption of its stock by a parent corporation through purchases by its subsidiaries was taxed as dividends to the extent the stock redemption represented a distribution of earnings on profits.

Regulated Investment Income

Companies having regulated investment status were granted 75 days after the end of their tax years within which to distribute the previous year's earnings to members if they wished to receive the tax credit allowed previously for earnings distributed during the tax year itself.

Liquidation

A previous law affecting business liquidations which provided for taxing at ordinary income rates only that part of a distribution which represented accumulated earnings, and which taxed the remainder at capital gains rates, was restored for a year.

Personal Holding Companies

Income derived by companies in this category from rents of corporate property to a person holding 25 per cent or more of the company's stock and used by him as a bona fide commercial, industrial or mining enterprise, was excluded from overall income.

Armed Services

Pay of enlisted men and warrant officers in combat zones was made tax free, and commissioned officers were given an exemption of $200 a month.

Discharge of Indebtedness

A provision of a previous law permitting railroads and other corporations to exclude from income amounts attributable to the discharge of certain indebtedness was extended until Dec. 31, 1951.

Circulating Expenditures

Language was pointedly inserted in the law making it clear that publishers of newspapers, magazines or other periodicals may deduct as ordinary expenses any expenditures to maintain, establish or increase circulation, except expenditures for the purchase of land or depreciable property or for the acquisition of any part of the business of other publications.

Residents of Puerto Rico

United States citizens who are bona fide residents of Puerto Rico were required to pay federal income tax on income derived from sources outside Puerto Rico, including income from the United States itself.

U. S. Employees In Outlying Possessions

Special exemptions for income earned abroad, previously accorded government employees working in American possessions, were eliminated.

TITLE III

Treatment of Income of, and Gifts and Bequests to, Trusts and Tax-exempt Organizations

Tax-exempt Organizations

Educational, charitable, farm and other presently tax-exempt organizations, as well as foundations and trusts, were made subject to income taxes or denied charitable deductions:

1. On income over $1,000 derived from operation of a business enterprise which is not "substantially related" to the purpose for which the organization originally received its exemption; and

2. On income from rentals of property purchased or constructed with borrowed funds and leased for more than five years to some commercial or industrial enterprise (so-called "lease backs").

Prohibited Accumulations by Trusts

Charitable deductions were cut for trusts or foundations which are found in the following circumstances:

1. Accumulating income unreasonably in the light of the purpose for which the organizations were set up;

2. Using income to a substantial degree for purposes other than the purpose bringing the organization exempted status in the first place; and

3. Investing the income in a risky manner.

In such cases, charitable deductions previously permitted the trust on an unlimited basis were lowered to apply only to those amounts actually paid out for purposes for which the trust was originally established.

"Feeder" Organizations

Organizations operated primarily to carry on a trade or business for profit were denied tax exemption if they claimed it on the ground that all their profits were payable to one or more tax - exempt organizations.

Prohibited Trust Transactions

Tax - exempt organizations and trusts claiming charitable deductions were denied exemptions if they do the following:

1. Lend any part of their income or principal without adequate security or at an unreasonably low rate of interest to donors, members of their families or a corporation they control;

2. Pay any compensation to such persons other than a reasonable allowance for personal services actually rendered;

3. Make any substantial purchase of securities or other property from such persons for more than adequate consideration.

4. Make any part of their service available to such persons on a preferential basis;

5. Sell any substantial part of their securities without fair return; or

6. Engage in any other transaction which diverts a substantial part of their income or principal to such purposes.

Publicizing Accumulated Investment Income

Annual publication for inspection of the following details was required of foundations:

1. Gross income for the year;

2. Expenses attributable to such income;

3. Disbursements for charitable and educational purposes;

4. Accumulation of income within the year;

5. Prior accumulations of income;

6. Disbursements out of principal; and

7. Other financial details such as balance sheet.

TITLE IV

Life Insurance Companies

A new formula for taxing life insurance companies' investment income was established, authorizing a retroactive tax on this income for the years 1949 and 1950. Such income had not been taxed since 1946.

TITLE V

Estate Taxes

Wtih respect to persons dying after enactment of HR 8920, any property transfer made three years or more before death would be considered a legitimate gift and entitled to lower gift tax rates instead of the higher estate tax rates. The old law had required a gift to be made two years or more before death in order to qualify for the gift tax rate.

An old provision which had allowed estates to deduct for tax purposes sums paid for support of dependents while the estate was being settled was repealed.

TITLE VI

Excise Taxes

Two new excise levies were imposed — a 10 per cent manufacturers levy on television sets and another 10 per cent manufacturers tax on freezing units.

The occupational tax on slot machines and other coin - operated gaming devices was increased from $100 a year to $150.

TITLE VII

Excess Profits

The House Ways and Means Committee and the Senate Finance Committee were directed to report an excess profits tax bill "as early as practicable" during the 81st Congress after Nov. 15, 1950, if the Congress were in session after that date. If not, the Committees were to report during the 82nd Congress. The Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation was directed to make a "full and complete study" of the excess profits issue and report its findings to the two committees "as soon as practicable."

Votes

The House passed HR 8920 June 29 by the top - heavy vote of 375 to 14, after defeating, 239 to 147, a Republican - led drive to divide the bill in two parts and vote separately on its provisions for excise cuts and corporation income tax hikes.

The Senate passed a completely revised HR 8920, providing for higher taxes instead of excise cuts, on Sept. 1 by a voice vote, after agreeing earlier, 42 to 36, to defer action until 1951 on the controversial excess profits tax issue.

The House passed the conference report on HR 8920 Sept. 22 by another top - heavy vote of 328 to 7, after agreement had been reached on a compromise excess profits tax provision directing Congress to work on such a levy in the "lame duck" session.

The Senate followed suit a few hours later the same day, approving the report by a unanimous voice vote.

Party Stands

The Democratic Platform of 1948 read: "We pledge the continued maintenance of those sound fiscal policies which, under Democratic leadership, have brought about a balanced budget and reduction of the public debt by $28 billion since the close of the war . . .

"We favor the reduction of taxes, whenever it is possible to do so without unbalancing the nation's economy, by giving a full measure of relief to those millions of low-income families on whom the wartime burden of taxation fell most heavily. The form of tax reduction adopted by the Republican 80th Congress gave relief to those who need it least and ignored those who need it most . . .

"We shall endeavor to remove tax inequities and to continue to reduce the public debt."

The 1948 Republican Platform said simply: "We pledge . . . fiscal policies to provide increased incentives for production and thrift . . . a sound currency . . . reduction of the public debt."

BACKGROUND

In his 1949 message to the 81st Congress on the State of the Union, President Truman asked for $4 billion in additional tax revenues, to be raised from increased corporation taxes and higher gift and inheritance rates. He indicated this money might get the government out of the red into which it had been plunged, he asserted, when the Republican 80th Congress passed the 1948 Revenue Act.

He repeated his request for the new $4 billion in his Economic Report two days later.

However, the President's Budget Message, submitted still later, revealed that the Administration did not intend to cut the wartime excise tax rates for the time being.

These high rates, imposed during World War II, had been kept in the postwar era despite pressure for their repeal from businessmen, Congressmen and the nation generally. By 1949, it was relatively evident that Congress, persuaded that the excise rates hurt the "little people" more than anyone else, was ready to reduce the excises, if not remove them altogether.

For this reason, the President had felt himself obliged to take a stand on the question. He indicated clearly enough in the 1949 Budget Message that the Administration wanted to reduce the unpopular excise levies when new means of offsetting the revenue losses occasioned by such cuts and the previous cuts of the 1948 Revenue Act could be found.

The $4 billion he had just asked for in his 1949 State of the Union message was then seen as a start in the quest for new revenue to offset effects of possible excise repeal.

However, in the first six months of the first session, the President's revenue proposal was gradually changed in favor of tax reduction. Excise cuts were not mentioned again for some time.

President's Position Shifted

While Secretary of the Treasury John Snyder repeated the President's call for $4 billion in new revenue as late as March, 1949, the President shifted away from his original proposal. By July, 1949, when he submitted his mid-year Economic Report, the President gave tax increases the soft pedal and called instead for some tax reductions, especially in the field of freight transportation levies. But he thought real estate and gift taxes still ought to be hiked.

The shift reflected the change in the country's economic circumstances (unemployment had risen in the meantime and fears of a postwar depression were widely expressed) and the overriding reluctance of Congress to do anything at all about boosting income taxes at such a time. Demands for excise cuts gained more and more Congressional favor.

Though Administration leaders recognized the growing strong sentiment throughout the country to wipe the levies off the books, the critical question facing them was still how to get the money elsewhere. In an August, 1949, interview, Truman indicated he saw no prospect for excise repeal before the second session met in 1950.

Congressional sentiment was strongly in opposition to tax increases, or any suggestion of them. In fact, in September, House Speaker Sam Rayburn (D Tex.), after a White House conference, commented that it might be wise to "readjust" some of the more "oppressive" taxes.

But by October 4, the President once again was back at his first-of-the-year stand — he mentioned the possibility of calling for new taxes in 1950.

This produced an eruption of declarations in opposition. Sen. Walter F. George (D Ga.), head of the tax-writing Finance Committee, Sen. Harry Flood Byrd (D Va.) and Rep. Joseph W. Martin (R Mass.) all expressed vigorous criticism of any tax increases.

And at the end of 1949, no new taxes had been put on the books. Neither had taxes of any kind been reduced.

While some 174 bills had been introduced to repeal or reduce the excise levies, and while some, in one form or another, received action by the House Ways and Means Committee or the Senate Finance Committee, none of them ever was finally enacted.

Nevertheless it became clear in the brief period between the October recess of the first session and the beginning of the second session in 1950 that both Democratic and Republican leaders were ready to put across some kind of excise tax revision. Both Democrats and Republicans appeared wholeheartedly agreed that at least some of the excises ought to go. The only question none of them had answered by the end of 1949 was, where would the money to replace that lost by the excise cuts come from?

President's 1950 Tax Messages

The Congressional tax battle of 1950 was in full swing almost from the day the second session opened Jan. 3. The drive for repeal or revision of the wartime excise rates took the spotlight from the first, but was paralleled persistently by the Administration's push for opening up new sources of revenue to offset the growing governmental deficits.

In his State of the Union message on Jan. 4, and again in his Economic Report on Jan. 6, the President asked Congress to revise the nation's tax structure "to reduce present inequities, stimulate business activity and yield a moderate amount of additional revenue." He promised to transmit to Congress his specific recommendations at an early date.

The President's tax message reached the Capitol Jan. 23. It contained three requests for Congressional action: reduce some excise taxes, plug loopholes in current tax laws, and impose higher tax rates on large estates, gifts and corporations while providing some reduction in taxes on small corporations and foreign investment.

This is what President Truman asked Congress to enact:

1. A reduction in excise taxes "on transportation of property, transportation of persons, long-distance telephone and telegraph communications, and the entire group of retail excises, including such items as toilet preparations, luggage and handbags."

2. An elimination of tax loopholes "which now permit some groups to escape their fair share of taxation." The President cited as the "more important" of these loopholes the excessive depletion exemptions allowed oil and mining interests; the abuse of the tax exemption accorded educational and charitable organizations which carry on enterprises unrelated to education and charity; the "quirk" in the income tax law which relieved life insurance companies from paying such taxes after 1946; and the loophole which permitted some persons to pay taxes on income at the lower capital gains tax rate instead of the income tax rate.

3. An imposition of higher tax rates and revision of estate, gift, and corporation tax laws to provide an additional $1 billion in revenue. He recommended higher rates and lower exemptions on estate and gift taxes; and he recommended "a moderate increase" in the tax rate applicable to corporate income in excess of $50,000 annually.

Some Concessions Asked

Whereas the President asked for higher taxes on income above $50,000, he recommended a reduction from 53 to 38 per cent in the tax rate on corporate profits above $25,000 and less than $50,000 to aid smaller firms. This was the so-called "notch" provision. He also recommended that the loss carry-forward provision for corporations be extended from two to five years to help new businesses.

To encourage investment abroad, the President recommended postponing the tax on corporate income earned abroad until it is brought home, permitting more credit toward U. S. taxes for taxes paid abroad, and liberalizing the foreign residence requirement for exemption of income earned abroad.

The President stated that he "could not approve excise tax reductions unless they are accompanied by provision for replacement of the revenue lost . . . Under present conditions, we cannot afford to reduce excise taxes first in the hope that action will be taken later to make up for the loss in revenue." He proposed that the "replaced" revenue come from closing the loopholes in the law.

Congressional Reaction

Congressional reaction to the President's tax bill indicated that nearly everyone was in favor of reducing the excise taxes and plugging loopholes; but practically no one was in favor of increasing taxes.

Rep. Robert L. Doughton (D N.C.), chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, was noncommittal about the merits of the President's proposals. He stated merely that his Committee would give the Presidential tax recommendations "early and full consideration". Chairman Walter F. George (D Ga.) of the Senate Finance group said that he would personally like to see the Senate act first on an excise tax reduction bill. "I think it might expedite the handing of the tax increase part of the bill," he stated.

Speaker Sam Rayburn (D Tex.) and Sen. Tom Connally (D Tex.) hailing from the great oil producing State of Texas, said they opposed elimination of the oil depletion exemption.

Sen. Scott W. Lucas (D Ill.) and Rep. John W. McCormack (D Mass.), Democratic leaders of the Senate and House, said the President's tax message was fair, sound, and reasonable, but neither saw fit to support, as the President did several times, the need for tax increases.

Sen. Herbert R. O'Conor (D Md.) stated that this is "not the time to raise taxes anywhere".

House Republican Leader Joseph W. Martin, Jr. (R Mass.), wanted to repeal all wartime excise taxes except those imposed on liquor, tobacco, and beer. Sen. Eugene D. Millikin (R Colo.) favored lower tax rates generally. Sen. Robert A. Taft (R Ohio) called attention to the point that the President frequently criticized the Republican income tax reduction in 1948, but asked for "no new individual income tax increases."

One Republican Rep. Noah M. Mason (R Ill.) had a kind word for the tax message. He saw in it "a complete endorsement of my bill, HR 5064, to impose an income tax on the business earnings of colleges, foundations, cooperatives and other exempt organizations. . . The message is excellent in this respect."

HOUSE

Hearings

The House Ways and Means Committee opened hearings Feb. 3 on the proposed tax legislation. Before it was through a month later, it had heard about 275 witnesses representing scores of organizations, and had produced a 2 - volume, 3000 - page set of printed hearings.

The first witness was Secretary of the Treasury John Snyder. He spelled out in detail the overhauling job on the tax laws that the Administration wanted Congress to do. What he asked for added up to a $655 million cut in excise taxes and a $1 billion increase in revenue by plugging certain loopholes in the existing tax law.

Before Snyder had been allowed to take the witness stand, however, Democrats on the Committee beat down an attempt by the Republicans, enbloc, to give excise tax repeal "top priority" without waiting to frame an offsetting tax program. The motion by Rep. Roy O. Woodruff (R Mich.) failed by a straight party-line vote—14 to 10. The vote was cast on a substitute motion by Rep. Aime J. Forand (D R. I.) to lay on the table the Republican resolution.

Highlights of the Administration's new tax program Snyder presented to the Committee were:

1. Cut wartime excise tax rates by $655 million.

2. Close loopholes in existing law and thereby raise $500 million.

3. Increase taxes on estates and gifts by $400 million.

4. Increase taxes on corporations in higher brackets by $675 million.

One of the biggest loopholes that needed plugging, according to Snyder, was the liberal depletion allowance granted the oil, gas and mineral industries, for tax purposes, to compensate them for the depletion of the natural resources with which they deal. Contending the allowances were too high, Snyder recommended that allowances for oil, gas and mineral depletion be cut from 27 1/2 per cent to 15 per cent; that the sulphur allowance be slashed from 23 to 15 per cent; that the 15 per cent allowed such non - metallics bauxite, clay or potash be cut to 5 per cent. No change was sought in the 5 per cent allowed coal and the 15 per cent on other metallic minerals.

He also asked that the increased revenue from estate and gift taxes come chiefly from the device of imposing the top rate of 77 per cent on estates of $3 million or more, instead of on estates of $10 million and up.

An increase in corporation taxes from 38 per cent to 42 per cent on income above $25,000 also was asked.

Snyder presented a table to show that corporations earning under $25,000 would be taxed at the old rate, those earning between $25,000 and $118,750 would actually pay less taxes and those earning above the latter figure would pay from 5 to 10.5 per cent more, under the proposed new rates.

The Secretary also asked a 10 per cent tax on the manufacturers' price for television sets to match the existing 10 per cent tax on radio sets and parts.

Here is how Snyder proposed to cut excise taxes:

Cut the levy on furs, luggage, women's handbags, jewelry and toilet preparations from 20 to 10 per cent.

Cut long distance telephone and telegraph tax charges from 25 to 15 per cent; the tax on rail, bus, airline and ship passenger tickets from 15 to 10 per cent, and repeal outright the 3 per cent freight haul tax.

A flat exemption of "baby oils, powders and lotions" from the tax on toilet preparations.

On Feb. 7, the Committee heard the Treasury's general counsel, Thomas J. Lynch, continue presentation of the Administration's tax program.

He pointed to "collapsible" corporations as one of the major "loopholes" in the tax law. These corporations are used extensively in the motion-picture and construction industries, he said. Participants subscribe to stock in a new company, produce one motion picture or building development, dissolve the corporation before any taxable profits are received and pay capital gains tax, at a maximum rate of 25 per cent, on the difference between the cost of their stock and the fair market value of the dissolved company's assets. Thus, they avoid paying income tax at rates ranging up to 84 per cent. The Treasury, Lynch said, wanted a clear-cut provision in the law to prevent this practice.

Hundreds of Witnesses

The hundreds of witnesses who followed Snyder and Lynch to the stand were for the most part pleaders for some special cause. Only the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, the Congress of Industrial Organizations and the Committee for Economic Development addressed themselves to the overall tax program outlined by the President and Treasury officials. (Their cases are detailed at the end of this section).

The following, therefore, is a resume of organizations for whom spokesmen appeared before the Committee and the issues on which they took their stand:

Depletion Allowances

Against reduction of these tax benefits were:

Texas Railroad Commissioner, also speaking for the Governor of Texas.

General Depletion Committee of the Petroleum Industry, with Russell Brown, general counsel of the Independent Petroleum Association of America, and Frank M. Porter, president of the Mid-Continent Oil & Gas Association, as co-chairmen.

New York State Oil Producers Association.

National Stripper Well Association.

Independent Oil Operators and Land Owners Association of Illinois, Indiana and Kentucky.

Rocky Mountain Oil and Gas Association.

American Association of Oil Well Drilling Contractors.

National Sand and Gravel Association.

American Mining Congress.

National Coal Association.

Arizona Small Mine Operators Association.

Phosphate, potash, vermiculite, talc, refactory clay, and perlite industries' spokesmen.

Freeport Sulphur Co., producing in Louisiana and Texas.

National Crushed Stone Association and Agricultural Limestone Institute.

Rep. A. S. Mike Monroney (D Okla.). Later the entire Oklahoma delegation, with Rep. Carl Albert (D Okla.) as its spokesman, appealed in a body to the Committee not to reduce the oil depletion allowance.

Rep. Robert F. Rich (R Pa.).

Rep. Ed Gossett (D Tex.) who asserted the government could pick up $300 million a year by taxing imported oil $1.05 a barrel.

For increased depletion allowances:

James W. Haley. general counsel, National Coal Association, urged the Committee to increase the 5 per cent coal allowance.

Rutledge Hill, of Dallas, Tex., chairman of the National Sand and Gravel Association, told the Committee that sand and gravel, then omitted from the list of minerals granted depletion allowances should be given a 15 per cent rate.

Excise Tax Repeal

The National Committee for Repeal of Wartime Excise Taxes dwarfed the Administration's bid for a comparatively modest $600 million cut in excise rates. It called for a $2 billion slash in the taxes. Leon Henderson, former Office of Price Administration chief in Washington, was the Committee's chief spokesman at the hearings. He blamed declining trends in many industries on the "regressive impact" of the excise levies, and said they should long since have been abandoned because they were meant to be only a wartime control.

Others supporting Henderson's appeal were: Eric Johnston, president, Motion Picture Association of America; Arde Bulova, chairman of the board, Bulova Watch Co.; Louis Ruthenberg, board chairman, Servel, Inc.; and Frank M. Mayfield, president, Scruggs-Vandervoort-Barney Inc.

Julius Green, chairman, National Fur Tax Committee, opposed the 20 per cent excise tax on furs, saying the fur industry faced bankruptcy because of the levy.

T. F. McMains, vice - president, Western Union Telegraph Co., said continuance of the 25 per cent tax on telegrams could bring insolvency to his company.

J. B. Bachman, representing the General Electric Company, filed a statement claiming the price the consumer paid for collection of excise taxes on light bulks was too high for the amount of revenue that was obtained.

George Romney, vice - president of the Nash - Kelvinator Corp., said the tax on automobiles posed a serious threat to employment in that industry.

Rowland Jones Jr., president of the American Retail Federation, representing 52 retail associations, and Ralph W. Button, speaking for the National Dry Goods Association, comprising about 7,000 department and special stores, sought outright repeal of the wartime excises.

Max Berkowitz, of New York City co-director of the National Authority for the Ladies Handbag Industry, and Donald L. Bryant, representing the Toilet Goods Association Inc., testified their industries were "experiencing a very severe economic squeeze." Thomas A. Buckley, president of the Luggage and Leather Goods Manufacturers of America, Inc., said his industry would have a sales decrease "directly attributable to the excise taxes." A one-third slash in the excise tax on liquor was proposed by Thomas F. McCarthy, chairman of the Alcoholic Beverages Industry's tax council, who said "social problems are not cured by high taxation."

On behalf of the movie industry, Abram F. Myers and Gael Sullivan — the latter a former executive director of the Democratic National Committee — argued against the 20 per cent tax on movie admissions on the ground that motion pictures are "part of the press, the freedom of which is guaranteed by the first amendment to the Constitution."

Floyd G. Blair, treasurer of the Philharmonic - Symphony Society of New York, and Charles M. Spofford, president of the Metropolitan Opera Association, of New York, contended the continued existence of their organizations might depend on repeal of the admissions tax.

Lee B. Wailes, of Birmingham, Mich., representing the Television Broadcasters Association, opposed the proposed 10 per cent manufacturers levy on television receivers as a "serious threat" to a growing but still unprofitable industry.

G. Emerson Markham, of the National Association of Broadcasters, Lawson Wimberly, of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers (AFL) and David E. Kahn, chairman of the board, Thomasville, N.C., Furniture Corp., also opposed the tax.

Taxation of Cooperatives

For taxing co-op patronage dividends:

National Tax Equality Association

Grain and Feed Dealers National Association

National Retail Hardware Association

National Associated Businessmen

National Oil Jobbers Council, representing state oil jobber associations in New York, Pennsylvania, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Florida, Georgia, Tennessee, Kentucky, Texas, Arkansas, Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa, South Dakota, North Dakota, Minnesota, Mississippi, Illinois, Indiana, Alabama, and Missouri

United States Wholesale Grocers Association

Boston Wool Trade Association.

National Retail Farm Equipment Association

Independent Livestock Marketing Association

Against taxation of co-op earnings except as individual income:

National Council of Farmer Cooperatives

National Federation of Grain Cooperatives

National Milk Producers Federation

Cooperative League of the United States

American Farm Bureau Federation —Wanted undistributed earnings of cooperatives taxed "in the same manner as other corporation earnings."

National Grange

National Farmers Union

National Rural Electric Cooperatives Association — Testified against any change in status of REA co-ops.

Insurance Companies

Claris Adams, president, Ohio State Life Insurance Company, and Horace P. Bassford, vice president, Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, spoke out against the proposed permanent revision of the insurance investment tax law, and urged trial of pending "stop gap" legislation. (For full account of this bill, see Page 644.)

Cigarette Taxes

For lower taxes on "economy brand" cigarettes:

A graduated federal excise tax on cigarettes, as a means of lowering the levy on "economy brand" cigarettes, was urged by representatives of Larus Bros. Co., of Richmond, Va., and Stephano Bros. Inc., of Philadelphia, Pa., all lower - priced cigarette firms. These groups wanted the existing flat seven - cents - a - pack tax rate continued on the more expensive cigarettes, but they asked a 4.9 - cent tax on lower - priced brands.

Vance M. Kirby, tax counsel, U.S. Treasury Department said the Treasury in principle favored a lower tax on cheaper cigarettes. John C. Stedman, a Justice Department spokesman, endorsed the tax differential as "both desirable and necessary" to encourage competition.

Against any cigarette tax change, however, were the American Farm Bureau Federation and the Granges of North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee and Kentucky.

General Organizational Stands

For the Congress of Industrial Organizations (CIO), Stanley Ruttenberg and Solomon Barkin, research experts, presented a program that went even further than the President's recommendations. they advocated:

1. A boost in personal income tax exemptions, which in 1950 amounted to $600.

2. Repeal of the 1948 Revenue Act's provision permitting married couples to file separate returns because it "gives major relief to individuals with incomes between $10,000 and $100,000.

3. Approval of an excess profits tax.

4. Extension of tax advantages to corporations which distribute most of their profits in dividends to stockholders.

For the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, Ellsworth C. Alvord urged a $6 billion a year reduction of federal expenditures in the next fiscal year. Assisted by C. W. Bader, he presented a program calling for:

1. Complete elimination of all wartime excise taxes on transportation and communications.

2. Reductions in gift and estate levies.

3. "An immediate review" of the nation's overall tax structure, with particular attention to tax adjustments to encourage private enterprise and employment.

For the Committee for Economic Development, J. Cameron Thomson, said the group wanted a $2.5 billion tax reduction instead of the $1 billion increase sought by President Truman. The program he presented:

1. Opposed higher corporation taxes.

2. Favored elimination of double taxation of corporate dividends.

3. Favored repeal of wartime excise levies, or a cutback to no more than a $1 - billion - a - year level.

Committee

Chairman Robert Doughton (D N.C.) banged the Ways and Means Committee gavel down March 3, ending public hearings on the tax proposals just one month after the sessions were begun.

Actual writing of the bill, which took place in closed sessions, did not get started until March 13. Early predictions were that the drafting would continue for three weeks or a month at the most.

As it turned out, it was more than two months later, on June 22, that the Committee reported to the House a finally approved measure. On that date the bill received a number, HR 8920.

During the interim months, the Committee issued a steady stream of communiques describing tentative decisions it had made on the numerous individual excise and other tax provisions. A compilation of these communiques showed that again and again the Committee made a decision one day, only to turn around and reverse its action the next day. In some cases, the Committee even changed its mind a third time and returned to its first decision, with perhaps a modification or two.

Pre - Drafting Maneuvers

March 13 the Committee met behind closed doors to take up the task of formulating the new tax bill, based on the President's proposals and the public testimony.

Democrats first defeated, however, by a 15-10 rigid party line vote, a Republican effort to ram through a "quickie" bill, slashing excise taxes immediately by about $1 billion and providing for later consideration of other tax action. The defeated proposal had been promised by the Republicans as a kick off for the tax-writing job.

On another party-line vote, Democrats then put through the Committee a resolution of their own (by Rep. Herman P. Eberharter, D Pa.) Outlining this approach to the new tax law:

1. An examination of the entire federal excise tax system, not just the wartime levies cited by President Truman.

2. Committal of the group to "aim to replace" federal revenues lost from excise tax action by such other tax changes as may be deemed feasible".

Before the echo of the votes on the tax issue had died away, both sides had mimeographed statements defending their positions. The Democratic statement said Republicans "recklessly and irresponsibly" sought to add to deficit financing. The Republicans asserted that "many areas in the economy are suffering drastically" from the uncertainty as to when Congress will act on excises.

Bill Formulation Begun

With the foregoing preliminary skirmishes out of the way, the Committee took almost a month to decide upon the manner in which it would approach the excise tax reductions. Finally on April 21, after a series of unanimous consent motions for flat 50 per cent reductions in various items were turned down, the membership decided to adopt an item-by-item approach.

In accordance with this decision, the Committee turned to manufacturers' excise levies and thereupon took its first direct action April 21 toward production of an actual piece of legislation. It voted a $75 million cut in manufacturers' excise taxes on household cookstoves, water-heaters, light bulbs and several other items.

Chairman Doughton, however, emphasized that the Committee's action was tentative and that it might return at any time to any item and make further changes.

The Committee next decided to make these reductions or repeals in specific excise rates:

Jewelry, from 20 to 10 per cent; Furs, from 20 to 10 per cent; Luggage, such as trunks, suitcases and brief cases, from 20 to 10 per cent (this action taken April 26 followed a decision April 21 to repeal the tax on handbags, purses and billfolds); Baby oil, powder and lotions, repeal the 20 per cent tax altogether; other toilet preparations, from 20 to 10 per cent; also

Musical instruments, not including radios and phonographs, 10 to 5 per cent; Cameras, from 25 to 10 per cent; Film and photographic plates, from 15 to 10 per cent (this was agreed to April 21. Later the Committee on April 26 voted to eliminate completely the tax on any film or photographic equipment used as part of a running business, such as film and cameras used by movie companies to make pictures); also

Household refrigerators, from 10 to 7 per cent (the 7 per cent tax was added for the first time to home freezers); Typewriters, adding machines and other business machines, from 10 to 5 per cent; Matches, from 2 cents to 1 cent per thousand (this changed an earlier decision to let the tax stand); Electric air space heaters, repeal of the 10 per cent tax; and Children's sports equipment, such as basketballs, baseballs, skates and footballs, repeal of the 10 per cent tax.

A cut of 20 to 10 per cent in the general admissions tax was voted April 26. This affected tickets to movies, stage plays and sports events. The Committee also voted to eliminate the tax on tickets to a number of non-profit enterprises such as county fairs, church shows, civic symphonies and college plays.

Continuation of the 20 per cent night club tax, and the imposts on coin-operated devices, bowling alleys, billiard and pool tables was voted April 27.

Additional Cuts Voted

More major excise tax reductions were added April 28 to those already approved. They included:

A 50 per cent cut in the 20 per cent tax on night club checks. This was voted April 28 and reversed the Committee's April 27 decision to leave the tax as it was. No explanation was offered for the about-face.

A cut in the transportation tax on persons by rail, including Pullman, motor bus and airplane, from 15 per cent to 10 per cent.

A reduction from 3 per cent to 1½ per cent in the transportation tax on freight.

A cut in the tax on residential telephone service from 15 to 10 per cent, including "short" toll service of 24 cents or less. The 15 per cent tax on commercial telephone service would be continued.

A cut in the 25 per cent rate on long-distance and radio telephone service to 20 per cent.

A reduction in the rate on telegrams and radio dispatches from 25 to 10 per cent and the tax on leased wires from 25 to 20 per cent.

A repeal of the 10 per cent tax on baby bottle warmers.

The Committee then voted May 1 to cut the excise tax on whiskey used for medicinal purposes from $3 to $2 a proof gallon.

Another major action was taken May 3 when the Committee decided to lower the tax rate on "economy brand" cigarettes from 7 to 4.9 cents a pack. The decision was that on cigarettes manufactured to retail for 12 cents or less a pack (exclusive of state and local taxes) the federal tax should be reduced from $3.50 per 1,000 to $2.45 per 1,000. The Committee said the cut amounted to 2.1 cents a pack for such cigarettes as Wings, Avalons. Marvels and Dominoes.

Committee Chairman Doughton said the vote on the cigarette tax cut was 13 to 12. Votes of individual committeemen were not revealed. Doughton said he would make a motion to reconsider the vote.

May 4 the Committee voted against any cut in federal taxes on whiskey and beer. No proposal was made to reduce wine excise imposts.

"Loopholes" Considered

Turning to a preliminary consideration of President Truman's proposals for closing revenue code "loopholes" to compensate at least in part for the many excise tax losses, the Committee flatly rejected the suggested 10 per cent excise tax on television sets.

On May 9, the Committee officially plugged its first "loophole" when it voted to tighten the tax treatment of brokers and banks dealing in tax-exempt state and municipal bonds.

But the same day the Committee took another slash at federal excise taxes, voting to reduce the levy on cigars by an average of 33 1/3 per cent. Under a new rate schedule the Committee worked out, cigar excise taxes were reduced on a graduated scale, depending upon the retail selling price. A proposal to put a $70 million to $80 million annual excise levy on horse race betting was turned down May 10.

During the following week, the committee made these decisions:

On May 12 it voted to tax the retained income of mutual savings banks and building and loan associations. It also decided to require losses from sale of business property to be treated as capital losses, instead of as ordinary losses, thereby making them non-deductable from ordinary income for tax purposes.

Imposition of a 10 per cent withholding tax on corporate dividends was agreed upon by the Committee May 16.

The withholding rate on dividends imposed no new tax obligations on any taxpayer, but was designed, instead, to crack down in tax dodgers who did not report dividends on their tax returns.

But the Committee then flatly rejected President Truman's request for an increase in inheritance and gift taxes.

On May 17, it agreed to slash the maximum tax on individual long-term capital gains from 25 per cent to 16 per cent. Moreover, it agreed to define long-term capital assets as those held for three months or longer, instead of the six months minimum. Long-term assets get preferential tax treatment.

Rep. Walter A. Lynch (D N.Y.) sponsor of the changes, said while they would save money for traders and investors, they also would energize the flow of risk capital with the good possibility that tax collections would be boosted $100 million yearly.

On May 18, a reduction in the interest rate the government pays on overpayments of taxes later refunded to the payers was approved. Set at 6 per cent, the rate was lowered to 2 per cent.

Going even further, the Committee not only rejected the President's proposed reduction in resources depletion allowances accorded operators of oil, gas, sulphur and non-metallic mineral developments, but approved yet larger allowances for other mining fields. New allowances were granted operators in fullers earth, refactory clays and quartzite, perlite diatonadeous earth, sand and gravel and marble and granite.

Further extension of special tax benefits to mining interests were agreed upon May 19, when the Committee voted to double the depletion allowance available to coal mine operators for income tax purposes as a compensation for depletion of their coal resources.

On May 23, it gave a depletion allowance to borax mines, not previously covered by this special tax treatment.

Amnesty Voted

The Committee May 24 voted a virtual amnesty to income tax defaulters who made a "full and complete" disclosure of the amount of their tax underpayments and agreed to pay up. Under the provision agreed upon, such voluntary confessions were to subject a tax dodger to civil penalties (50 per cent of the total tax plus 6 per cent of the unpaid portion) but were to amount to a guarantee against criminal prosecution.

It then voted May 25 to add a 10 per cent withholding tax on the dividends and patronage refunds the exempt cooperatives paid their customers and stockholders, if such dividends were computed as a part of the total income of those receiving them.

Benefits for persons or corporations losing money on their business operations, in the form of reduced taxes in the years they could show a profit, were voted May 29. Under the plan, persons or corporations with business losses in any one year were given the right to offset the losses by averaging them against the income of one preceding year and five years in the future. A company that suffered a $150,000 loss in 1950, for example, but had netted a $100,000 profit in 1949, was allowed to apply $100,000 of the loss against the previous year's profits and thus offset tax liability. The remainder of the loss was made deductable from earnings of the next five years.

On May 31, the Committee decided:

To simplify the payment procedures involved in the previously approved 10 per cent withholding tax on corporation and cooperatives dividends, and

To end the treatment of Puerto Ricans, who became United States citizens in 1917, as non-resident aliens with respect to taxation of the income they derived from sources in the United States. The last point required Puerto Ricans to pay taxes on income derived from United States sources just as any American does. Previously U. S. income had been free to Puerto Ricans.

The Committee also decided May 31 to limit the federal income tax exemption granted Puerto Ricans to bona fide residents of Puerto Rico, an action aimed, according to Rep. Noah M. Mason (R Ill.), at radio entertainer Ed Gardner, who recorded his Duffy's Tavern program on the island.

MORE EXCISE CUTS

June 2, the Committee returned to the excise tax cuts, ratified all its previous reductions, and then voted even further slashes. But the group matched these up with some excise increases.

First, however, the members postponed what had been a scheduled showdown on President Truman's main proposal for bringing the tax measure into balance — an increase in corporate tax rates.

Here is a recapitulation of the Committee's June 2 changes in previous tentative action on excises:

It decided the excise tax cuts would become effective on the first day of the month that began more than 10 days after enactment of the bill.

The 20 per cent cabaret tax, previously halved, was reduced instead to 15 per cent.

A $62 million slash was voted in the excise taxes on tires and tubes and electric toasters were freed of a 10 per cent excise for an additional $4 million loss.

But an additional $5 million excise tax was slapped on gambling devices making the levy on slot machines $150 a year instead of the existing $100.

The 5 per cent excise tax on auto parts and accessories was reduced to 3.75 per cent, instead of removed completely.

The previous tentative vote to repeal the 20 per cent manufacturers' excise on electric light bulbs and tubes was reversed.

Other Revenue Actions

As for revenue changes in other than the excise tax field, the Committee:

June 6 "lost" $75 million by overturning a tentative decision to tax mutual savings banks and building and loan associations, at corporate rates, on their surpluses.

June 7 turned down an attempt, sponsored by Rep. Thomas A. Jenkins (R Ohio), to include in the bill a $175 million yearly boost in the import duties on petroleum and petroleum products.

Also June 7 voted about $10 million to mineral operators in new depletion allowances for tax purposes. This gave a 5 per cent allowance to producers of stone, brick and tile clay, shale, oyster and clam shells, and a 15 per cent allowance to producers of tripoli, a deposit used in abrasives and cement.

And on June 8, it reversed a previous decision to cut the capital gains tax from 25 to 16 per cent, but stood by its earlier vote to cut from six months to three months the length of time a capital asset had to be held, between its purchase and its sale, if the capital gains tax was to apply to the profits.

June 9, the Committee voted to impose a 30 per cent capital gains tax on the profits aliens make from speculation or investments in American markets or property.

Also June 9, it approved a provision designed to prevent short-term sales from being used as a device to promote long-term capital gains, by specifying that the short-term sale had to be actually a short-term transaction and that the holding period of a long-term sale had to begin on the date of the short-term sale.

June 13, proposals were adopted to tax the unrelated business income of educational, charitable, labor and other tax-exempt organizations, with the exception of religious organizations.

On June 14, the Committee voted to crack down on so-called "collapsible corporations" which claimed the capital gains tax rate of 25 per cent. The Committee agreed these corporations had to pay the regular income tax rate of up to 82 per cent on their revenues.

And also on June 14, the Committee voted to require non-professional persons engaged in book writing and other artistic pursuits to pay ordinary income taxes, denying them the resort to the capital gains device.

Secret Huddle

Then, after a surprise secret huddle June 15 of Ways and Means Democrats and Speaker Sam Rayburn (D Tex.), the possibility of final action on the long-pending tax bill was brightened. Unofficial spokesmen said the result of the huddle was that the majority party decided to push through by July 1 a bill slashing excise tax rates by $1 billion as already approved by the Committee, and put into the bill a hike in the income tax rate for large corporations.

On June 16, the Committee revised an earlier decision and decided that interest the government paid on tax refunds should be 3 per cent, not the 2 per cent previously voted. It also erased from the bill a previous decision to give tax dodgers a "last chance" to settle up with the government before institution of criminal prosecution.

Corporate Income Taxes

On June 19, the Committee at last tackled the question of hiking corporation income rates, and decided in favor of it. The net effect of the action, moneywise, was to add about $433 million to expectable revenue gains. This came fairly close to compensating for HR 8920's provisions cutting excise levies. An estimate released by the Committee showed that new taxes and the cuts added up to a net annual loss of $12 million, a loss the Committee said might be offset by the margin of error in the bill.

Specifically, the Committee decided to boost by a yearly $708 million the income taxes of firms making over $166,667 annually, and to reduce by $275 million the taxes of firms making between $5,000 and $166,667, for an overall gain of $433 million.

A speed-up pay plan also was adopted, giving corporations only six months after the end of a year to pay up their taxes. The plan was offered by Rep. Wilbur D. Mills (D Ark.). It was to go into effect gradually over a five year span, delivering its full impact at the end of that time.

Also on June 19, the Committee backed up one more time on an earlier decision — reversing this time its previous cut in taxes on so-called "economy brand" cigarettes. The action served to keep taxes on economy and standard brand cigarettes at the existing 7-cents-a-pack-level.

Report

On June 22, the Ways and Means Committee voted 17 to 8 to report HR 8920 to the House for final action. On the Committee vote, 15 Democrats joined 2 Republicans in favor of the measure, while 8 Republicans registered their disapproval. A minority report was later submitted by this group.

Here were the bill's provisions in outline form as the Ways and Means Committee reported them to the House.

Excise Taxes

Reduction or elimination of several dozen excise tax rates estimated to reduce federal revenues by $1.1 billion annually. Cuts were made in excises on jewelry, handbags, luggage, furs, cosmetics, transportation and communication, telephone and telegraph messages, admissions, cameras and photographic apparatus. Eliminated were the excises on some watches and alarm clocks, baby oil, powders and lotions, rebuilt and reconditioned auto parts, cooking stoves and water heaters of the household type, and cameras used in business, such as movie-making or X-ray work.

The following table shows how the Committee's tax bill reduced excise levies:

Items	Existing tax	Proposed
Luggage, toilet cases	20%	10%
Handbags, wallets, kit	20	exempt
Jewelry	20	10
Watches, $65 or less	10	exempt

*—A thousand

Among existing excise taxes left unchanged by the bill were those on liquor, beer, cigarettes, gasoline, passenger cars, club dues, initiation fees, business telephones, air conditioners, radio sets except those by government, and wire and equipment service for leased wires.

Corporation Rates

In lieu of the old complicated system, which provided one set of rates for corporations with incomes not more than $50,000 annually, and another set for corporations with incomes above $50,000, the Committee provided the following schedule:

A $25,000 surtax exemption; A flat 21-per cent normal tax rate; and a flat 20-per cent surtax rate.

This meant a corporation with income of less than $25,000 was to pay a flat 21-per cent normal tax and no more. Corporations with income totaling $25,000 or more were required to pay the following:

A normal tax of 21 per cent on its entire taxable income, plus a surtax of 20 per cent on that part of its income in excess of $25,000.

The rates then put in effect were:

Corporate Income	Old Law	Committee-Proposed
Not over $5,000	21%	21%
Over $5,000 but not over $20,000	23	21
Over $20,000 but not over $25,00	25	21
Over $25,000 but not over $50,000	53	41
Over $50,000	38	41

The effect of the new tax schedule on certain income brackets was:

Company Earnings	Old tax	Committee tax
$10,000	$ 2,200	$ 2,100
25,000	5,750	5,250
40,000	13,700	11,400
100,000	38,000	36,000
150,000	57,000	56,500
200,000	76,000	77,000
500,000	190,000	200,000
1,000,000	380,000	405,000
10,000,000	3,880,000	4,095,000

Other Provisions

A recapitulation of other provisions follows:

Dividends: Corporations and cooperatives were required to withhold 10 per cent of all dividends paid in cash or kind. This added no taxes but was designed to pick up taxes from those who did not report this income fully.

Business Loss Credits: A plan was adopted to allow businessmen to use net operating losses to reduce taxes in good years over a longer period.

The old two-year carry-back provision was limited to one year but the carry-forward period was extended to five years.

Capital Gains: Any capital assets—securities, machinery or other investments—held over three months were made "long term" investments, to replace the old six-month holding period. The taxpayer is only required to report half of any profit made on the sale of such "long term" holdings and maximum rate on the taxed portion is 50 per cent.

Business Property: Losses from the sale of property used in trade or business were made capital losses rather than ordinary losses, allowing only a part of the loss, therefore, to be deducted for tax purposes.

Short Sales: Traders in securities and commodities were denied use of short sales to convert a short-term gain into a long-term gain or create a short-term loss to offset a long-term gain for tax purposes.

Tax-exempt Bonds: Dealers in tax-exempt municipal and state bonds were required to amortize any premium they pay on high-interest, five-year or shorter bonds they hold for more than 30 days.

Tax Refunds: The interest rate the government pays on tax refunds was cut from 6 to 3 per cent.

Stock Redemption By Subsidiary Corporations: When a parent corporation indirectly redeems its stock though purchases by its subsidiaries in a manner essentially equivalent to the distribution of a taxable dividend, the amount involved was required to be taxed at ordinary income rates.

Government Employees Working in U. S. Possessions: Compensation paid such employees, previously free of Federal income taxes, was made subject to income levies beginning in 1950.

Capital Gains of Non Resident Aliens: A 30 per cent tax was imposed on previously - untaxed capital gains of non - resident aliens temporarily present in the U. S. but not engaged therein in business or trade.

Amortization of Premiums of Convertible Bonds: The privilege of amortizing a bond premium allowed in the old law was made inapplicable to that portion of the premium on a convertible bond which was attributable to the conversion features of the bond.

Tax-Free Liquidation of Foreign Subsidiaries: A special rule was added dealing with the liquidation or transfer of assets of a foreign subsidiary owned directly or indirectly by less than five domestic corporations. Under the rule, such part of the gain resulting from the liquidation distributions as was not in excess of each domestic corporation's ratable share of the accumulated earnings and profits was to be taxed as an ordinary dividend. The remainder was made taxable at capital gains rates. Previously, such liquidation was taxable as capital gains or tax free.

Transfers in Contemplation of Death: Transfers of an individual's property made more than three years prior to his death were removed from the "contemplation of death" clause in the old law, and made subject to gift, rather than estate, taxes.

Collapsible Corporations: The capital gains tax was denied persons who organize a special collapsible corporation for a particular transaction, then liquidate it before the product is sold and distribute assets to stockholders.

Tax-Exempt Organizations: The unrelated, active business income over $1,000 obtained by educational and charitable organizations and labor, farm and business associations was taxed at ordinary corporate income tax rates. Also, any gift to a trust or foundation where the contributor or members of his family control the organization to which the gift was made was disallowed for tax purposes.

Amateur Inventors, Artists: Required these persons to pay ordinary income tax rates when they sell their work.

Family Corporations: Income taxes on cash raised by a partial liquidation of stock in a family - type corporation to pay Federal or state estate taxes were waived.

Estate Taxes: A provision allowing estates for tax purposes to deduct sums paid out for the support of dependents while an estate is being settled was repealed.

Intercorporate Dividends: When a subsidiary declares a dividend in kind to a parent corporation, the existing 85 per cent credit was to be computed on the basis of the cost of the existing property to the subsidiary and not on its fair market value.

Percentage Depletion: A five per cent depletion allowance was granted in the case of companies concerned with sand, gravel, granite, marble, stone, brick clay, tile clay, shale, clam shell and oyster shell. A 15 per cent allowance was provided for dealers in tripoli, borax, fuller's earth, refractory and fire clay, quartzite, perlite, diatomaceous earth, metallurgical-grade limestone and chemical grade limestone. The five per cent allowance for coal was increased to 10 per cent.

Life Insurance Companies: The bill included a provision to tax life insurance companies on their 1947-50 investment income, which was tax free under existing law. The House had passed a resolution (H J Res 371) taxing the 1947-49 years, while the Senate amended it to tax only 1949 and 1950. The two chambers had been unable to compromise, however, since the Senate refused to tax retroactively. The provisions of the resolution, with the year '50 added, were inserted in the tax bill by the Ways and Means Committee in an effort to come to a decision on recouping on a stop-gap basis this hitherto lost Federal revenue. The committee pointed out the provision was to be effective only pending development and enactment of a satisfactory long-range basis for the taxation of life insurance companies. $70 million gain. (For story of H J Res 371, See Page 644).

Minority Reports

The Republican minority submitted a brief report, signed by 10 members of the Ways and Means Committee supporting the proposed excise cuts but decrying the imposition of new corporation taxes. Only eight of the 10 voted against reporting the measure. Two — Reps. Thomas E. Martin (Iowa) and Hal Holmes (Wash.) — voted to report the bill but nevertheless signed the minority views.

Those voting against the measure and also against signing the minority report were: Reps. Daniel A. Reed (R N.Y.), Roy O. Woodruff (R Mich.), Thomas A. Jenkins (R Ohio), Richard M. Simpson (R Pa.), Robert W. Kean (R N.J.), Carl T. Curtis (R Neb.), Noah M. Mason (R Ill.) and John W. Byrnes (R Wis.).

They had this to say: "We have long favored and urged the immediate enactment of excise tax relief. We do so now . . .

"For seven long months the Democratic majority fiddled while the people waited and as a result many areas of our economy have suffered . . . We have used every means in our power to end the uncertainty and compel the Democratic majority to act swiftly on the problem . . .

"The people have waited in vain. This legislation is inadequate tax relief. The price tag is gone but the price remains. By shifting the tax from some of the consumers to a more concealed tax on all the consumers, the Democratic majority have failed the people . . .

"We believe that an orderly reduction of a substantial number of wartime excise taxes, without the imposition of any new taxes, can and should be made . . . We are opposed to the increase in the corporate rate. As stated, the result will be in large part to nullify the benefits flowing from excise relief. . . A reduction in federal spending coupled with far-sighted tax policies can give full encouragement to the initiative and incentive of the people . . . Under this administration of higher taxes, increased spending and a cheaper dollar we are moving swiftly toward ruinous inflation."

Final Action

On June 29, seven days after HR 8920 had been formally reported, the measure sailed through the House on an overwhelming vote of 375 to 14. Predictions were made, however, that the ultimate fate of the tax-reducing legislation would be tied to the war in Korea which had just broken out.

The House accepted HR 8920 in precisely the same form in which it had been reported by the Committee. It was brought to the chamber floor under a "closed" rule (H Res 666) which barred amendments from the floor and gave members the choice of taking the bill or rejecting it, in toto. The House, anxious to make cuts in the unpopular excise taxes, took it.

Passage came immediately after the House rejected a Republican-sponsored motion to recommit the measure with instructions to the Ways and Means Committee to return it in two packages — one containing the excise slashes, the other containing the tax boosts. The motion was defeated, 147 to 239. Failing in this effort, many Republicans, committed to excise reduction, joined with Democrats in the final vote for the bill.

One Day Debate

House debate on the bill had been held June 28. It had lasted seven hours, with Republicans assailing the bill as a "hoax" and a "phony", and Democrats defending the increase in corporate taxes as the only way to avoid a Presidential veto of the proposed excise cuts.

In the debate, Minority Floor Leader Joseph W. Martin, Jr. (R Mass.) attacked the bill, assailing "the idea that we must never reduce one form of tax without increasing another." The Democratic counter-attack was headed by Majority Leader John W. McCormack (D Mass.). He chided Republicans who, in the 80th Congress which they controlled, made wartime excise taxes "permanent", instead of continuing them for only the one year as requested at the time by President Truman. (For background on this action, see CQ Almanac, Vol. III, pp. 99, 124.). McCormack accused the Republicans of "political hypocrisy" on the excise cutting issue.

Accused by Rep. Daniel A. Reed (R N.Y.) of being "a rubber stamp" in acceding to the President's demand for gains to offset the bill's cuts, Democrats were defended in turn by Rep. Aime J. Forand (D R.I.), who pointed to the Ways and Means Committee's report on the bill as an example of Republican rubber stamping.

"Two of your members in the Committee," he told Reed, "voted with the majority to report out the bill, and then turned around and signed the minority views, thus presenting a united Republican front," The two he referred to were Reps. Holmes (R Wash.) and Martin (R Iowa).

SENATE

Hearings

The Senate Finance Committee July 5 opened hearings on HR 8920 and Committee Chairman Walter F. George (D Ga.) from the outset keyed action on it to the war in Korea.

George summed up the tax situation in this way:

1. The Committee "will proceed in a normal, orderly way" to bring the tax bill to a vote in the Senate and send it speedily to President Truman.

2. But "if there is a sudden worsening" of the international situation "we may find it advisable to delay final action on any tax bill at this session of Congress, and then proceed in January with a tax bill."

3. "Under certain circumstances, we may find it necessary to impose much heavier taxes, including taxes on excess profits. But it doesn't look that way right now."

As in the House, Secretary of the Treasury John Snyder was the Finance Committee's first witness.

The Secretary gave limited endorsement to the House-passed measure, but said he would not hesitate to withdraw his endorsement if war developments warranted. However, he urged the Committee to make some changes and improvements in some of the bill's provisions.

His strongest criticism was directed against the House bill's failure to:

1. Lower the tax-advantageous percentage depletion allowances enjoyed by oil and mineral producers; and

2. Revise and strengthen the structure of estate and gift taxes.

For the next week, the Committee heard testimony from a long string of witnesses. Most of the witnesses were persons who had also represented their organizations before the Ways and Means Committee in the House several months before.

This time, with the Finance Committee under pressure to finish up the public hearings in quick order and get the bill ready for floor action, the witnesses were required to abbreviate their testimony. In most cases they simply submitted statements for the record.

After hearing Snyder, the Committee turned at once to the question of excise taxes. As in the House, no one appeared to oppose the excise cuts. All testimony was in support of even greater reductions in the various levies. Here were organizations whose spokesmen addressed pleas on this score (the tax with which they were concerned is also listed):

Asked Excise Cuts

The National Committee for Repeal of Wartime Excise Taxes, wanted general cuts amounting to $2.4 billion. Its chief spokesman was Leon Henderson, wartime head of the Office of Price Administration.

Theatre Owners of America (admissions)

Council of Motion Picture Organizations (admissions)

Association of American Railroads (passenger and freight tax)

United Fresh Fruit and Vegetable Association (transportation tax)

Air Transport Association of America (transportation tax)

National Fur Tax Committee (furs)

National Board of Fur Farm Organizations (furs)

Associated Tobacco Manufacturers (economy-brand cigarettes)

Tax Council of the Alcoholic Beverage Industries (wines, liquors)

National Licensed Beverage Association (wines, liquors)

Wine and Spirits Wholesalers of America Inc. (wines, liquors)

Hotel and Restaurant Employees International Alliance and Bartenders International Union (cabaret tax)

Printing Industry of America (photomechanical film)

United States Independent Telephone Association (communications)

National Association of Photographic Manufacturers, Inc. (photo equipment)

Rubber Manufacturers Association (tires and tubes)

Burley and Dark Leaf Tobacco Export Association (chewing tobacco, smoking tobacco and snuff)

Luggage and Leather Goods Manufacturers of America, Inc. (luggage)

20-Percent Cabaret Tax Committee (cabaret tax)

National Association of Tobacco Distributors. (It wanted floor stock refunds in connection with the House-approved reductions in manufacturers excise taxes.)

Depletion Allowances

On subject of percentage-depletion allowances, the following organizations sent spokesmen to plead for greater grants than had been approved in the House bill:

Independent Petroleum Association of America
Lake Superior Iron Ore Association
American Mining Congress
National Sand and Gravel Association
Midcontinent Oil and Gas Association

No group asked for the lowered depletion allowances President Truman wanted.

The House bill's changes in the tax-exempt status of educational institutions drew opposition from the following:

Harold Stassen, president of the University of Pennsylvania, termed the provision for taxation of unrelated business income of the schools "a thinly veiled attempt to weaken the colleges and universities as a prelude to bringing them under Federal control."

Carter Davidson, tax chairman of the American Council on Education, supported Stassen's arguments.

James B. Killian, president, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, on behalf of the Committee on Financial Support and Taxation of the Association of American Universities, urged that educational institutions be left wholly exempt from taxes, and that taxation of "feeder" organizations be relied upon to stop any abuses of tax-exempt status.

Corporate Tax Rates

Business organizations as a group expressed disapproval of the House's increase in corporation tax rates.

Charles R. Sligh Jr., chairman of the National Association of Manufacturers' tax committee, recommended a complete overhaul of the House bill. He said no tax bill at all would be better than HR 8920. He suggested the substitution of a general manufacturers sales tax of "probably" five per cent, with food exempted and no changes in taxes imposed on alcohol and tobacco. Directing his main criticism at the bill's boost in corporate rates, the NAM spokesman called it "progressive taxation" and said Karl Marx, "the father of communism", had proposed such taxes as a way to communize an advanced capitalist economy.

The Federal Taxation Committee of the Illinois Manufacturers Association wanted the Committee to reject the corporate rate hikes, the withholding tax on dividends, the classification as a capital loss of the loss from the sale or exchange of trade or business property, and the limitation of one year on net operating loss carry-backs.

This stand was generally endorsed by the Machinery and Allied Products Institute, the Commerce and Industry Association of New York, the New York Board of Trade and the Council of State Chambers of Commerce.

The National Lumber Manufacturers Association specifically opposed the withholding tax on corporation dividends.

The American Bar Association said it was opposed to a reduction in the rate of interest on tax refunds.

Taxation of cooperatives and mutual associations on the same basis as corporations was urged upon the Committee by the National Tax Equality Association, while opposition to such taxation was expressed by the National Council of Farmer Cooperatives.

The Central Labor Union and Metal Trades Council of the Panama Canal Zone opposed imposition of federal income taxes on government employees working outside the continental United States.

Committee Shelves House Bill

At the request of the Administration the Finance Committee July 12 shelved the excise-cutting HR 8920 after a week of public hearings. The request came specifically from Secretary Snyder, who said the Treasury could no longer support the measure and asked that it be laid aside in the light of Korean developments.

Following this word from Snyder, the Finance Committee went into executive session and postponed the anticipated tax slash indefinitely, though it left open the possibility that cuts could be revived if the Korean war —which was then going badly—took a sharp turn in favor of the U.N.

The Committee's executive decision was announced July 13 by Committee Chairman Walter F. George (D Ga.) He said no further public hearings would be hold on HR 8920 and that the Committee would next take up social security legislation (HR 6000) for a long series of conferences that would prelude action on anything else for the time being.

New Tax Message

Then, while the Finance Committee marked time on tax legislation pending Korean developments, President Truman July 25 asked Congress for a $5-billion-a-year increase in individual and corporate income taxes to stem inflation and to help finance military costs.

Since he made it clear that his requests were meant to deal with the existing emergency, they became known as the President's "interim" tax program.

The new White House request was made in a letter to Chairman George (D Ga.) of the Finance Committee. The President specifically asked revision and enactment of the still-pending HR 8920. George immediately scheduled a meeting of his Committee for August 2. He predicted Committee action "in a very few days".

President Asks Changes

These three adjustments in the pending bill would provide the necessary new revenue, the President wrote George:

1. Elimination of the excise tax reductions and other revenue-losing provisions, but retention of the loophole-closing, dividend withholding and life insurance company provisions.

2. Adjustment of the bill's revised income tax structure for corporations to effect an increase in the normal corporate rate from 21 to 25 per cent. This would result in a 25 per cent tax on the first $25,000 of a corporation's income and a 45 per cent tax on the balance, the President explained.

3. Addition of a provision increasing individual income tax rates to the "tentative" levels adopted in 1945, by restoring the reductions from those levels made in 1945 and 1948. This, he wrote, would leave unchanged the income-splitting provisions (for husband and wife) and the present personal exemptions of $600 per person of the 1948 law.

Breakdown on Revenue

The Treasury estimated the new corporation taxes, if enacted, would bring in $1.5 billion of the requested new revenue; the individual income tax hikes, another $3 billion, and the loophole closing provisions already written into the pending tax bill by the House, the remaining $500 million required to make up the $5 billion needed to meet new defense costs.

The President said the increased corporate income tax rates should be made applicable beginning with 1950 corporation incomes, as the pending bill required. The individual income tax hikes, he added, should be applicable on one quarter of the individual's 1950 income, beginning Oct. 1. This would require an increase from the existing 15 per cent withholding rate on taxable income to 18 per cent, he said.

The President did not call for an excess profits tax.

Revised Tax Rates

The following tables, prepared by the Treasury Department, show how much taxes Americans would have been required to pay under the President's proposals, as compared with the old rate and the highest wartime tax rate paid in 1944: (The 1950 tax, imposed for only a quarter of a year, shows up smaller than the 1951 tax, when the new rates were to become fully effective)

Reaction to Plan

The following was typical of the reaction to the Truman tax plan:

Sen. George (D Ga.), Finance Committee chairman: "The proposal lends itself to quick action . . . I don't think we could increase taxes for individuals in 1950 except for the last quarter. And I think the Committee is likely to take the same position on increasing corporation taxes."

Sen. Owen Brewster (R Maine), Finance Committee member: "Congress (should) repeal the Truman tax bill of 1946 which knocked out excess profits taxes on corporations."

Senator Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.), chairman of the Joint Committee on the Economic Report, proposed immediate imposition of an excess profits tax on corporations, patterned after the wartime profits measure, adding: "The combination of rapidly rising prices and (the current) all-time peak of corporate profits after taxes seems to indicate the necessity for immediate action to impose at least an excess profits tax."

Committee Acts Anew

The Finance Committee, as planned met Aug. 2 in executive session and began the task of redrafting the House-passed tax bill. From the beginning, it worked, as the House Committee had done, on an item-by-item approach.

In accordance with President Truman's request, the Committee first of all junked all the previously-accepted excise cuts and then voted, instead, to bring two new items — television sets and deep freezers— under excise levies. It also decided to increase the federal charge on slot machines from $100 per machine to $150 apiece.

A 10 per cent excise was imposed at the manufacturers' level on the video screens and deep freezers, which had been untaxed before.

The quick start on the new tax program was made after the Committee heard a new appeal from Secretary Snyder, who spelled out the details of the Presidential recommendations. Among these were requests for the new excise levies and for elimination of the House-inserted additions to depletion allowances.

Snyder's statement emphasized that the $5 billion in new taxes, which the President sought was only "a first step" in tax increases necessary "for defense against unscrupulous destroyers of peace." He said the "interim" request would be followed "by a more comprehensive program to increase very substantially the productiveness of our revenue system."

The Committee Aug. 3 went along with President Truman's request and eliminated from HR 8920 the House-expanded percentage depletion allowances for mining and oil industries.

House Rejects Excess Profits Levy

Meanwhile Aug. 2, on the other side of the capitol, the House Ways and Means Committee had rejected a proposal by Rep. Wilbur D. Mills (D Ark.) for immediate consideration of a tax on excess profits. The vote was 15 to 8 against it.

Efforts to impose such a levy had been gaining support in both the House and Senate ever since the outbreak of the Korean war, which had been followed by a sudden spurt in domestic prices.

In the lower body, the Ways and Means Committee was tossed the issue when Rep. Mills offered a rider to a bill (HR 9246) which was before the Committee providing renegotiation of defense contracts. Mills wanted to require the study of excessive profits and their taxation but the Committee turned him down.

Committee

Some major departures from the President's emergency tax recommendations were made by the Finance Committee as it continued reshaping HR 8920 to produce the requested new revenue for defense.

While the Committee already had done away with the revenue-losing excise cuts, it only partially retained the revenue-producing provisions. It also added new provisions to the bill, most of which subtracted money rather than adding to expectable revenues.

Here is a resume of action taken by the committee before it finally decided upon a measure:

On Aug. 4, the temporary formula for retroactive taxation of life insurance companies' investment income was accepted with some revisions. With respect to the years the taxes would apply, the Committee limited the formula to 1949 and 1950, instead of 1947 through 1950, as the House had wanted. The yield was thus cut from the House's $166 million to about $110 million.

On Aug. 7, the Committee decided to modify the impact of the House's repeal of tax exemptions on unrelated business income of educational, charitable and other organizations. Income from such activities as research by an educational institution or hospital even if done by a private party, was exempted from the new taxes.

Also on Aug. 7, the Committee removed from the bill the House's reduction of tax advantages allowed for the sale or exchange of property used in trade or business. The Committee also removed these features from HR 8920:

The reduction in the interest rate on Treasury refunds for tax overpayments from 6 to 3 per cent; the 10 per cent withholding tax on all corporate dividends; and the new method providing for taxing distributions in liquidation of a foreign corporation more than 50 per cent of the stock of which lay in the hands of five domestic corporations.

Also modified was HR 8920's provision for special taxation of investment income of charitable trusts which were not distributed as dividends two and one-half months after the taxable year in which they were received. The Committee decided, instead, to require the affected organizations to make public their receipts, disbursements and accumulations under rules to be written by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

The House's repeal of permission to deduct for tax purposes gifts of corporations stocks in a tax-exempt organization if the contributor, or his family, controlled the group or organization was dropped.

Corporate Rates Boosted

On Aug. 10, the Committee complied in full with the President's request and unanimously approved the proposed $1.5 billion a year increase in corporation taxes boosting the top corporate rate from 38 per cent to 45 per cent. Turned down, however, was the requested application of the higher rates to all 1950 income on which taxes were payable in 1951. The Committee voted to apply the new tax only to income since July 1, 1950, so that the revenue would be only half as much for 1950 as the full $1.5 billion requested.

Also Personal Rates

On Aug. 11, the Committee decided to increase personal income taxes by about 20 per cent, exactly as President Truman had requested. The new tax, theoretically, was a graduated one. The President had asked for removal of all reductions from the "tentative" tax voted by Congress in 1945 and 1948. The Committee, agreeing, worked out a scheme under which the reductions were partially removed for 1950 and eliminated entirely for 1951. This appeared to show that individuals were saddled with a retroactive tax, payable on the whole year's income. But since the "limited" 1950 increase was made collectible only in the last three months of the year, the full boost for individuals, in effect, began on Oct. 1.

Other Actions

Full exemption was voted for the service pay of enlisted men in the Korean war, and taxes on officers income were reduced.

On Aug. 14, the Committee decided officially against levying an excess profits tax at that time, but instructed its staff to prepare proposals for such a tax effective Jan. 1, 1951. Moreover, it asked its experts to look into the possibilities of an excess profits levy on individual income increases, a national retail sales tax, and a transactions tax.

If the profits tax were applied to individual income, it was held that it might require an average person to pay the government as much as 85 per cent of any future increase in earnings. This was the rate at which corporate excess profits taxes ran in World War II. The Committee refused to disclose who suggested the proposed tax.

On Aug. 15, the Committee agreed to put off consideration of taxes on cooperatives, mutual savings banks and building and loan associations.

Winding up the last phases of the tax measure Aug. 16, the Committee wrote into the proposed law a renewal of the World War II "rapid amortization" plan to induce speedy construction of new arms-producing facilities. The plans specified that an industry which built a plant or began to build one after Dec. 31, 1949, to meet the needs of the armed forces, was permitted to deduct 20 per cent of its total cost in each of the succeeding five years from its gross income before it compute its income taxes.

In another last-minute change, the Committee worked out a 1950 tax-rate schedule for corporations to bring in the same revenue as previously contemplated. For current year purposes only, the top rate on corporations was to be increased from 38 per cent to 42 per cent. The first $25,000 of earnings would be taxed at 23 per cent and the 42 per cent top rate would apply to the remainder. The new top rate to begin in 1951 was left at 45 per cent.

The Committee also decided to levy the transportation excise tax when the movement of persons or freight began or ended in the United States, regardless of where the bill was paid or the ticket purchased. Also voted was a provision allowing newspapers and periodicals the option of deducting circulation costs as business expenses in computing income taxes, or of capitalizing such expenditures if the publisher chooses.

Report

On Aug. 17, the Committee unanimously approved the bill and reported it to the Senate floor. Finance Committee Chairman George said he felt sure the new version of HR 8920 would produce "close" to the requested $5 billion in new revenue. At the same time, he explained that he expected his group to begin considering the President's promised second-installment tax bill by November.

XUM

In virtually every sense HR 8920, as reported by the George group, was a new bill. Starting out, primarily, as a revenue-reducing measure, it came from the Finance Committee a big money producer.

Here is a recapitulation of HR 8920's provisions as the Senate Committee wrote them:

Individual Income Taxes: The Administration's plan with respect to increased individual income taxes was adopted without change.

Corporation Income Taxes: The Committee junked all corporation income tax rate schedules, those in the existing law and those the House wrote into HR 8920. It substituted the following:

For 1950, a 23 per cent "normal" tax on all earnings and a 19 per cent "surtax" on any income over $25,000 a year, making a combined rate of 42 per cent for companies paying their taxes on a calendar year basis.

For 1951 and subsequent years, a 25 per cent "normal" tax and a 20 per cent "surtax" on anything over $25,000 a year.

Accelerated Payments: The Committee accepted the House's speed-up payments plan for faster collection of corporation income taxes.

Trusts And Non-Resident Aliens: The Committee included the House provision eliminating existing installment payment privileges for trusts and certain non-resident aliens.

Excise Tax Changes: The Senate Committee added:

A 10 per cent manufacturers excise levy on television sets and home freezers; a $50 increase in the existing $100 federal operation tax on slot machines; and a provision making tickets bought outside the U. S. for transportation beginning and ending in the U. S. subject to the same excises as those levied on U. S.-bought tickets.

Educational, Charitable And Other Tax—Exempt Organizations: The House provisions pertaining to taxation of such organizations' unrelated business income, the taxation of income of "feeder" firms whose profits go exclusively to tax-exempt groups, and the taxation of rental incomes from property bought by tax-exempt groups with borrowed money were left by the Senate as the House had written them.

A new provision was added requiring annual publication of income, disbursements, and capital accumulations by these tax-exempt groups, substituted for a House provision which had taxed excessive accumulations of investment income.

The Senate also modified what it called the House's "harsh" restrictions against certain profitable transactions between foundations, trusts and similar organizations and the donors, officers or trustees of the outfit.

The Senate struck out entirely a House provision preventing the use of trusts and foundations to retain control of a family business.

Life Insurance Companies: The House plan to tax investment income of life insurance companies was approved, but the Committee limited the taxable years to 1949 and 1950, whereas the House had wanted to tax 1947 through 1950.

House Features Accepted

Other revenue-increasing changes in income taxes which the Senate accepted as the House had written them dealt with the following:

Premiums on tax-exempt bonds held by dealers;

Dividends-received credit for distributions in kind;

Stock redemption by subsidiary corporations;

Capital gains treatment of income from books and other artistic works;

Short sales of capital assets;

Collapsible corporations;

Capital gains of non-resident aliens;

Amortization of premiums on convertible bonds;

United States employees in possessions and Canal Zone; and Tax treatment of Puerto Rican residents.

House Features Rejected

The Committee completely stripped the House bill, without adding substitutes, of revenue-raising provisions to:

Extend existing percentage depletion allowances to a number of additional minerals;

Tax as ordinary income gains resulting from liquidation of domestic corporations of certain foreign subsidiaries;

Treat losses from sale of property used in trade or business as capital losses rather than ordinary losses;

Require corporations to deduct 10 per cent from each dividend payment, to be applied to the recipients' income taxes; and Reduce to 3 per cent from 6 per cent the interest rate paid by the Treasury on refunds of tax overpayments.

"Loophole" Provisions

Other tax adjustments and loophole plugging which the Senate accepted virtually as the House had written them dealt with:

Holding period of capital assets;

Carry-over of business losses;

Property transfers made in contemplation of death;

Estate tax deductions for the support of dependents; and

Liquidation of family corporations to pay estate taxes.

Here are provisions which were written for the first time into the bill by the Committee:

Military personnel: Income of enlisted men and warrant officers in combat zones in Korea was exempted from taxes, while officers were granted a $200-a-month exemption.

Amortization of emergency facilities: To spur expansion of industries turning out war materials, a plan was inserted permitting businessmen to write off for tax purposes the cost of certified war plants and other such property at 20 per cent a year for a five-year period, beginning in 1950. The certifying authority was to be designated by the President.

Employee stock options: A new provision was inserted removing from individual income tax liability the difference between the option price of stock bought in a company by an employee and the stock's fair market value. Instead, if the option price were for at least 90 per cent of the stock's fair market value, any gain in value over 90 per cent was made taxable at capital gains rates if the stock and option were held for a combined total of at least two years, and the stock itself for six months.

Family partnerships: A clause was inserted providing that where there was a real transfer of ownership in a business or piece of property, a gift of a family partnership interest was to be respected for tax purposes without regard to the motives which actuated the transfer.

Liquidations: Distribution of assets of a personal holding company in complete liquidation was authorized to be made with the understanding that only that part of the asset representing accumulated earnings was to be taxed as ordinary income. The remainder was to be taxed on a capital gains basis.

Circulation expenditures: Publishers of newspapers, magazines or other periodicals were allowed to deduct as ordinary expenses expenditures to maintain, establish or increase circulation.

Corporate "spin offs": This provision exempted from taxation the value of new stocks distributed to stockholders by a corporation which decided to "spin off" part of its business into a separate firm. These stocks, previously considered "dividends" for tax purposes, were subject to individual income taxes.

Personal holding companies: Eliminated from personal holding company income retroactively for the years after 1945 and before 1950 were rental incomes for the use of the company's property by persons holding 25 per cent or more of the stock in the firm where the property was used by such persons "in the operation of a bona fide commercial or industrial enterprise."

Regulated Investment Companies: Such companies were permitted to elect to count as distributions during the taxable year certain dividends declared after the close of the year but before the tax return for such a year was actually filed.

Oil Leases: A person leasing oil, gas or mineral rights was authorized to treat the proceeds, if they were received on the basis of physical volume of production, as a capital asset.

Depletion Allowance: The basis for computation of percentage depletion allowances—i.e. "gross income from property" — was expanded to include any amount reflecting costs "before transportation from the place where the last of the processes . . . was applied."

Revenue Effect: As reported, this was the estimated revenue effect of bill on full-year basis (in millions of dollars):

Debate

The debate on HR 8920 opened in the Senate Aug. 24. It continued intermittently for more than a week before final passage came Sept. 1. Ultimate passage of the bill was never in doubt. The only real controversy was the question of adding, or leaving in abeyance for the time being, an excess profits tax. In the end, the latter course was decided upon.

Leading off, Finance Committee Chairman George declared that the tax - boosting bill would be passed without an excess profits levy "or there will be no bill at all."

Spearheading the drive for adding an excess profits levy to the pending bill, instead of waiting until the next bill came along, was Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.) He gained new support from Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.), who attacked it as a "big pork barrell" bill and a "smoke screen" for the relief of wealthy taxpayers. Humphrey said he would support the excess profits proposal.

But George, who had maintained all along that Congress could not risk "throwing a monkey wrench into the economy" by tacking an excess profits levy on to the present bill, answered with the statement that he wanted no part of any "quickie" excess profits tax, and he offered his opinion that a tax "that would be safe, do some good and get some money . . . would take four months of solid study." He promised to fight the O'Mahoney forces on the floor.

O'Mahoney Formula

O'Mahoney, however, pressed on for enactment of the profits levy which he said would yield about $3.5 billion a year. In an apparent move to win new adherents for his plan, O'Mahoney revised downward the top rate that would be imposed on corporation earnings in excess of "normal" profits. Originally set at 100 per cent, the suggested substitute rate was 85 per cent. O'Mahoney said he wanted "to remove any danger that the excess profits tax might adversely affect the incentives to produce."

Under the proposal he was readying for Senate action, the basis of "normal" profits was set at 75 per cent of a corporation's average earnings in 1947, 1948 and 1949, plus $25,000 (it was plus $50,000 if the corporation commenced business after Sept. 1, 1945). Then O'Mahoney suggested applying an excess profits tax of 65 per cent on profits between 1 and 15 per cent above the base period; plus 75 per cent on profits between 15 and 25 per cent above the base; and plus 85 per cent of profits more than 25 per cent above the base.

O'Mahoney offered his profits amendment to the Senate Aug 25, after gaining Tom Connally (D Tex.) as a co-sponsor. O'Mahoney urged adoption, declaring: "This is no time to defer the profit dollar while we are drafting men."

George, still standing staunchly against the O'Mahoney proposal, said if it were accepted, he would try to have the entire bill sent back to Committee for further study, or that he would delay taking it to the House-Senate conference.

Then George suggested the excess-profits tax be put off until the first of 1951, and then made active from the middle of 1950. O'Mahoney demurred, however, saying George's Committee could not back up a promise on a tax matter as all tax bills must originate in the House.

George also said the O'Mahoney amendment was poorly drawn. It would yield only about $30 million in 1950 rather than the $2.7 billion estimated by O'Mahoney, he said. Most large corporations would be by-passed by the O'Mahoney tax scheme, he told the Senate. But O'Mahoney supporters continued to plug for their amendment.

President's Stand

On Aug. 29, Majority Leader Scott W. Lucas (D Ill.) said the President had just said he was opposed to O'Mahoney's amendment. Truman, according to Lucas, thought O'Mahoney's program would be too hard to administer. The President, Lucas reported, had said Congress should rush through the pending $4.5 billion tax bill and then take up excess profits early in 1951.

Then on Aug. 31, George offered a substitute to the O'Mahoney amendment. It called for passage of an excess-profits tax law in 1951 retroactive to either Oct. 1 or July 1, 1950. In the meantime, George told the Senate, his Committee would hold hearings to work out details of the tax.

Sen. Eugene Millikin (R Colo.) strongly supported George.

O'Mahoney insisted such long study was not needed. His amendment, he said, was similar to the World War II excess - profits tax law which "is the finest of experience". Connally said the George - Millikin amendment "is simply a motion to wait, to delay, to sabotage" excess-profits taxation.

However, the George-Millikin amendment was substituted for the O'Mahoney-Connally amendment 42-36 on roll call and then added to the bill on voice vote. Twenty-one Democrats and 21 Republicans voted for the George-Millikin amendment, and 26 Democrats and 10 Republicans voted against it.

Other Amendments Debated

Other amendments drew considerable debate. Sens. Humphrey and Paul Douglas (D Ill.) sponsored—unsuccessfully—a number of proposals to close tax "loopholes" even further.

Brien McMahon (D Conn.) offered an amendment to renew suspension of a two-cent import tax on copper, which expired July 1. His amendment was tabled on a 52-22 roll-call vote after George said discussion of the amendment would "indefinitely delay" action on HR 8920. The motion to table was made by Ernest W. McFarland (D Ariz.), who said copper miners could not be expected to develop the industry unless they had "some assurance of stability of price".

An amendment by Edward J. Thye (R Minn.) to allow sale of breeding or dairy cattle to be taxed as capital gain rather than personal income was adopted 52-13 on roll call. An amendment by Douglas to bar family partnerships for tax avoidance purposes was rejected 18-42 on roll call. An amendment by Humphrey and Douglas striking out provisions reducing the holding period for "long term" capital gains from six to three months was agreed to 37-24 on roll call.

Final Action

On Sept. 1, after all amendments had been settled, the Senate approved its version of HR 8920 on a voice vote.

AMENDMENTS AGREED TO

Walter F. George (D Ga.) and Eugene Millikin (R Colo.) — Direct 1951 Senate Finance Committee and House Ways and Means Committee to draw up retroactive excess-profits tax. Substituted for O'Mahoney-Connally amendment (see below) 42-36 on roll-call vote and then added to the bill on voice vote.

Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.) — Specify that tax-exempt servicemen's pay earned while in combat zone may be received outside of such zone. Voice.

Edward J. Thye (R Minn.) — Permit sale of breeding or dairy cattle to be taxed as capital gain rather than personal income. Roll-call 52-13.

Lester C. Hunt (D Wyo.) — Make liberalized depletion allowance on bentonite mining retroactive through 1947. Voice.

Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.), Paul Douglas (D Ill.), William Langer (R N.D.)—Strike out provision cutting holding period for "long term" capital gains from six to three months. Roll call, 37-24.

Robert S. Kerr (D Okla.) — Modify definition of "restricted stock option". Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.) and Tom Connally (D Tex.) — Add excess-profits tax. Killed when George-Millikin amendment (see above) was substituted for it 42-36 on roll-call vote.

Brien McMahon (D Conn.) — Renew suspension of two-cent import tax on copper. Tabled on 52-22 roll call.

Irving Ives (R N.Y.) — Exempt from taxation first $1,800 of government pensions. Voice.

John J. Williams (R Del.)—Remove certain income tax exemptions of the President, Vice President and Members of Congress. Voice.

Wayne Morse (R Ore.) — Tax certain tax-exempt government securities. Voice.

Douglas, Francis J. Myers (D Pa.) — Increase corporate income tax from the 42 per cent in the bill to 45 per cent. Voice.

A. Willis Robertson (D Va.)—Eliminate certain restrictions on low taxation on "spin offs". Voice.

Humphrey — Ban low taxation on "spin offs". Voice.

Robertson — Ban inheritance taxation on gifts to members of the family made more than three years before the death of the giver (present time limit is 12 years). Voice.

CONFERENCE

Normally, HR 8920 should have gone at once to a House-Senate conference for a reconciliation of the many differences between the separate versions passed by the two chambers.

But a mixture of circumstances, involving the Congressional pre-election rush to recess which was then gathering speed, and the still-going battle of excess-profits tax advocates to get such a levy written into the pending tax bill, delayed the conference for two weeks.

In the meantime, however, conferees representing both the House and the Senate had been informally appointed and by Sept. 13 were "informally" at work on the big measure.

Finally on Sept. 14 a conference was formally agreed to by the House and Senate. First, however, House advocates of the profits tax voted to instruct its conferees to insist upon Congressional action on such a levy before the end of 1950. For its part, the Senate responded by voting to insist upon the George-Millikin plan to delay such action until 1951.

This question of timing on the excess profits issue served further to complicate the conference which, then "officially" constituted, was formally enabled to get down to work.

Conferees were: For the House: Reps. Robert L. Doughton (D N.C.), Jere Cooper (D Tenn.), John D. Dingell (D Mich.), Wilbur D. Mills (D Ark.), Daniel A. Reed (R N.Y.), Roy O. Woodruff (R Mich.) and Thomas A. Jenkins (R Ohio). For the Senate: Walter F. George (D Ga.), Tom Connally (D Tex.), Harry F. Byrd (D Va.), Eugene D. Millikin (R Colo.) and Hugh Butler (R Neb.).

Background of Conference

Here is a recapitulation of the events leading up to the official appointment of the conference:

After Senate passage Sept. 1 of HR 8920, a conference was requested with the lower chamber for reconciliation of the great differences between the versions of the bill passed by the two chambers. Since the tax measure had been amended by the Senate, legislative rules technically required reversion of the bill to the House Ways and Means Committee, which has sole authority to originate revenue measures. Unanimous consent of the House, or a special rule, was therefore necessary before the lower chamber could circumvent the Committee and send the bill straight to conference with the Senate.

Seizing upon this situation as an opportunity to further the idea of immediate excess profits tax legislation, Rep. Herman P. Eberharter (D Penn.), a leading House advocate, objected Sept. 8 when Rep. Doughton (D N.C.) first asked House consent to a conference. Again, Sept. 11, Doughton tried to get consent, but this time, Rep. Stephen M. Young (D Ohio) blocked the move.

Then Doughton went before the House Rules Committee Sept. 12 and asked for a resolution sending the bill to conference by a special rule. This would have required only a majority vote of the House.

On Sept. 13, 31 House Republicans joined the fight for an immediate imposition of an excess profits tax. They issued a joint statement serving notice that they would oppose adjournment of Congress until such a measure had been acted upon.

Those signing the statement were:

Clifford P. Case (N.J.); Walter H. Judd (Minn.); James I. Dolliver (Iowa); John W. Heselton (Mass.); Kenneth B. Keating (N. Y.); Thor C. Tollefson (Wash.); H. Carl Anderson (Minn.); J. Glenn Beall (Md.); Frances P. Bolton (Ohio); Ernest K. Bramblett (Calif.);

Walter E. Brehm (Ohio); Gordon Canfield (N.J.); Robert J. Corbett (Pa.); H. R. Gross (Iowa); Cecil M. Harden (Ind.); Christian A. Herter (Mass.); Walt Horan (Wash.); Jacob K. Javits (N.Y.); Antoni N. Sadlak (Conn.); Bernard W. Kearney (N.Y.);

Showdown Looms

The showdown came Sept. 14, when the Rules Committee's resolution (H Res 842) sending HR 8920 to conference, was brought to the floor.

Rep. Eberharter immediately offered a substitute resolution to send the bill to conference but to require House members of that group to insist upon an excess profits tax rider.

A test of House sentiment on this proposal, however, came on a technicality. The "previous question" was ordered on the original rule, which, if adopted, would have shut off further debate and prevented action on any amendment to it, including a substitute. On the vote, 106 to 226, the House voted down the previous question, permitting action on the Eberharter plan.

Then Speaker Sam Rayburn (D Tex.) ruled the Eberharter amendment out of order on the grounds the proposal involved was not germane to the pending bill since neither the House nor the Senate had voted for a profits tax.

But Eberharter offered another substitute resolution. This time he proposed that the House instruct its conferees to accept the George-Millikin plan with an amendment requiring preparation of an excess profits bill "as soon as practicable" before the end of the 81st Congress. This substitute also would have permitted a conference on the bill as a whole.

The vote on Eberhart's second resolution was 331 to 2 in favor of it, but this was seen as an unreliable test of support for the excess profits tax. Rep. James G. Fulton (R Pa.) pointed out, just before the vote, that "any member that wants this bill to go to conference should vote for the gentlemen's amendment."

Senate Resists Resolution

The Senate received the Eberharter resolution at once, but, upon a motion by Sen. George, disagreed to the House's new timing suggestion with respect to excess profits taxation. Thus, with the House unwilling to accept the Senate plan until it was changed, and the Senate unwilling to make any changes, the issue was thrown squarely into the laps of the conferees.

In view of this, the conferees worked literally day and night to finish up the measure. In an unusual Sunday session Sept. 17, the conferees agreed to sidestep the profits issue in the pending tax bill. But they decided to instruct the House Ways and Means and the Senate Finance Committees thusly:

Final Formula

To be ready with a profits tax measure as soon as possible after Nov. 15, providing Congress was in session some time after then to act on the tax, or

To report out a profits tax as early as possible in 1951 if the 81st Congress did not meet again before the 82nd Congress was convened.

In either case, the conferees stipulated that the excess profits tax had to be retroactive to at least a part of 1950.

The main revenue-raising sections, calling for increases in personal and corporation income taxes, were never in dispute. The greatest reconciliation endeavors were required of the conferees on the various provisions closing "loopholes" and making miscellaneous changes in existing tax laws.

The conferees reached a final agreement after breaking a 24-hour deadlock over the last disputed issues in the following manner:

1. They threw out a House-inserted 10 per cent withholding levy on corporation dividends, which they had approved only the day before.

2. They discarded another controversial provision, inserted by the Senate, dealing with the manipulation of family business partnerships for the purpose of avoiding taxes. House conferees had contended the proposal opened the way for some persons to take their minor children into their businesses as partners and thereby reduce their income taxes.

3. They made an about-face on the taxation of investment income of life insurance companies. After agreeing Sept. 19 to tax this heretofore-untaxed income retroactively to 1948, the conferees agreed that the companies should be taxed only for the years 1949 and 1950, as the Senate wanted, for an estimated yield of about $122 million. The House had wanted the companies taxed for 1947, 1948, 1949 and 1950, for a yield of about $176 million.

4. Last of all, they knocked out a disputed Senate provision providing the favorable capital gains treatment for leases of oil and mineral rights if the lease were made on the basis of a share in production.

Final Action

The conferees on Sept. 20 dotted the last "i" and crossed the last "t" and reported their compromise to the Senate. (For provisions, see page 573.) Both the House and Senate approved the compromise Sept. 22, sending the measure to the White House. Both votes were top-heavy in the affirmative. The House tally was 328 to 7, while the Senate agreed by a voice vote in which no opposition was expressed.

LAW ENACTED

President Truman lost no time in getting the measure on the law books. He signed it on Sept. 23 and it became Public Law 814. The signing was accompanied by neither ceremony nor comment.

LOBBY STANDS

One of the biggest pressure campaigns during 1950 was the push for excise tax repeal. It proved both fruitful and futile.

Built up steadily since the end of World War II, the excise lobby pressures bore fruit in big quantities when the House reported out its 1950 tax bill. HR 8920, in early June. At that time, the bill carried more than $1 billion in excise slashes, representing cuts in virtually every commodity that supported an excise tax.

But hardly had the measure reached the House floor when the Korean war threw the nation into new throes of defense activity and spending. Out went the excise tax repeals. In came even greater excise levies. And the excise lobby then fell silent for the first time in nearly five years.

A round up of pre - Korean lobby pressures follows:

National Group Formed

Heaviest campaigning on the excise tax issue came from a nationwide organization formed as the National Committee for the Repeal of Wartime Excise Taxes. It announced its formation Dec. 26, 1949. Representing "all of the 27 industries affected" by wartime excises, it sent Congressmen letters and brochures presenting its case. Full page ads in newspapers called for repeal of the levies of 1941, 1942, 1943 "completely" and "now."

Legislative representatives for the Committee were General Counsel Wilson W. Wyatt, former national housing administrator and Secretary H. Leigh Whitelaw, managing director, Gas Appliance Manufacturers Association.

Membership included these firms:

Bulova Watch Company, B. F. Goodrich Co., General Telephone Company, American Airlines, Inc., Decca Records, Inc., Swank, Inc., Elgin National Watch Company, Bristol-Myers Company. Greyhound Corporation, Eastman Kodak Company, United Paramount Theatres Inc., Radio Corporation of America, Transcontinental & Western Airlines, Inc., Underwood Corporation, Loew's Inc., Twentieth Century Fox Film Corporation, Columbia Records, Inc., Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., Remington Rand, Inc., and Capital Airlines, Inc.

Assertions made in the Committee slate sent Congressmen included:

1. The wartime excises are "discriminatory and unfair."

2. They hurt business and cause unemployment.

3. Congress "has a moral commitment" to end the taxes.

4. The wartime excises "bite" more people and businesses "than any other (tax) without exception".

5. The term "luxury taxes" is false, since the levies "were not imposed on 'luxuries' ".

6. Only complete repeal can be effective.

7. These are "bad taxes" because they are on gross revenues and not on net profits.

Also sent legislators by the Committee were copies of a "memorandum" to the group from Beardsley Ruml, who developed arguments for immediate repeal of the levies. Ruml, chairman of the board of the Jewelry Research Foundation, was author of the "pay-as-you-go" income tax plan.

Favoring General Repeal

Among groups which went on record for wartime excise tax repeal in general (including also those which advocated certain limitations on repeal):

CIO — repeal of all non-regulatory excises.

AFL — termed wartime excises "breach of faith with the American people" and "strangling" business and employment.

Chamber of Commerce of the U. S.

U. S. Junior Chamber of Commerce

Michigan Junior Chamber of Commerce.

National Farmers Union

American Farm Bureau Federation — limit excises to amusements, luxuries, liquor, tobacco.

National Federation of Independent Business

Conference of American Small Business Organizations — retain liquor, tobacco, gasoline and amusement taxes.

American Taxpayers Association, Inc. — reduce excises to prewar levels on cosmetics, telephone and telegraph, transportation, luggage.

National Federation of Small Business, Inc. — counted excises among tax "inequalities".

National Council of Salesmen's Organizations

National Associated Businessmen, Inc.

Repeal Communications Tax

Western Union Telegraph Co.

Commerical Telegraphers Union (AFL)

American National Livestock Association

National League of Wholesale Fresh Fruit and Vegetable Distributors

Repeal Cabaret Tax

American Hotel Association

20% Cabaret Tax Committee

American Federation of Musicians (AFL)

Repeal Photography Taxes

The Photographers' Association of America — wanted repeal of the 15 to 25 per cent manufacturers excise on photographer's "tools of the trade". Photographic businesses said a sizable share of their equipment investment was in excise taxes.

Repeal Transportation Taxes

Groups which supported repeal of passenger and freight taxes included:

Association of American Railroads
American Society of Travel Agents
National Association of Travel Officials
U. S. Members of the Caribbean Commission
American National Livestock Association
Bureau of Salesmen's National Association
National Wool Growers Association
National Council of Farmer Cooperatives
Southeast Shippers Advisory Board
Eastern Railroads
Central Western Shippers Advisory Board
Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen
National Canners Association
Federation for Railway Progress
Alaska Air Transport Association
Air Transport Association of America.

Repeal Auto and Gasoline Excises

Groups for repeal of one or more of excises affecting highway users included:

American Automobile Association — wanted repeal of all automotive excise taxes, especially gasoline tax. Cost of road building should not be unduly borne by said vehicle owners.

Automobile Manufacturers Association — wanted repeal or reduction of excises on auto products.
American Petroleum Institute
Rubber Manufacturers Association
Committee to Remove Discriminatory Automotive Excise Tax
National Grange — urged repeal of "all federal automotive and related excise taxes".
National Highway Users Conference — listed eight taxes on highway users it wanted repealed. Said all use and franchise taxes on highway users should be reserved exclusively for the states.
National Association of Motor Bus Operators — an affiliate of National Highway Users Conference, endorsed the latter's statement on excise repeal.

Repeal Luxury Tax

Among groups urging repeal of excises on furs, jewelry, luggage, cosmetics, etc., were:

National Authority for the Ladies Handbag Industry
National Association of Retail Druggists
National Fur Tax Committee
Jewelry Industry Tax Committee
National Hairdressers and Cosmetologists Association, Inc.
Toilet Goods Association
Luggage and Leather Goods Manufacturers of America
National Retail Dry Goods Association
American National Fur Breeders Association
Retail Merchants Association of Texas
Michigan State College Spartan Wives Club (war veterans' wives)
New York State Safe Deposit Association
Jewelry Industry Tax Committee of Jewelers Vigilance Committee, Inc.
Playthings, Jewelry, and Novelty Workers International Union (CIO)
Beauty and Barber Supply Institute, Inc.
Beauty and Barber All-Industry Legislative Council
National Beauty and Barber Manufacturers' Association
Toilet Goods Association
Jewelry Research Foundation, Inc.
Associated Fur Coat Manufacturers and Trimmers
American Retail Federation—wanted tax repeal on items other than liquor and tobacco. Said it would not seek repeal on the "traditional taxes".

General Tax Pressures

On Feb. 27, 1950, a new committee was formed on the tax lobby front. It was called the National Committee to Limit Federal Taxing Powers. Hosts at the organization meeting were eight Republican Congressmen — Reps. Ralph W. Gwinn (N.Y.), Carl T. Curtis (Neb.), August H. Andresen (Minn.), Fred L. Crawford (Mich.), John Phillips (Calif.), William M. McCulloch (Ohio), Ralph Harvey (Ind.) and John P. Saylor (Pa.).

In addition, 74 private persons from 20 states were present at the initial gathering. The Committee announced the membership represented a "cross section of American life including housewives, doctors, small manufacturers, lawyers, retailers, realtors, educators and property owners."

The Committee also announced it would lobby and work on the local level in the United States "to secure the adoption of an amendment to the United States Constitution that will place a definite limitation upon federal taxing, spending, lending and borrowing powers, which limitation shall be related to the annual national income."

Others Ask Limitations

Likewise, the Federated Property Owners of Detroit wrote Congressmen asking that they "demand a ceiling limit on income tax." They also declared, "Taxation without limitation" is worse than "taxation without representation."

The Committee for Constitutional Government circulated about the country a "challenge to action" which bore this message: "If you feel that a constitutional limit should be set on the power of Congress to tax and to spend except in war time, act to have your state join the movement for a constitutional amendment. Ponder! Propose! Press for action!"

Labor View

The United Automobile Workers (CIO), on the other hand, wrote in its publication "Ammunition", which was circulated to Congressmen, that "if taxes were reduced the way the tax propagandists want, most people would make just about as much progress as they would in a car without gas or oil."

The UAW analyzed taxes as being twofold — those charged by the government, "which are pretty reasonable", and those charged by the "big business monopolies, which are far too high." It added: "On government taxes you have taxation with representation ... So far as the tax corporations levy on you, you have taxation without representation".

Excise Tax Repeal Moves

HR 3905

SUMMARY

HR 3905, a relatively minor bill passed by the House in 1949 giving the Internal Revenue Commissioner power to subpena witnesses and evidence in cases involving revocation of industrial alcohol permits, remained unenacted at the end of 1950. But although it failed to become law, it was the center of a Senate controversy because of an excise-tax-reducing rider attached to it by the Senate Finance Committee, an action also taken in 1949. (CQ Almanac, Vol. V, p. 739.)

Before the 1950 session ended, the controversial rider had been tossed out in the Senate, and the remainder of the legislation never emerged from a joint conference committee.

The Senate voted, 35 to 45, on Jan. 19, 1950, against considering the bill as long as the excise tax issue went along with it. Eight months later, on Aug. 8, the Senate went back to the bill and agreed, on a voice vote, to throw out the disputed rider altogether. Then it passed the bill, also by voice, and sent it to conference with the House.

As thus cleared in the Senate, the bill did nothing more than grant the House-approved subpena. powers to the IRC. But the Senate also made some technical changes, which thus required concurrence by the House.

But in conference, HR 3905 got caught in a last-minute log-jam of minor bills that were overlooked because of more pressing matters, and when the 81st Congress closed, HR 3905 still had not become law.

BACKGROUND

Passed by voice vote and without debate in the House June 20, 1949, HR 3905 was sent to the Senate. There, in the Finance Committee, it became a vehicle for an amendment sponsored by Sen. Edwin C. Johnson (D Colo.), which would have cut an estimated $670 million off revenues from wartime excise taxes.

Here was the schedule of tax reductions proposed in the rider:

	Present	Proposed
1. Amusement tickets	1c on 5c	1c on 10c
2. Electric bulbs	20%	5%
3. Jewelry furs, toilet preparations	20%	10%
4. Luggage and handbags	20%	10%
5. Long distance phone	25%	20%
6. Local telephone	15%	10%
7. Telegrams & leased wires	25%	15%
8. Travel tickets	15%	10%
9. Photo equipment	25%	10%
10. Camera film	15%	10%

Cabaret and liquor taxes would not be affected by the rider.

The Finance Committee vote on this proposal taken on June 30, was 7 to 6. The measure was then reported July 11, but received no action before the 1949 adjournment.

SENATE

The second session had been underway just over two weeks when Harry P. Cain (R Wash.) moved Jan. 18, 1950, to set aside the business then pending in the Senate (HR 1234, amending the Hatch Act, see p. 384) in favor of HR 3905. After perfunctory debate action on the Cain motion was delayed until the next day.

Senate Democrats rallied Jan. 19 to support Majority Leader Scott W. Lucas (D Ill.) in his opposition to Cain's plan. Lucas argued that the "sole question before the Senate is simply whether the majority party, duly constituted and organized, shall be permitted to carry out the obligations and duties of the Senate in the way the majority believes is best for the Senate and the country . . . (or) whether a senator on the (minority) side can take the leadership away from the majority party."

He urged the Senate to delay modification of excise taxes until after President Truman's submission of his then-awaited tax message. (See p. 000.) He added that the Senate would have ample opportunity to take up HR 3905 later.

Lucas was supported in his appeal by Sens. Johnson of Colorado and Walter F. George (D Ga.), chairman of the Finance Committee. Cain's motion was endorsed by Sens. John J. Williams (R Del.) and Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.)

The Cain motion to consider immediately HR 3905 was then defeated on a strictly party-line vote of 35 to 45. Pat McCarran (Nev.) was the only Democrat voting with the minority.

Rider Deleted

On Aug. 8, the Senate returned to HR 3905. Finance Committee Chairman George (D Ga.) asked the Senate to drop the excise rider "in view of the fact that the tax bill now before the Finance Committee deals with excise taxes and the Senate will have an opportunity to vote them up or down."

He referred to HR 8920 which started out in the House as a bill slicing $1 billion off excise tax rates but which, because of the Korean war, was amended later in the Senate to increase, instead of decrease, excise rates and add billions more to all income taxes. (See p. 573.)

The Senate responded to George's request by deciding on a voice vote to throw out the excise repeal rider. And on another voice vote, it agreed to final passage of the bill as it was originally written, plus a few technical changes requiring House concurrence.

CONFERENCE

Conference committeemen were appointed.

They never reached a decision on HR 3905, however. It remained unreported at the end of the 81st Congress.

An earlier attempt had been made in the Senate to force consideration of excise reductions when Hugh Butler (R Neb.) Jan. 18 offered an excise-cutback amendment to the then-pending oleomargarine tax repeal legislation (HR 2023). This amendment was opposed by Majority Leader Lucas and Finance Committee Chairman George on virtually the same grounds they later raised against the Cain move to cut the levies. They said the oleo bill was not the proper vehicle for the excise repeal issue and that the latter should later be considered separately.

Successfully offered as a rider to a substitute for the oleomargarine tax bill, the Butler amendment was finally rejected when the substitute itself was defeated on a roll-call vote of 37 to 48. (See p. 80.)

HJ Res 371

A third futile attempt to bring the excise tax issue to an early showdown vote was made by Republicans in the House Jan. 26. This attempt was sponsored by Rep. Joseph W. Martin Jr. (R Mass.), minority floor leader.

He sought to attach an excise-repeal rider to a tax measure (H J Res 371) affecting investment income levies on insurance companies. The rider would have repealed or reduced the wartime excise levy on furs, jewelry, transportation, etc., but would not have affected the liquor tax.

Rep. Jere Cooper (D Tenn.) raised a point of order, contending the pending bill. Rep. Albert Gore (D Tenn.), the presiding officer, sustained Cooper.

Panama Canal

HR 8677—P.L. 841

SUMMARY

Based on recommendations of the President and the Budget Bureau, and introduced in the House on May 31, 1950, by Chairman Edward J. Hart (D N.J.) of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, HR 8677 provided for the separation of the business and governmental functions of the Panama Canal Zone.

Henceforth, under the terms of the bill as it became law, business operations will be handled by a Panama Canal Company, and governmental functions by the Canal Zone Government. Each organization will be headed by the Governor of the Canal Zone, serving in a dual capacity.

The House passed HR 8677 by voice vote on Aug. 24. The Senate passed it—with changes—by unanimous consent on Sept. 13. The House assented to the Senate's alterations by voice vote on Sept. 15, clearing the measure to the White House, where President Truman signed it into law on Sept. 26.

Provisions

In addition to the above, HR 8677 provided that the board of the Panama Canal Company, which would succeed the Panama Railroad Company, would operate and maintain the waterway and railroad, and have authority to establish toll rates after hearings, subject to the President's approval. It would retain and use toll revenues in its operations, receiving federal appropriations only where necessary to cover losses resulting from changed conditions. The company would be required to reimburse any such appropriations to the U. S. Treasury out of subsequent earnings.

The law provided a new formula designed to put operation of the Canal on a self-sustaining basis. It provided that tolls would be expected to cover the "going" rate, then about 2.3 per cent, on the capital investment in the Canal, current operating costs of the Canal, and about one half of the net costs of civil government, health and sanitation.

The rest of the cost of civil government was to be borne by other business activities, such as hotels, commissaries, etc.

The law specified that a fair share of the costs, including interest and depreciation, of operating the Canal be allocated to national defense. In this process, the value of properties "properly allocable to national defense" would be excluded from the interest base, the company would be compensated for the cost of transiting military and government vessels through the Canal and the armed forces would pay for other services, such as school facilities.

BACKGROUND

In 1947, the House Appropriations Committee decided Panama Canal Tolls should be increased to help pay for increased costs of operations. In 1948, the President issued a proclamation (No. 2775) increasing tolls from 90 cents to $1 per ton for laden vessels, to become effective Oct. 1, 1948. The $1 toll was the maximum authorized by the Panama Canal Act of 1937.

The shipping industry protested the proclamation and Congress decided to review the tolls policy question. The effective date of the increase was postponed twice while a sub-committee of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries conducted hearings in the spring of 1949.

During the hearings the shipping industry argued against increasing Panama Canal tolls and said the cost of canal construction should be written off as a national defense expenditure. They urged elimination of the practice of figuring in the toll charge an interest rate of 3 per cent on the capital investment in the Canal. They also opposed allowing U. S. Government ships free passage through the Canal.

Pros and Cons

The Government of the Panama Canal argued for an increase in tolls to compensate for higher operating costs, and advocated showing receipts on the books of free tolls to government ships. The CIO Maritime Committee said that commercial shipping, in its payment of tolls, should not be paying for schools and post offices in the canal area. A former governor of the Canal urged that American ships should pay tolls while the vice-chairman of the Maritime Commission argued they should not.

It was pointed out that at one time American ships were exempt from paying tolls but this provision was later changed when Great Britain contended that exemption for American ships was a violation of the Hay-Pauncefote Treaty. The Association of American Railroads advocated an increase in tolls. A representative of the Canal Zone's U. S. employees urged streamlining operation of the Canal to eliminate waste. If this were done, he said, no increase in tolls would be necessary. (For additional 1949 lobby stands, see CQ Almanac, Vol. V, Page 760.)

The subcommittee found that during World War II a military government had been superimposed on the Canal Zone Government and that the Governor had reported to the military commander. The committee decided the canal operation was a civilian task and that it was built primarily for commercial transportation rather than for defense. The subcommittee reported that proper toll policy could not be decided upon until defense measures were separated from commercial capital costs and operating expenses of the Canal.

Increase Postponed

As a result of a recommendation from the subcommittee, the President postponed the effective date of Proclamation No. 2775 until April 1, 1950, and directed the Bureau of the Budget on Aug. 25, 1949, to make a study of canal reorganization.

Then, on Jan. 31, 1950, President Truman embodied the Bureau's recommendations in a reorganization plan he submitted Congress. In an accompanying letter, Mr. Truman said he approved all the Bureau's original recommendations except the proposed transfer of canal supervisory powers from the Secretary of the Army to the Secretary of Commerce.

To enable Congress to study his proposed reorganization plan, Mr. Truman on March 6 again postponed until April 1, 1951, the effective date for increasing Panama Canal tolls.

HOUSE

Committee

Chairman Edward J. Hart (D N.J.) of the House Merchant Marine Committee introduced HR 8677—based on the President's plan—on May 31. He appointed a subcommittee to study it, and named as members Reps. Donald L. O'Toole (D N.Y.), Clark W. Thompson (D Tex.), Victor Wickersham (D Okla.), William Barrett (D Pa.), Tom Fugate (D Va.), Alvin Weichel (R Ohio), Edward T. Miller (R Md.) and Franklin H. Lichtenwalter (R Pa.).

When the group held hearings June 26-8, the National Federation of American Shipping urged that the bill stipulate that at least one half the cost of building and improving the Canal be charged to national defense, and not be included in the figuring of toll rates. The Bureau of the Budget argued that interest on the entire capital investment in the Canal should be assessed against tolls.

On Aug. 16, the bill was reported, after the Committee had amended it by placing a rate limit of $1 per net vessel-ton.

Another committee amendment provided that interest during construction endeavors should be excluded from the capital base for interest to be included in the tolls base. This was considered to constitute the defense value of the Canal.

Debate

On Aug. 24, when the House took up the bill, Rep. John E. Rankin (D Miss.) offered an amendment which would have exempted U. S. ships from paying tolls on the Canal. He argued that the American taxpayer built the Canal, and should not have to pay to use it.

Rep. Hart replied the amendment would violate a treaty with Great Britain, and Rankin's amendment was rejected by a voice vote. Rankin then moved to recommit the bill, with instructions that it be resubmitted with his amendment added.

The House shouted down this motion, too. But Rankin said a quorum was not present, and secured a simultaneous quorum call and roll-call ballot on his motion.

For the third time, the House disapproved Rankin's proposal, the last time by a vote of 330-20. The House then went on to approve HR 8677 by a voice vote.

SENATE

Committee

HR 8677, as passed by the House, was referred to the Senate Committee on Armed Services on Aug. 25, and Sen. Harry F. Byrd (D Va.) was appointed a subcommittee of one to conduct hearings.

Byrd conducted hearings on Sept. 1. The bill was recommended by the Defense Dept., the Secretary of the Army, the Bureau of the Budget, the Governor of the Panama Canal, the Steamship Owners Association, and by the Association of American Railroads after the arbitrary ceiling for toll rates had been eliminated.

Senator Byrd said testimony of representatives of the Bureau of the Budget indicated that under prevailing conditions, application of the bill, as amended, would probably result in a tolls rate of about 95 cents per vessel-ton, which would produce additional revenues of $1,400,000 a year if Canal traffic continued to average 28,000,000 tons a year.

After the hearings, the bill was reported to the Senate on Se t. 8, minus the House amendent which had placed a limit of $1 per net vessel-ton on the toll rate.

Final Action

The measure was entered on the Senate's consent calendar, and passed the upper chamber Sept. 13. There was no significant debate.

Because the Senate had deleted a House-approved feature, the bill had to be returned to the lower chamber. The House, however, assented to the Senate's change on Sept. 15, thus clearing the legislation to the White House.

LAW ENACTED

President Truman signed HR 8677 into law on Sept. 26.

Internal Revenue Code

HR 5486—P. L. 448

The Senate took up this measure Feb. 10 and passed it by voice vote after a discussion lasting only a few minutes. It was passed in the House by voice Oct. 14, 1949 (CQ Almanac, Vol. V, p 739), and permits the use of stamp machines for payment of taxes on distilled spirits. Also, it modifies tax provisions concerning loss allowances for distilled spirits. Reported by the Senate Finance Committee Jan. 6, 1950, the bill was termed a "streamlining" measure. President Truman signed the bill Feb. 21.

Natural Gas Amendments

HR 1758—VETOED

SUMMARY

Legislation spelling out the exemption of independent gatherers and producers of natural gas from jurisdiction of the Federal Power Commission under Section 1 (b) of the Natural Gas Act of 1938 succeeded in passing both the Senate and House by narrow margins during the 81st Congress, but it was vetoed by President Truman on April 15, 1950.

Identical bills to exempt certain producers were introduced in the first session of the 81st Congress by Rep. Oren Harris (D Ark.), author of HR 1758, and Sens. Robert Kerr and Elmer Thomas, Oklahoma Democrats, who authored S 1498 in the Senate.

The bills were both drawn to "clarify" the 1947 Supreme Court decision in the so-called Interstate Case which had aroused speculation as to whether the FPC might not begin regulating "arm's length" sales between producers and gatherers of natural gas.

("Arm's length" sales are transactions between two parties which are not linked through ownership or control, and which do not violate the Sherman Anti-trust Act.)

When the House first passed HR 1758 on August 5, 1949, there was little controversy preceding the 183-131 vote. (See CQ Almanac, Vol. V, Pages 717-721). The easy success of the measure in the House, coupled with an increasing fear in Northern and Eastern cities that the legislation might result in higher prices for natural gas to consumers, prompted a wave of protests to the Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee. Accordingly, this group was only able to complete hearings before adjournment of the first session.

Wave of Protests

By March, 1950, the protests had increased to such proportions that two weeks of debate were touched off in the Senate. Then, on March 29, the measure passed by a margin of only six votes, on a ballot of 44-38.

Final passage came after an amendment was added in the Senate by proponents in an effort to make the bill more palatable. The amendment required FPC to keep a running check on the production of natural gas, reporting any unfair competition to the President and the Congress for action.

Despite the amendment, the efforts of many Northern and Eastern mayors and civic groups made themselves felt in the House, and on March 31, the measure passed by a margin of only two votes, 176-174, after Speaker Sam Rayburn (D Tex.) took the floor in its behalf.

Protests against the bill were now directed to the "Little White House" in Key West, Fla., where President Truman was vacationing. Telegrams, both pro and con, poured into Key West. On April 15, the President returned to Washington and vetoed the bill, stating that the foreclosure of FPC regulation of natural gas sales to interstate pipeline companies for resale in interstate commerce would not be in the national interest.

Reasons for Veto

The peculiar characteristics of the natural gas business, his veto message pointed out, impose limitations upon effective competition among sellers. The message also stated that the phenomenal growth of demands for natural gas, coupled with the price advantage it had at that time, indicated the demand might soon be pressing hard upon total supplies. (For details of this situation, see Page 717, CQ Almanac, Vol. V.)

'Under these circumstances, there is a clear possibility that competition will not be effective, at least in some cases, in holding prices to reasonable levels," President Truman said. "To remove the authority to regulate, as this bill would do, does not seem to be wise public policy."

The President's veto was received with surprise by the proponents of the bill, including Speaker Rayburn. The proponents indicated they had been led to believe the bill would not be vetoed.

Those who had fought the measure, such as Sen. Paul Douglas (D Ill.) greeted the veto with obvious delight. He told reporters, "God bless the President of the United States."

No attempt was made to override.

Provisions

HR 1758 would have provided that:

1. The FPC would have no power under terms of the Natural Gas Act of 1938 to regulate prices of arm's length sales of natural gas made by one independent producer or gatherer to another.

2. The FPC would have no power to regulate prices in transactions between an independent producer and an operator of interstate transmission facilities, provided neither had a controlling interest in the other.

3. The FPC would have authority for a continuing study to determine whether gas prices or supplies were being affected adversely by lack of competition among gas producers. If the Commission determined the flow of natural gas into interstate commerce was being, or would be, unduly retarded, it was to report to the President and the Congress its conclusions and recommendations for remedial action.

BACKGROUND

Congressional efforts to keep producers and gatherers of natural gas free from Federal control originated in 1947 following the U. S. Supreme Court decision in the Interstate Case (Interstate Natural Gas Co., Inc. v. Federal Power Commission.) This case aroused speculation as to whether the Court might not permit FPC to regulate "arm's length" sales of natural gas to the pipeline companies, under its regulatory powers as outlined in Section 1 (b) of the Natural Gas Act of 1938.

Largely because of the speculation and confusions prevailing, efforts were made in Congress to seek clarification. Demands were heard for legislation which would specifically exempt independent natural gas producers from FPC regulation.

Action in 80th Congress

Two bills to this effect were introduced in the House and Senate on July 1, 1947, by Rep. Ross Rizley (R Okla.), and the late Sen. E. H. Moore (R Okla). A similar but less far-reaching measure with the same goal was introduced on July 7 by Rep. Percy Priest (D Tenn.).

The FPC unanimously supported the Priest bill, but the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee reported out the Rizley bill. (See CQ Almanac. Vol. IV, P. 355.) The House passed the bill in August, 1947, but the Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee voted 9-4 not to report the Moore-Rizley bill.

In the absence of legislation clarifying the Court decision, the FPC issued Order No. 139 on August 7, 1947, so there would be no doubt regarding its future position on exempting the producers and gatherers of natural gas.

This rule asserted: "The Commission gives its assurance to independent producers and gatherers of natural gas that they can sell at arm's length and deliver such gas to interstate pipelines and can enter into contracts for such sale without apprehension that in so doing they may become subject to the assertions of jurisdiction by the Commission under the Natural Gas Act."

FPC Opposes in 1949

Legislation introduced in the 81st Congress to clarify the Court decision, however, met opposition from the FPC itself. Commissioner Leland Olds had changed his attitude and he, with Commissioners Thomas Buchanan and Claude L. Draper, opposed legislations exempting producers and gatherers.

In a statement to the House and Senate Committees in 1949, the three FPC commissioners said, "The proposed (Harris-Kerr-Thomas) amendments would change the entire situation and afford dominant producers of natural gas an opportunity to increase prices practically at will, subject only to the ceilings imposed by prices of other fuels."

Two other commissioners — Harrington Wimberly and Nelson Lee Smith — said they would support legislation if its application were clearly limited to the independent producer and gatherer.

Despite the opposition of a majority of the FPC, the House passed HR 1758 by Rep. Oren Harris (D Ark.) in the first session of the 81st Congress on Aug. 5, 1949, by a vote of 183-131. Three amendments were rejected and a motion to recommit was defeated (See CQ Almanac, Vol. V, P. 717-721.)

A subcommittee of the Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee was later appointed, with Sen. Lyndon B. Johnson (D Tex.) as chairman. Hearings were held in 1949 on the Senate version of the bill, S 1498, which was introduced by Sens. Kerr and Thomas. Before adjournment, the Senate committee reported the measure favorably, 7-5. (Almanac Vol. V, 717-721.)

SENATE

On March 16, the Senate began two weeks of debate on S 1498, which proponents maintained was legislation "necessary to eliminate confusions which exist in the Federal Power Commission and in the natural gas industry."

Early in debate, lines were clearly drawn between the Senators representing the seven "natural gas states" of Texas, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Louisiana, California, Kansas, and Mississippi who supported the measure and those from Northern and Eastern states lying at the end of a natural gas pipeline.

Kerr Leads Debate

The confusion over the regulatory powers of the FPC on the producer stemmed, Sen. Kerr told the Senate, from the Supreme Court decision of 1947. Since that time, according to Kerr, the Commission had been undecided as to whether or not it could regulate producers of gas. Kerr said his natural gas amendment would simply restate Congress' original intent in 1938: that the producer or gatherer would not be regulated.

"The independents are not dealing in interstate commerce and therefore cannot be regulated," Sen. Kerr said.

Even with the passage of the bill, Sen. Kerr said, the FPC would still have full authority to veto any contract for the purchase of gas in interstate commerce. If the FPC believed an operator was asking unreasonable prices, Kerr maintained, it could veto the contract of the pipeline company.

Johnson Strong Backer

Another strong proponent of the bill, Sen. Lyndon B. Johnson (D Tex.), who was chairman of the Commerce subcommittee which studied the legislation, claimed that the efforts of Senators to reduce the price of gas to the consumer was being directed to the wrong end of the natural gas business.

"The producer sells his gas for an average of five cents per thousand cubic feet in southwestern states; the householder pays $1.25 for that gas. If the consumer needs more protection, he needs more than 5 cents worth. The price we pay for gas burned in our homes is primarily the cost of transportation and service," Sen. Johnson said.

Johnson charged that two of the biggest groups of opponents to the bill were 1) the big industrial gas customers who want to keep their fuel costs at a low level, and 2) the coal "trust" which Johnson said wanted to make the sale of natural gas so unprofitable that its competition with coal will be reduced.

"Special Interests" Charged

But opponents of the legislation in the Senate made charges about "special interests" in the oil and gas business, which would stand to benefit from exemption from federal control.

Senator James P. Kem (R Mo.) maintained that the "small producer of the southwest is just a smoke screen behind which the big gas and oil companies, some of them from the Southwest but the majority from Wall Street, are attempting to hold up the American people for at least one hundred million dollars a year."

Kem claimed that, under existing contracts, by 1952 only 35 producers will sell 72 percent of all the natural gas sold in interstate commerce, and 12 of these will sell more than half the total.

"Of these, three are Standard Oil companies and the others are controlled by such families as Phillips, Pew, Mellon, and the royal house of Netherlands," Kem said.

"If the Federal Power Commission is to be effective," Kem maintained, "it must have authority to regulate wholesale sales in interstate commerce all the way down the line, from the first to the last. It cannot successfully regulate the price the last time the gas is sold to the local company if it cannot also regulate the price paid for the gas the first time it passes into the pipeline and at all intermediate points."

Douglas' Speech

Responding to proponents who repeatedly asked why gas should be regulated when coal is not, Sen. Paul Douglas (D Ill.) argued that coal is not a public utility.

"It can be purchased from many sellers and transported in various ways," Douglas said "But gas is a public utility. It can be bought from only one source and there is only one method of transporting it — by pipeline."

Douglas claimed that the Kerr gas bill would result in increases of gas prices to over $4,620,000,000 within 30 years. If the measure passed, he said, a minimum increase of 5 cents per 1,000 cubic feet and a maximum of 20 cents per 1,000 cubic feet could be expected in the price of gas sold to pipelines. On the basis of 1947 sales, he figured this would mean a minimum increase in prices over the next 30 years of $1,155,000,000 and a maximum of $4,620,000,000.

Sen. Kerr claimed that 20 to 50 year contracts between pipeline companies and producers prevented producers from raising the price of gas at will, adding that this was the only fuel field in which users had such protection.

Sen. Ernest W. McFarland (D Ariz.) predicted that the next step "after complete regulation of industry is nationalization of industry. Let those who say there is too much regulation go back to their states and explain to their constituents why they voted to regulate an industry which has brought down the price of gas to the consumer 12 percent in 12 years."

Regional Conflicts Seen

Another proponent, Sen. J. William Fulbright (D Ark.) said the issue was "whether or not the rich and powerful North and East should have our natural gas at nominal prices set by the commission which they expect to control, or whether they should pay reasonable prices set by the law of supply and demand."

"If the attorneys for the oil and gas companies really feel that the federal government does not possess the power to regulate these companies," Sen. Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.) said, "they would not devote so much time and such strenuous efforts to an attempt to obtain the enactment of such a bill."

Sen. Douglas (D Ill.) claimed the bill would "take the big oil and gas companies out from under regulation and put the high prices paid by the consumers of the North, not into the pockets of the people of the Southwest, but into the pockets of the big oil and gas groups."

Leland Olds Issue

Some of the debate was devoted to rehashing arguments regarding former FPC Commissioner Leland Olds whose reappointment was rejected by the Senate in 1949. (See CQ Almanac. Vol. V, Page 774.)

Douglas pointed out that Olds had changed his original position toward the regulation of producers, and that in 1949 Olds became known as being in favor of abolishing FPC Order 139, which declared that despite the Supreme Court decision of 1947, the FPC had no intention of exercising jurisdiction over sales of gas in interstate commerce by nontransporting producers and gatherers.

Olds' shift of position and the appointment of a new Commissioner, Thomas Buchanan, siding with Commissioner Draper, made a majority of the FPC in favor of regulating the producers and gatherers, Douglas said.

"This development naturally made the big producers press vigorously for enactment of the Kerr-Thomas bill, which specifically exempts their sales from regulation," Sen. Douglas continued. "The issue is now squarely joined. The issue is legislative; it is also administrative. The same groups which want the Kerr-Thomas bill passed also want to control the Federal Power Commission. So this battle is joined on an administrative and appointive level, as well as on a legislative level."

Mon Wallgren Cited

Sen. Johnson of Texas argued that the subsequent appointment of Mon Wallgren to the FPC left the division on regulation of the producer at a 2-2 split.

"If we fail to state the law, .then the policy of the FPC will become what Mon Wallgren chooses the policy to be," Johnson said. "Commissioner Wallgren holds the balance of power under the present situation. Some may think it fair and proper for Wallgren to have and to use power equal to the combined force of 531 members of both Houses of Congress. I do not think it is proper for Congress to leave to individual commissioners the full powers to determine the nation's policies with regard to regulation of private enterprise."

Final Action

The first real test of voting strength came on a motion by Douglas to send the bill back to the Commerce committee. His motion failed on roll call 37-45.

Then several amendments were introduced which would have given the FPC limited jurisdiction over the producers, but all were rejected.

The only amendment which the Senate accepted was one by Kerr and Thomas, authors of the bill, aimed to make the measure more acceptable. Their amendment substituded a bill "identical in spirit" to the original, yet giving FPC power to keep a running check on all producers, but not power to act. The amendment was accepted by a vote of 44-38.

The vote on the final passage of the bill was also 44-38, with 28 Democrats and 16 Republicans voting "Yea" and 16 Democrats and 22 Republicans voting "Nay." (See p. 722 for votes.)

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.) — Exempt from FPC regulation only producers selling annually less than $250,000 worth of gas or producing less than two billion cubic feet. Roll call 25-58.

Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.) — Provide that if the FPC shall find that the sellers have fixed prices, they shall not be exempt from regulation. Voice.

Karl Mundt (R S.D.) — Give FPC power to act if producers fix prices. Roll call 33-49.

HOUSE

On March 31, the House accepted the changes the Senate had made in HR 1758. Final vote was 176-174 on roll call. Backing the bill were 97 Democrats and 79 Republicans; opposed were 115 Democrats, 58 Republicans and one American Laborite. (See p. 714 for votes.)

Debate in the House on whether to accept the Senate's version followed the Senate pattern, but was much briefer. John E. Lyle (D Tex.), Charles A. Halleck (R Ind.), and Leo E. Allen (R Ill.) led the support, and Andrew J. Biemiller (D Wis.) and Ray J. Madden (D Ind.) the opponents.

Speaker Sam Rayburn (D Tex.) took the floor to appeal for passage. He said, "In my opinion this will not raise the price of natural gas to any consumer in the United States one red penny."

VETO

A barrage of pleas to veto and pass the natural gas bill was made to President Truman who was then vacationing at the "Little White House" in Key West, Fla.

Sens. Paul Douglas (D Ill.) and James B. Kem (R Mo.) urged the President to veto the bill because it was beneficial only to "special interests."

Municipal Pressures

All Minnesota Democrats in Congress urged a veto, as did the mayors of New York City, Chicago, Philadelphia, Detroit, Los Angeles, Cleveland, Pittsburgh, Birmingham, and many other cities.

Some of the President's closest Congressional lieutenants on Capitol Hill, including Speaker Rayburn and Senator Tom Connally (D Tex.) were urging passage of the measure.

On April 15, the President vetoed the bill stating that "authority to regulate . . . is necessary in the public interest."

Veto Message

He said that limited competition in the natural gas business made it necessary for the Power Commission to have authority to regulate independent producers who supply more than 80 percent of all gas produced.

The President said he would have no objection to "reasonable amendments" to the present law if they were needed, but he added, "To withdraw entirely from the field of regulation, impelled by imaginary fears, and in the face of a record of accomplishment under the present law which is successful from the standpoint of consumer, distributor, carrier, and producer alike, would not be in the public's interest."

Veto Echoes

On Capitol Hill, there was no move to pass the bill over the President's veto, but there was considerable comment on his action. Some of the comments on the veto were:

Sen. Robert S. Kerr (D Okla.), chief backer of the bill — "The President has made a mistake. Time will prove that the consuming areas which need abundant supplies of natural gas will receive less gas and at higher prices than if the bill had been approved."

Sen. Paul Douglas (D Ill.), who led the opposition in the Senate — "God bless the President of the United States. He has once again shown he is the true defender of the common people."

Sen. Allen J. Ellender (D La.) — "I think the President's veto was purely political."

Speaker of the House Sam Rayburn (D Tex.) who led House support of the measure — "I exercised my judgment in the House and the President exercised his. He has his part under our government setup and I have mine. I am not sore."

Senate Minority Leader Kenneth S. Wherry (R Neb.) — "I'm surprised

President Truman would veto what was supposed to be his own bill. I think independent gas producers have a right to contract and sell their product without having prices fixed by socialistic government bureaucrats."

Sen. James P. Kem (R Mo.) — "I believe the . . . bill was unfair to the people. For this reason I fought against it from the beginning."

Several months following the veto, the FPC rescinded Order 139.

LOBBY STANDS

Lobby organizations took an active interest in the natural gas bill during the 81st Congress. The National Association of Manufacturers and the U. S. Chamber of Commerce lined up with numerous oil and gas companies and commissions in favor of the bill. (For additional lobby stands during 1949, see CQ Almanac, Vol. V, page 721.)

NAM News said the bill's purpose was "to assure freedom from FPC jurisdiction to independent producers" of natural gas. A "real free enterprise issue is at stake" in the view of the bill's sponsors who stated "the threat of commission action is interfering with production and sale of gas badly needed for industry and others."

Americans for Democratic Action on Feb. 20 telegraphed Senate Majority Leader Scott Lucas (D Ill.) to use "all power and influence at your disposal to defeat the Kerr natural gas bill." Said ADA:

"This measure will take at least ten billion dollars from the pockets of American consumers, will set aside a Supreme Court decision and will prohibit the FPC from carying out its announced decision to investigate the present excessive prices in the natural gas industry." Mimeographed copies of the telegram were sent to Congressmen.

ADA's publication criticized the "great silence" of the Democratic Party and the White House on the issue and stated, "If Chairman Boyle doesn't denounce this measure and if President Truman doesn't veto it, their protests against the treatment given Leland Olds will unfortunately assume the appearance of pure heroics, paying mere lip-service to the demand for continuation of real control over the oil and gas interests."

Congress of Industrial Organizations also sent a telegram to Sen. Lucas urging opposition to the Kerr bill. Copies went to other Senators.

Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen's Trainman News said in a by-lined story, "A lot of Senators are watching their mail carefully these days, to see how to vote on the natural gas bill . . . This measure would increase the gas bills in every major city using natural gas . . . "

Trainman News said both CIO and American Federation of Labor were "working nationally and locally against the measure, to get Senators committed to oppose it".

Groups generally for the Kerr bill included:

Interstate Oil Compact Commission
Arkansas Oil and Gas Commission
Texas Railroad Commission
Independent Petroleum Assn. of America
Mid-Continent Oil and Gas Assn.
Chamber of Commerce of the U. S.
Panhandle Producers and Royalty Owners Assn., Inc., Texas.
Independent Natural Gas Assn. of America.
Oklahoma Legislature, by petition

Groups generally opposed to the natural gas amendment included:

CIO AFL ADA
City Solicitor, Pittsburgh
City Council, Kansas City, Mo.
National Institute of Municipal Law Officers.

Federal Aid-To-Highways

HR 7941—P. L. 769

SUMMARY

The House and Senate Aug. 29 approved HR 7941—a bill to authorize $594 million in aid to states for construction of certain types of roads and highways in each of the fiscal years 1951 and 1952.

Opposition to the bill was not heavy, although economy advocates in both houses led fights to reduce the sums authorized. The House passed HR 7941 on May 19 by a 246-34 ballot, and the Senate passed it Aug. 22 by a voice vote. The ultimate compromise version of HR 7941 worked out by a House - Senate conference committee was approved by both chambers on Aug. 29, and the President signed the bill on Sept. 7.

Provisions

The Act authorized the following appropriations for each of the fiscal years of 1951 and 1952:

$225 million for "federal-aid primary highways".
$150 million for "federal-aid secondary highways".
$125 million for "federal-aid urban highways".
$20 million for forest highways.
$3.5 million for Tongass Forest, Alaska, roads.
$17.5 million for forest roads and trails.
$10 million for National Park roads and trails.
$13 million for national parkways.
$6 million for Indian reservation roads.
$5 million for emergency road repair fund.
$4 million for the Inter-American Highway for each of four years.
$10 million for access roads to defense installations.
$5 million for roads on public domain.
Total: $594 million.

Other major provisions provided that:

Any state using federal-aid secondary highway money shall set up a State highway department.

Any state, city, etc., issuing bonds to pay for toll-free highways may apply the money from the Act to retirement of the bonds.

Federal share of the cost of rights-of-ways is increased from one-third to one-half.

BACKGROUND

The bill was drawn to continue authorizations under the Federal Highway Act of 1921, the Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1944 and the "Act to provide for co-operation with Central American Republics in construction of the Inter-American Highway" of 1941.

Sums authorized were based on needs determined in a study by the Joint Committee on the Economic Report and on Budget Bureau recommendations. The Joint Committee on the Economic Report said the accumulated needs of the American highway system revealed a $41 billion gap in the national economy, which, the report of its study said, could provide a stimulus to all business and industry for years to come.

The study was based on reports from highway departments of the 48 states and the District of Columbia and was the first analysis of the significance of highways in the national economy.

Modernization of present state highways alone would require an expenditure of $23 billion, the Committee reported. An additional $10 billion would be needed to bring county and local roads up-to-date and another $7 billion should be spent to make city and village roads adequate for present-day requirements.

Nine states reported a combined need on all roads and streets within their borders of more than a billion dollars each. Ohio was first with estimated total current requirements of $4.5 billion, followed by Texas with $2.4 billion, California with $2.6 billion, Illinois with $2.5 billion, New York with $1.8 billion, Michigan with $1.4 billion, Georgia with $1.2 billion, Tennessee with $1.2 billion and Massachusetts with $1.1 billion.

O'Mahoney Interpretation

Sen. Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.), chairman of the Joint Committee which submitted the study to Congress, said the vital importance of maintaining a highway system capable of meeting the demands of a $250 billion economy was evident from the fact that almost 900,000 persons were employed in the automobile industry and 100,000 more produced the gasoline consumed by the nation's cars and trucks.

In a statement issued in connection with the study, O'Mahoney pointed out that 1,500,000 people are employed in selling and servicing vehicles and that at least 60,000 persons are engaged directly in the construction and maintenance of highways and streets.

Total vacation travel income in the country was estimated to be over $9.5 billion of which nearly $2 billion go to New York and Florida together.

Construction of the needed improvements, the committee declared, would provide a total of 19,491,455,000 hours of on and off-site employment. The effect on the economy of this boon to labor would provide an additional 23,191,944,000 hours of employment in the consumer goods fields, it was estimated.

Votes

The House preliminary votes on the bill were not recorded. In the Senate, bill figures were cut twice on roll-call votes. The economy bloc won 47-37 on an amendment to cut an added $80 million from the original Senate bill and again 50-32 on a $25 million cut. (votes p. 725.)

The House originally passed HR-7941 on May 19 by a 246-34 vote. This was the tally on final passage. The Senate finally passed the bill on Aug. 22 by voice vote. The conference report was adopted by the House and Senate on Aug. 29 by voice votes.

HOUSE

Committee

The House Public Works Committee Feb. 22 received the original bill, HR 7398, offered by William M. Whittington (D Miss.), chairman of the Committee. The bill authorized the following expenditures for each of fiscal 1952 and 1953:

$225 million for "federal - aid" primary highways.

$150 million for "federal - aid" secondary highways.

$125 million for "federal - aid" urban highways.

$70 million for the "National System of Interstate Highways".

$20 million for forest highways.

$12.5 million for forest roads and trails.

$4.25 million for National Park roads.

$10 million for National Park access parkways.

$4 million for Indian reservation roads.

$10 million for an emergency repair fund.

Total: $630.75 million.

The bill also contained a departure from past federal - state fund matching practices. In the case of the "National System of Interstate Highways", the bill authorized the federal government to pay 75 per cent of the cost while the state put up 25 per cent. The previous ratio had been 50-50.

Hearings Held

Hearings on the bill opened Feb. 28 and extended through March 22. Testimony was heard from the American Municipal Association, American Association of State Highway Officials, Associated General Contractors of America, National Association of County Officials, American Trucking Association, National Rural Letter Carriers Association, and representatives of numerous state and local groups.

The American Association of State Highway Officials, an organization of the principal highway officials of all states, recommended that the authorizations be increased, asking specifically that the "federal - aid highway" money for the three categories above be increased to a total of $600 million a year, and that money for the national system of interstate highways be increased to $210 million for each year. Other organizations also urged a boost in the sums authorized.

New Bill Offered

The committee rewrote the bill March 30. The new version (HR 7941), also by Whittington, called for the following annual appropriations in the fiscal years 1951 and 1952:

$225 million for federal - aid primary highways.

$150 million for federal - aid secondary highways.

$125 million for federal - aid urban highways.

$70 million for the "National System of Interstate Highways".

$20 million for forest highways.

$17.5 million for forest roads and trails.

$10 million for National Park roads.

$13 million for National Park access parkways.

$6 million for Indian reservation roads.

$10 million for an emergency repair fund.

Total: $646.5 million.

Although sums for the minor highway categories were increased, the Committee report said the group felt constrained to follow the Budget Bureau's recommendation for the first three categories above. The $70 million for interstate highways, a new appropriation, was deemed sufficient.

The new bill contained the device for increasing the share of federal money for interstate highways to 75 per cent. The bill also authorized any state which issued bonds to construct toll-free facilities improving interstate highways to use federal interstate aid to retire those bonds.

In other provisions, $10 million of the money appropriated was authorized for use in emergency repairs; the federal share of the cost of rights - of - way was increased from the existing one - third to one-half.

The bill was reported favorably April 5.

Debate

The House debated HR 7941 May 19. Most opposition to the measure was based on economy reasons. Kenneth B. Keating (R N.Y.) said highway money was not indispensable, especially when the federal budget was running $5 billion into the red each year. But other Congressmen insisted the money was needed by the states.

The economy bloc lost its case when a motion by Keating to send the bill back to the Committee with instructions to cut 20 per cent of the funds authorized was turned down on a division vote, 24 to 113.

The new 75-25 matching formula for interstate highway funds was attacked by J. Harry McGregor (R Ohio). He said it was only the opening wedge for breaking down the prevailing 50-50 ratio. But his amendment to strike the entire interstate highway clause, funds and all, from the bill was defeated on a division vote, 20-34.

No proffered amendments were accepted, and the bill was passed by roll-call vote 246-34.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

McGregor (R Ohio) — Strike out authorization for interstate highway aid. Division, 20 to 34.

Alvin E. O'Konski (R Wis.) — Increase by $2 million authorization for roads on Indian reservations. Voice.

Hal Holmes (R Wash.) — Earmark $10 million for construction of means of access to and exit from military reservations. Voice.

SENATE

Committee

The Senate Public Works Committee opened hearings May 17 on S 3424, a highway aid measure similar to the House bill. The original Senate bill, by Dennis Chavez (D N. M.), authorized the following appropriations:

$550 million for federal-aid primary, secondary and urban highways, to be divided 45-30-25 per cent.

$25 million for forest highways.

$20 million for forest roads and trails.

$15 million for National Park roads.

$15 million for access roads to National Parks.

$10 million for Indian reservations.

$100 million for National System of Interstate Highways.

$8 million for Inter-American Highway.

$8 million for Nicaraguan road from San Benito to Rama.

$50 million for loans to states for highway work.

$10 million for an emergency repair fund.

TOTAL: $961 million.

The House 75-25 matching ratio for interstate highways was not included in S 3424.

The testimony presented to the Senate during the 12 days of Senate hearings was roughly the same as that presented to the House committee. In addition, Elmer B. Staats, assistant director of the Budget Bureau, told the Senate Committee May 29 that it would be unwise to approve such a high figure for highway aid. He endorsed the House-passed bill. However the American Road Builders Association asked for a further boost to $1 billion a year.

While the hearings were going on, the House bill was sent to the Committee. The group decided to rewrite the original Senate bill and report it favorably under the House bill number. The new bill contained the House 75-25 matching provision, but authorized larger appropriations in some categories. The Committee bill authorized the following appropriations for each of fiscal year 1951 and 1952:

$225 million for federal-aid primary roads.

$200 million for federal-aid secondary roads.

$125 for federal-aid urban roads.

$70 million for "National System of Interstate Highways".

$20 million for forest roads and trails.

$13 million for National parkways.

$10 million for Indian reservation roads.

$8 million for Inter-American Highway annually for eight years.

$4 million for Nicaraguan road from San Benito to Rama.

$25 million for access roads to defense installations.

$3.5 million for Tongass National Forest, Alaska, roads.

$5 million for roads in the public domain.

$20 million for forest highways.

$10 million for National Park roads and trails.

$10 million for an emergency repair fund.

TOTAL: $748.5 million.

The bill was reported July 14. On Aug. 17, before the bill came up for Senate approval, President Truman wrote Committee Chairman Chavez recommending reduction of $120 million a year from the bill in view of the invasion of Korea and "the different circumstances which now exist." The Committee met the next day and agree to propose the slash when the bill reached the floor.

Debate

When the bill came up for debate Aug. 22, economy advocates succeeded in cutting the sums even further than the Chavez group had envisaged.

Brunt of the slash was borne by the secondary and urban roads programs. The Committee wanted to cut $50 million from the $400 million for secondary roads but a substitute amendment was offered by Harry Flood Byrd (D Va.) and Styles Bridges (R N.H.) to cut a total of $130 million from the program. The Byrd-Bridges substitute was adopted, 47 to 37. Another Byrd amendment, which carried 50 to 32, trimmed $25 million from the $250 million originally sought for urban roads. (Votes page 725).

Col. 1, paragraph 5, line 7, should read 1952 and 1953, (not 1951 and 1952).

Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) succeeded in winning adoption of two more economy substitutes for committee reduction amendments. One, carried by voice, reduced the $10 million yearly item for emergency highway repairs to $5 million, and another, also won on voice, cut funds for the Inter-American Highway from $8 million to $4 million. The Committee had sought $2 million reductions in each of the programs.

Interstate Fund Eliminated

Eliminated altogether was a $70-million-a-year item for the interstate highway system. This program was set up for the first time in the House bill. Previously interstate highway construction has been financed from primary and urban road funds. The House established a population-ratio formula for distribution of these funds, but the Senate Committee recommended a formula based on population, plus state area and mileage of rural mail routes.

This was the same as the primary fund formula and was, proponents admitted, designed to give a greater proportion of funds to agricultural states than they would get under the population formula. But after the President's Aug. 17 request for a funds cut, the Committee decided to ask the Senate to dispense with the interstate fund entirely. The Senate did so Aug. 22 on a voice vote, after Chavez and Spessard L. Holland (D Fla.) pointed out that funds for interstate highway development would continue to be available through primary and urban road sections of the measure.

Before the Senate eliminated the fund, Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr. (R Mass.) offered an amendment to establish the Senate formula for distribution of the interstate fund on the same basis the House wanted. He was turned down, 27 to 58.

The Senate then approved the bill on voice vote, and sent it to a conference, which was required to reconcile the differing House and Senate versions. The Senate-passed bill contained the following authorizations for each of fiscal 1951 and 1952:

$225 million for federal-aid primary highways.

$135 million for federal-aid secondary highways.

$112.5 million for federal-aid urban highways.

$20 million for forest roads and trails.

$20 million for forest highways.

$10 million for National Park roads and trails.

$13 million for National Parkways.

$6 million for Indian reservation roads.

$5 million for emergency highway repairs.

4 million for the Inter-American Highway for each of a period of four years.

$10 million for access roads to military installations.

$5 million for roads on public domain.

$3.5 million for Tongass Forest, Alaska, roads.

TOTAL: $569 million.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED:

Harry Flood Byrd (D Va.) and Styles Bridges (R N.H.) — Amendment to committee amendment, cutting $65 million a year from $200 million recommended secondary roads. Roll-call, 47 to 37.

Dennis Chavez (D N.M.) (for Committee) — Cut $4 million from funds for Indian reservation roads. Voice.

Chavez (for Committee) — Eliminate $70 million item for interstate highways. Voice.

Paul Douglas (D Ill.) — Substitute for committee amendment reducing funds for emergency highway repair from $10 to $5 million (Committee proposed $2 million cut). Voice.

Douglas — Another committee amendment substitute reducing Inter-American Highway item from $8 to $4 million. (Committee proposed $2 million cut.) Voice.

Homer Ferguson (R Mich.) — Eliminate $4 million item for road between San Benito and Rama in Nicaragua. Voice.

Chavez (for Committee) — Reduce funds for access roads to military installations from $25 million to $10 million. Voice.

Pat McCarran (D Nev.) — Make available immediately, instead of in 1952, $2.5 million of $5 million authorized for public domain roads to be used for construction of unfinished Utah link in Transcontinental Highway No. 6. Voice.

Byrd (D Va.) — Reduction of $12.5 million a year in $125 million urban highway funds. Roll-call, 50 to 32.

Frank P. Graham (D N. C.) — Retain administration of parkway projects in Interior Department instead of granting it jointly to Interior and Commerce Departments, as proposed in bill. Voice.

Burnet Maybank (D S. C.) — Give states same reimbursement rights as railroads when Army Engineers condemn a bridge to permit navigation of a river. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr. (R Mass.) — Provide apportionment among states of interstate highway funds according to population ratios. Roll call, 27-58.

Douglas (D Ill.) — Halve the $225 million a year for primary roads. Voice.

Byrd (D Va.) — Reduce by $22.5 million a year the primary road fund. Roll call, 36-47.

Edwin C. Johnson (D Colo.) — Bar funds to states allowing highway vehicles above 18,000 lbs. in weight. Voice.

Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.) — Change provision requiring advance approval of state road projects by Bureau of Public Roads to make this approval necessary only when the facility is constructed. Voice.

Robert C. Hendrickson (R N.J.)— Eliminate provision allowing states, cities, and other political subdivisions to retire bonds, issued for construction of federally approved roads, with federal - aid highway funds. Voice.

Graham (D N. C.) — Increase by $3 million the $13 million item for parkways. Voice.

Saltonstall (R Mass.) — Strike a provision limiting use of secondary road funds to rural roads that can be maintained at reasonable cost for all - year service. Roll call, 21-56.

Saltonstall (R Mass.) — Eliminate amendment requiring establishment of secondary road unit within state highway departments of any state applying for funds for such roads. Roll call, 37 to 41.

Douglas (D Ill.) — Halve funds for forest highways. Voice.

Douglas — Substitute for committee amendment reducing fund for secondary roads to $75 million a year. Roll call, 26 to 54.

CONFERENCE

A joint House - Senate conference studied the two versions of the bill and approved a compromise which adopted most of the Senate provisions. The House and Senate both accepted the conference bill on voice vote Aug. 29. (For final provisions see section above "Provisions".) The President signed the bill Sept. 7 and it became Public Law 769.

LOBBY STANDS

The American Association of State Highway Officials, representing highway department officials in all 48 states, supported a broad program of federal aid to highways. The group asked Congress to boost the sums for the three "federal - aid highway" classifications from the Budget Bureau recommendation of $500 million to $600 million, and asked that a special $210 million aid program be set up for so-called "interstate highways". Congress, however, followed the Budget Bureau's advice.

The Association did, however, get what it asked for in other provisions: retention of the old matching formula, use of aid money to retire road bonds, establishment of an emergency road fund and an increase in federal aid in the purchase of rights - of - way.

The American Municipal Association asked Congressmen to increase the share of municipalities in federal-aid highway money, to increase funds for rights - of - way, to make loans for acquisitions of rights - of - way and to allow aid money to be used to retire highway bonds.

The Association of Highway Officials of the North Atlantic States petitioned Congress to leave highway problems up to the states "with a minimum of regulation from the federal government."

The Chamber of Commerce of the United States urged Congress to retain the traditional 50-50 federal-state matching formula for the highway aid program. The House Committee's 75-25 formula was asked to be dropped. (It was left out of the final bill.)

The American Farm Bureau Federation asked Congress to authorize another $100 million a year for rural roads in addition to the funds planned for federal - aid highways.

Highway Aid By States

According to the Committee, the following table summarized "the needs in each state" and the cost of correcting existing highway deficiencies in them. The data was submitted to the Committee in 1949 by state governors, who had been circularized for "information on the needs in each state" and the cost way construction . . . and the size of their present and contemplated highway construction program."

Baltimore Highway

SUMMARY

Legislation authorizing 13 million of federal money to complete a 19-mile stretch of the dual-lane expressway linking Washington and Baltimore was approved by the House on a 71-10 division vote May 25. The Senate passed the bill without objection on July 26. President Truman signed it into law on Aug. 3.

Work on the Washington-Baltimore highway under terms of the bill would center around the capital end of the artery. The defense complexion of a completed superhighway — which would also serve the giant Friendship Airport between the two cities — was repeatedly mentioned in debates in both chambers of Congress.

HOUSE

Sponsored by Chairman William M. Whittington (D Miss.) of the House Public Works Committee, and Rep. George H. Fallon (D Md.), also a group member, the legislation was reported to the House on March 16.

On May 15, the House Rules Committee offered a resolution which, if adopted, would have permitted debate and action on HR 5990. However, some Representatives were loath to consider the bill at that time, and accordingly, debate centered on the "rule" instead of the measure itself. Lawmakers who did not want to act on HR 5990 directed their opposition against the Rules group's resolution which would have opened the way to action on the bill.

An opponent of the "rule", Rep. Earl Wilson (R Ind.), charged HR 5990 strongly "smelled of pork", and Rep. A. L. Miller (R Neb.) asked if "in passing this type of legislation a precedent (is) set for other States and cities to ask for like aid?"

Reps. Whittington, Fallon, J. Glenn Beall (R Md.), George A. Dondero (R Mich.) and Lansdale G. Sasscer (D Md.) strongly supported the "rule" and, in effect, the bill itself. It was pointed out that the State of Maryland had already floated a bond issue of some $14.6 million to finance the construction.

Rule Adopted

The rule permitting consideration of HR 5990 was adopted on May 15 by a 194-32 roll call. Then the House decided on a 119-14 division vote to resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole to consider the measure.

But opponents of the legislation challenged the result of the vote on this routine move. They said a quorum had not been present. Accordingly, the decision of whether to sit as the Committee of the Whole was put to a roll call.

The motion was again approved, on a 192-29 vote. But by the time a final vote on the over-all measure neared, a quorum had again dissipated. Only 84 members were on the floor, but they decided by a 11-73 teller vote to stay in session.

A point of order was then formally raised that a quorum was definitely lacking. The Chair sustained the point. The Committee of the Whole arose, and no further action was taken at that time.

Final Action

On May 25, the House again took up HR 5990. It entered the final phase of consideration — recapitulating previous arguments. Maryland lawmakers and those from the Public Works Committee summed up their favoring statements, and members seeking economy or fearing that bad precedents would be established reviewed their opposition.

Without amendment, the bill was then passed on a 71-10 division vote.

SENATE

The Senate Public Works Committee favorably reported HR 5990 on July 13, and the Senate took it up on July 26. Sens. John L. McClellan (D Ark.), Herbert R. O'Conor (D Md.) and Millard Tydings (D Md.) endorsed it in brief comments.

McClellan said: "This is primarily in large measure a military project to serve the Fort Meade installation and to serve also one of the largest airports, I think, in the Nation, which was recently constructed in that vicinity." The allusion was to Friendship Airport.

Tydings asserted: "In the event of war between the United States and any foreign power that airport would be the most important airport in America for the defense of the Nation's Capital." He added, "This road will be used to supply that airport with gasoline and other fuel."

The Senate then approved HR 5990 without amendment or objection. The measure was cleared to the White House, where it was signed into law on Aug. 3, 1950.

Rivers, Harbors, Flood Control

HR 5472—P. L. 516

SUMMARY

This bill, authorizing river and harbor development projects throughout the country and also flood control programs was the first omnibus measure of its kind to come before a Congress since 1946.

As passed into law in May, 1950, by the 81st Congress, HR 5472 authorized a total of $1,483,593,325 for new projects, plus $200,000,000 for Missouri River basin reclamation projects and $46,658,500 for miscellaneous matters such as surveys of proposed or programmed projects.

The bill was an authorization measure, and did not appropriate any money for the projects it listed. It simply specified how much money could be subsequently granted for them. As finally approved, the measure authorized $367,507,000 more than the House had originally been willing to earmark, but $109,280,000 less than the Senate had been willing to provide.

Controversy over the Administration's proposals for a Columbia Valley Administration dogged the bill's passage through the Senate. Final action there came after more than a week of debate and total defeat of a controversial amendment authorizing (1) $412,700,000 worth of initial reclamation and irrigation developments in the Columbia River basin to parallel construction of river projects and (2) a joint bookkeeping account for all federal projects in the basin. The amendment, sponsored by the Interior and Insular Affairs Committee, evoked a series of roll-call votes April 14 and several attempts to pass it in diluted form, without the basin account feature. All attempts failed.

Sponsorship of the amendment by the Interior group was one example of the jurisdictional row the CVA issue provoked within the Senate itself. The Interior group dissented repeatedly with the Public Works Committee on the question of how the legislation should be handled, even though the latter Committee had held the hearings on it and was formally charged with its consideration.

The Senate's version of HR 5472 differed so widely from the measure passed in 1949 by the House that a conference committee was required. By and large, this group approved most of the extra projects and a great deal of the extra funds the Senate had inserted.

Although President Truman signed the bill into law, he had critical words for the Congress' refusal to enact the joint Army - Interior Department plan for development of the Columbia basin that Mr. Truman had endorsed. This plan, moreover, had been a proposal Mr. Truman had indicated he favored as a "next best" project after Congress failed to act on his initial request for an independent Columbia Valley Administration.

The House, which had originally passed its version of HR 5472 in 1949, approved the ultimate compromise edition of the bill on May 3, 1950. The Senate, which had first passed HR 5472 in April, 1950, approved the compromise on May 4. The President signed it into law on May 17, 1950.

Provisions

HR 5472 an act "authorizing the construction, repair and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors for navigation, flood control, and for other purposes", was divided into two sections or "titles" before it became law. The following lists the provisions of each title. General provisions are listed first; specific projects authorized by each title follow in table form.

TITLE I — "RIVER AND HARBOR ACT OF 1950".

This title authorized the Secretary of the Army and the Army Chief of Engineers to go ahead with the construction, repair or improvement of specific projects, all of which were set forth.

The Secretary of the Army was directed to report to Congress "at the earliest practicable date" the results of his surveys and examinations of the work to be undertaken.

Specific Projects

Here were the projects in Title I, by states. The first column shows the amounts approved for them when HR 5472 passed the House. The second column shows the sums approved by the Senate, and also those projects which the upper chamber added.

The conferees included the additional Senate projects in their final compromise version of HR 5472. They also left in the bill the various projects and authorizations for them on which the House and Senate had been in agreement from the start.

Where the House and Senate did differ in their figures, the compromise sum reached by the conferees and enacted in the conference report is indicated.

TITLE II —

"Flood Control Act of 1950".

This title authorized the Department of the Army to go ahead with flood control projects, which were set forth, but warned that the authority would lapse if those projects "requiring local cooperation" from local interests did not receive it.

The title authorized the appropriation of $10 million for the joint use of the Departments of the Army and Agriculture to make various surveys in connection with flood control, and an additional $1.5 million was authorized for the Federal Power Commission to make similar surveys and examinations.

In addition, $200,000,000 was authorized for "the prosecution of the comprehensive plan . . . for continuing the works in the Missouri River Basin", to be handled by the Secretary of the Interior.

Specific Projects

Here were the projects in Title II, by state. Again, the first column shows projects and amounts approved by the House when it first passed HR 5472. Second column shows Senate version of those same projects, and also the new ones added by the upper chamber.

The conferees included these additional Senate projects in the final version of HR 5472. Also included were those projects and sums authorized for them on which the House and Senate had been in agreement from the start.

Where the House and Senate did differ in their figures, the compromise sum reached by the conferees has been indicated.

Votes

The House passed HR 5472 by a 202-1 division vote on Aug. 22, 1949.

The Senate passed its version of the bill by a 53-19 roll-call ballot on April 17, 1950.

The House adopted the conference report on HR 5472 by a 210-137 roll-call vote on May 3, 1950.

The Senate adopted the conference report by a roll-call vote of 44-24 on May 4, 1950.

President Truman signed HR 5472 into Public Law 516 on May 17, 1950.

BACKGROUND

The omnibus river and harbor and flood control bill (HR 5472) drew its first action during the 81st Congress in the House of Representatives. The House Public Works Committee approved the bill on July 6, 1949, and the House itself passed it on Aug. 22, 1949. As approved and sent across the Capitol to the Senate, HR 5472 carried authorizations for 101 navigation and flood control projects, costs of which were estimated to total $1,114,539,975. (For story on the bill's progress through the House, see CQ Almanac, Vol. V, page 773.)

In the upper chamber, the Senate Public Works Committee added 51 projects, bringing the grand cost total of the bill to $1,564,814,825.

Among the added projects were $142,003,000 worth of river developments in the Columbia basin, to be constructed by the Corps of Engineers which has jurisdiction over such work. The House already had voted $107,997,000 for similar projects. Thus bypassed was the Administration's plan for coordinated development of the Columbia Valley by the Interior Dept.'s Bureau of Reclamation and the Army Engineers. (This rejected Army-Interior plan, moreover, had been the "second best" choice of the President, who initially had plumped for establishment of an independent Columbia Valley Administration.)

But the Public Works Committee took note of this, explaining it was considering a separate bill (S 1645) to establish a comprehensive Columbia Valley Administration. The Committee also added an amendment to HR 5472 creating a commission to study and recommend a coordinated conservation and development plan for the Arkansas-White and Red River basins.

The Senate took up the omnibus bill Oct. 17 and approved all Committee amendments, including the Columbia basin projects. Warren G. Magnuson (D Wash.) however, asked that final action be delayed. He objected to omission from the bill of reclamation features of the overall plan of Columbia Valley development and he asked that the matter be studied by the Interior and Insular Affairs Committee, which under organization of the Senate handled matters affecting reclamation.

SENATE

Committee

Although the Senate Public Works Committee had formally reported HR 5472 to the upper chamber in 1949, a second Senate group, the Interior and Insular Affairs Committee, decided in 1950 to hold hearings on an amendment it proposed to submit to the Columbia Valley section of the bill. Accordingly, in January, the Interior Committee called U. S. Reclamation Bureau officials before it.

After two months of study and hearings, the Interior group on March 20 brought out its amendment. The amendment's purpose was to coordinate Columbia valley operations and to pool the various revenues of the valley into one "basin account."

By this time, however, the Public Works Committee had itself readied and produced another five amendments. Four of these tacked additional projects onto HR 5472, and the fifth authorized a $1.5 million series of surveys by the Federal Power Commission.

Consequently, when the Senate on March 30 took up HR 5472, there were six amendments outstanding to it. As it developed, however, these were just the first ones that were to be offered to the omnibus measure.

Floor Action

The Senate on March 30 first took up the amendments sponsored by the Senate Public Works Committee. Three of them, including those adding Texas and Arkansas projects to the omnibus bill, were adopted by voice votes after little debate.

No further action was taken until April 10, when the Senate again turned to HR 5472 and adopted Public Works group's remaining amendments, including the FPC survey authorization.

Then Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.) brought up the so - called CVA amendment endorsed by the Senate Interior Committee, and controversy broke out.

The controversy revolved around the proposed amendment's authorization of $412,700,000 worth of reclamation and irrigation projects in the Columbia valley and creation of a Columbia basin bookkeeping account in the Interior Dept. Into the proposed account would go all revenue from power and other projects operated by both the Interior and Army Depts., and all power and irrigation expenditures would go out of it.

Chavez Chief Opponent

Dennis Chavez (D N.M.), chairman of the Public Works Committee, which reported the omnibus measure, led the fight against the Columbia basin amendment. He argued it proposed projects and new government policy which his Committee had been given no chance to study. Other opponents were Guy Cordon (R Ore.), and Spessard L. Holland (D Fla.) who urged defeat of the joint basin account plan on the grounds it was the first step toward establishment of a Columbia Valley Administration. Proponents were led by Warren G. Magnuson (D Wash.) and Glen H. Taylor (D Idaho).

Chavez on April 14 offered a motion to table the CVA amendment, and it was agreed to by a roll-call vote of 43 to 22. Taylor then resubmitted the amendment in a new form, authorizing the same projects but eliminating the basin account. This was also laid on the table, upon a motion by Chavez, accepted by voice vote.

A third version of the amendment was then offered by Cordon, who proposed authorization of the projects but elimination of the basin account pooling of reclamation, power and navigation revenue, providing, instead, for pooling of revenue from all reclamation and power projects in the basin. Chavez offered another motion to table, which was likewise approved, by a roll-call vote of 51 to 13.

After thus disposing of the CVA amendment, the Senate watched Paul Douglas (D Ill.) wage a two - day virtually single - handed legislative battle to cut the total authorized amount of the bill by $840 million. He sought to eliminate projects he described as "flagrant examples of pork", arguing that all but the most necessary projects should be postponed in view of the coming $5 billion government deficit.

But the Senate rejected all of Douglas' amendments. His major pruning efforts were directed at a $250 million authorization for flood control works in the Missouri River basin, a $200 million authorization for similar works in the Lower Mississippi River basin, and $100 million and $89 million, respectively, for Ohio and Arkansas river flood control projects.

Missouri Plan Defeated

The Missouri Basin proposal, which had been the subject of debate April 14 when the Senate adjourned at 9 p. m. after a lengthy session, was defeated outright April 17 when a Chavez motion to table was accepted on a roll-call vote of 50 to 16.

The Senate also rejected, April 17, by a roll-call vote of 48 to 23, a motion by John J. Williams (R Del.) to recommit the bill. (Williams on April 14 had offered an amendment to prevent initial work on any of the projects while a budget deficit exists. It was defeated by division.)

After turning back the Williams recommital motion, the Senate went on to approve the entire measure on April 17, voting to pass its version of HR 5472 by a 53-19 roll-call ballot.

As passed by the Senate, and sent to conference, here is the way the bill stood:

	House	Senate (added)	Total
River & Harbors	$119,469,975	$108,903,150	$228,373,125
Flood Control	998,116,200	367,134,000	1,364,500,200

As the bill ultimately was approved, it carried an authorization for $250 million worth of navigation and flood control projects in the Columbia River basin, which the Army Engineers will construct. No reclamation or irrigation projects were approved.

Other authorizations included in the bill and approved by both House and Senate were: $15 million for flood control repairs; $3 million for small flood control projects not specifically authorized; $10 million for surveys of proposed new projects named in the bill; $200 million for reclamation projects in the Missouri River basin; $1,158,500 for the Agriculture Dept.'s Santa Ynez River watershed in California; and $19 million for other watershed projects by the Agriculture Department.

AMENDMENTS AGREED TO

Chavez — Motion to table O'Mahoney's Columbia River basin amendment. Roll-call vote, 43-22.

Chavez — Motion to table Taylor substitute basin amendment. Voice vote.

Chavez — Motion to table Cordon substitute amendment. Roll-call vote, 51-13.

William Benton (D Conn.) — Authorize $203,500 for control of beach erosion on Connecticut shore. Voice vote.

Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.) — Provide federal credit to Massachusetts for $50,000 already invested in construction of a sea wall at Winthrop Beach, Mass., without increasing federal funds already authorized for project. Voice vote.

Walter F. George (D Ga.) — Increase House appropriation for Savannah River basin projects by $28,377,000. Adopted Oct. 17, 1949, by voice vote.

John L. McClellan (D Ark.) —Committee-approved amendment authorizing $228,000 for flood control project at Des Arc, Ark. Voice.

Chavez for Public Works Committee — Amendments authorizing $1,500,000 for power surveys by FPC, and for some 20 additional river and flood control surveys. Voice.

Taylor — Eliminate $750,000 flood control project at Bonners Ferry, Idaho. Voice.

Chavez — Motions (1) to table Williams motion to recommit bill, roll-call vote 47-23; (2) table Williams motion to reconsider vote by which Senate adopted Benton amendment, 37-28.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Douglas — Series of amendments including several omnibus amendments eliminating $840 million from bill.

Robert C. Hendrickson (R N. J.)— Provide for $1.5 million contribution to beach erosion control project at Atlantic City, N. J. Roll-call vote, 31-37.

Irving M. Ives (R N. Y.), Henry Cabot Lodge Jr. (R Mass.), Alexander Wiley (R Wis.), Andrew F. Schoeppel (R Kan.) and Cordon (R Ore.) — Individual amendments adding state projects to the bill. Voice.

CONFERENCE

Because of the sweeping changes the Senate had made in HR 5472 before it approved it, the legislation was sent on April 20 to a joint House-Senate conference committee.

The conferees reached agreement April 26 on a compromise edition of HR 5472. Their compromise authorized a total of $1,483,593,325 for new projects, $200,000,000 for Missouri River basin reclamation projects and $46,658,500 for miscellaneous matters, such as surveys of proposed new projects. The bill was an authorization measure and carried no appropriation.

The total figure authorized for new projects was $109,280,000 less than the figure in the bill approved by the Senate. It was $367,507,000 more than the figure in the bill that came from the House in 1949. In addition to the monetary cuts, the conferees struck out a Senate provision for a commission to study water development possibilities in the Arkansas, White and Red Rivers. They agreed on a proviso for a full survey of the river basins by the Corps of Engineers.

Here were the cuts the conferees agreed on:

Ouachita River navigation project in Louisiana and Arkansas from $36,950,000 to $21,300,000;

Arkansas River comprehensive plan from $89 million to $80 million;

Hartwell Dam, Georgia, from $68,377,000, to $50 million;

Willamette and Columbia River Basins, from a total of $181,253,000 to $115,000,000. The cuts were not spelled out.

The conference report was put before the House on May 3, and was approved by a roll-call vote of 210-137. The Senate approved the conference report by a roll-call vote of 44-24 on May 4.

LAW ENACTED

President Truman signed HR 5472 into Public Law 516 on May 17. He had no comment at the time, but on May 22 he sent a special message to Congress critically evaluating the multi-million-dollar authorization for development of numerous rivers, harbors, and flood control projects. The President termed the legislation "seriously deficient." He said too much of the authorized work would fall to the Army's Corps of Engineers whose function, primarily navigation construction, "is only one part of the job that needs to be done."

Said the President: "A second and even worse example of inadequate planning provided for in this act relates to New England . . . a third serious defect in this act concerns the Pacific Northwest . . ." Instead of authorizing the joint Army-Interior projects in the Columbia valley, Mr. Truman complained, "the present act merely authorized those projects which were included in the joint plan for construction by the Army Department. It omits all the projects which were jointly recommended for construction by the Interior Department."

"I urge that the Congress reconsider this matter at the earliest opportunity, and authorize the missing pieces of the Army-Interior Columbia Basin plan," wrote the President. He added: "I urge the Congress in the future to avoid authorizing projects which have not been thoroughly considered or which do not meet sound standards for river development work."

LOBBY STANDS

In connection with HR 5472, the National Rivers and Harbors Congress, in Washington at its 40th annual convention, approved for prompt construction local projects to cost more than $819 million. The organization, which includes several Congressmen as officers and all Congressmen as "honorary members", promotes federal programs for waterways development. It has no official connection with the federal government.

The convention adopted resolutions in which NRHC:

1. Asked the U. S. Congress to set up a permanent commission in the legislative branch to make research into development, conservation and utilization of water and land resources. Commission would confer with federal and state agencies, engineering and industrial societies and water use associations.

2. Endorsed omnibus river and harbor and flood control bill (HR 5472) calling for 1.2 billion dollar construction. Notwithstanding merits of the legislation, said the rivers and harbors group, its defeat might be desired "by those who are unwilling to admit the potential disaster in a flood-swollen stream, in an unsafe channel, or in a city without electricity during a coal strike".

3. Urged appropriations "for Americans" of funds to permit development of the "vital protection works our people deserve." This recommendation was made, NRHC said, since "enormous expenditures abroad are becoming less and less popular with many of our people, especially to those who are depending on our government to provide safety from floods".

4. Saw "cause for alarm" in Administration policy of "no new starts" in 1951 river, harbor and flood control budget. Should the policy continue, river and flood control work "will come to a standstill in two or three years". NRHC appealed to Congress to "remedy the situation".

Opposed CVA

5. Reaffirmed opposition to valley authorities. NRHC said it "is cognizant of the strategy of the valley authority proponents of concentrating on a Columbia Valley Administration" as a step toward similar administration "in all major river basins"

6. Declared "unalterable opposition to transfer of Army Engineers' civil functions to the Interior Department as recommended by the Hoover Commission. The rivers and harbors organization commended the Interior's Bureau of Reclamation for "notable progress" in reclamation of arid and semi - arid lands of 17 western states.

7. Asked legislation giving state control of tidelands oil to states.

8. Reaffirmed active support of a "strong and well-balanced" merchant marine and "sufficient government interest to induce private capital and the maritime industry to expand".

9. Strongly endorsed legislation authorizing funds for "rehabilitation" of Federal Barge Lines. Modern equipment "is essential for the eventual disposition of the system to private enterprise", said NRHC.

McClellan's Stand

Sen. John L. McClellan (D Ark.) told the National Rivers and Harbors Congress meeting that the House Appropriations Committee "singled out" the waterways program for a "25 per cent reduction while making an overall four per cent cut."

The Arkansas Senator suggested NRHC members should ask their Congressmen not to balance the budget at the expense of waterways projects.

An organizational brochure says the sole purpose of National Rivers and Harbors Congress is to "further a sound and coordinated development of the Nation's water and land resources". America owes her present system of improved harbors and waterways "directly to NRHC efforts, according to the brochure.

NRHC says it provides a forum for discussion, a clearing house for activities of local and sectional organizations, and affords means for "united action".

From its Washington headquarters, "by group and sectional meetings, as well as its conventions and special sessions, through its news bureau, publications and field agents, it keeps constantly before Congress, the Administration and the public the desirability of needed water and land improvements and their fullest utilization for the public benefit . . .

"It acts in an advisory capacity to the United States Congress and the Government agencies charged with matters pertaining to river and harbor development, flood control, irrigation and reclamation, soil and water conservation, and related subjects," according to NRHC.

Recommendations of the Rivers and Harbors group are presented to the President and Vice President, Speaker of the House, Congressional committees, Secretaries of the Army and Interior, Commissioner of Reclamation, Chief of Army Engineers, and "other appropriate officials and agencies" and NRHC endeavors to see that its policies are enacted into law, reports the brochure.

NRHC Members

Membership of the rivers organization "is composed of states, cities, chambers of commerce, waterway and similar associations, and firms and individuals located in every state in the Union, its territories and insular possessions".

All Congressmen are "honorary members" of NRHC "and many of them take an active part" in its activities. Officers of the Army Engineers engaged in river and harbor work are "ex-officio" members of NRHC.

These U. S. Congressmen are officers in the National Rivers and Harbors Congress:

Sen. John L. McClellan (D Ark.), president, and three vice presidents — Sen. Kenneth S. Wherry (R Neb.), Rep. William M. Whittington (D Miss.), and Rep. Francis Case (R S. D.). Rep. Whittington also is president of the Mississippi Valley Flood Control Association.

Rep. Sid Simpson (R Ill.) is chairman of the projects committee, which approves or disapproves proposals for local water resource improvements.

National directors are headed by Rep. Dewey Short (R Mo.), chairman. Other directors include Rep. Overton Brooks (D La.) and former Sen. Chapman Revercomb (R W. Va.)

Regional directors include Sen. Spessard L. Holland (D Fla.), for the South Atlantic area.

Former Sen. Joseph E. Ransdell (D La.) is president emeritus of NRHC and a life director.

Rep. John A. Blatnik (R Minn.), Sen. Burnet R. Maybank (D S. C.), Sen. Arthur V. Watkins (R Utah), Rep. Frank A. Barrett (R Wyo) and Delegate E. L. Bartlett (D Alaska) are "state vice presidents".

Local Pressures

Projects committee of the National Rivers and Harbors Congress examined 76 proposals for resource improvements, in navigable waterways, harbors, flood control, soil conservation, reclamation, and water conservation.

Thirty-five projects were given top priority — considered "sound, needful, and sufficiently advanced in status" to justify prompt construction.

Listed by states, the top priority projects were:

Alabama — Mobile Harbor

Arkansas and Missouri — Cache River Basin

California — Central Valley Project

Connecticut and Massachusetts— Connecticut River from Long Island Sound to Holyoke

Florida — Tampa Harbor, Lake Worth Inlet, St. Augustine Harbor and vicinity, Apalachicola Harbor & Channel to Gulf, East Pass from Gulf of Mexico into Choctawhatchee Bay, Central & Southern Florida Flood Control Project (first phase), Canaveral Harbor, Intracoastal Waterway-Caloosahatchee to Anclote River

Georgia — Savannah River, and Brunswick Harbor

Kansas and Nebraska — Kansas River (flood control)

Louisiana — Mississippi River, New Orleans to the Gulf of Mexico

Massachusetts — Mystic River, Boston and Connecticut River project (see above)

Missouri — Des Moines & Mississippi Levee District No. 1 and Cache River project (see above)

New Jersey and New York — Arthur Kill, New York and New Jersey Channels, N. Y. Harbor

North Carolina — Cape Fear River at and below Wilmington, Taylors Creek, Oregon Inlet and Related Channels, Masonboro Inlet, and Wallace Channel.

North Carolina and South Carolina— Yadkin - Pee Dee Rivers (flood control)

Ohio and West Virginia — New Cumberland Locks & Dams, Ohio River

Ohio — Rocky Fork Reservoir (Paint Creek)

Pennsylvania — Susquehanna River, West Branch, Reservoir System

Texas — Sabine-Neches Waterway, Freeport Harbor, Galveston Harbor and Channel and Brazos Island

Virginia — Craney Island Disposal Area and James River, Richmond

West Virginia — Upper Monongahela River Modernization (Hildebrand & Opekiska Dams) and Ohio River project (see above)

Other Lobby Stands

First National Bank of Clarksville, Tenn., sent Congressmen a resolution by "the owners and active farmers of the bottom lands of the Cumberland River and its tributaries in Montgomery County, Tenn., and its trade area, and other interested citizens".

The covering letter said the meeting of representative citizens, "chiefly farmers", endorsed plans of Army Engineers for development of the Cumberland River, involving flood control and navigation dams. The resolution opposed legislation "changing this plan".

Dover Chamber of Commerce, Tenn., endorsed Army Engineers' plan for Cumberland River development, and called for necessary appropriations.

The C. of C. said it was informed that "certain members of the Tennessee delegation" favoring extension of the Tennessee Valley Authority declared intention of "blocking" appropriations for the Engineers on new construction on the Cumberland. These Congressmen "were elected to represent the people of the State of Tennessee, not a government Corporation which would rule the State," said the C. of C. statement.

Mississippi Valley Association — In St. Louis at its 31st annual convention, reaffirmed opposition to valley authorities. It urged confining Federal appropriations to construction "which will create new and additional economic opportunities for the people".

The valley association said "controlling floods, improving navigation, reclaiming arid lands, protection of soil against erosion and the generation of hydro - electric power incidental to these functions are proper activities of the federal government".

Construction of steam plants for electric power for commercial resale "puts federal government into the power business in direct competition with its citizens and is not a function of government", said the Mississippi River group.

The association endorsed "excellent work of the existing federal agencies" in developing land and water resources of the Mississippi River Basin and opposed consolidation of agencies and transfer of any civil functions from the Army Engineers.

Thousands of Views

In addition to the foregoing organizations, literally tens of thousands of individuals representing the federal government, regions, states, counties, cities, national organizations or semi-public groups made their views known to Congress. They addressed themselves either to HR 5472 or to separate bills on specific projects in designated areas which they favored or opposed. They registered their stands via a number of methods: Personal testimony at Congressional hearings, resolutions through groups with extremely broad and varied constituent memberships or through their Congressmen.

Most of the larger organizations — the national or regional ones — split their views, endorsing some parts of the sweeping HR 5472 but seeking basic revision in others. For example, the Associated General Contractors of America were in favor of straight river and harbor development and improvement, but were against a CVA. The National Association of Electric Companies was directly against a CVA but favored flood control projects if "economically sound".

The Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen and the International Association of Machinists favored the CVA, but the American Public Power Association favored only the rivers and harbors and flood control aspects of HR 5472. The National Reclamation Bureau was against the CVA as such, but favored the idea of Army - Inposed development.

Palisades Dam

S 2195—P. L. 864

SUMMARY

Congress authorized $94,596,000 for multiple-purpose reclamation developments in eastern Idaho when the House and Senate adopted a compromise conference report on the Palisades Dam and Reservoir Project bill, S 2195. President Truman signed the measure Sept. 30, 1950, and it became Public Law 864.

The bill re - authorized at an expenditure not to exceed $76,601,000 the Palisades Dam and Reservoir essentially as it first was approved by Congress in 1941, except that the power installation was increased to 112,500 kilowatts. Power output, it was specified, will be incidental to operation of the reservoir principally for irrigation and flood control.

Authorized for the first time was the North Side Pumping Division of the Minidoka Project. The bill also provided for completion of a 30,000-kilowatt power installation at the existing American Falls Dam, to supply the North Side Pumping Division with power for irrigation. Funds authorized were not to exceed $11,395,000 for the pumping division, and $6,600,000 for the power plant.

All of the units affected are on the Snake River. The program is intended to supply adequate water for 650,000 acres now irrigated but not dependably supplied; provide for development of 77,650 acres of new irrigated lands near Rupert, Idaho; protect against recurrence of flood damage along the Snake estimated to have averaged $900,000 annually; and to provide a combined power-generating capacity of 142,500 kilowatts at the existing and the proposed dam.

Joint Hearings Held

Joint hearings were held on the legislation by the Subcommittee on Irrigation and Reclamation of the House Public Lands Committee, and a Special Subcommittee of the Senate Interior and Insular Affairs Committee.

Both Senate and House Committees later recommended amendments and reported the legislation favorably, and then issued supplemental reports proposing additional amendments to meet objections of the Bureau of the Budget to some non-reimbursable features of the legislation as originally drafted.

The Senate passed its version (S 2195) of the measure on Sept. 13, 1950, and sent it to the House for approval. The lower chamber took it up on Sept. 18, but only to substitute for the Senate's language the entire text of the lower chamber's version (HR 5506). The House then returned S 2195 — with the House language — to the Senate.

The upper chamber refused to assent to this substitution, and a joint House - Senate conference committee was required. The conferees restored the Senate version substantially.

The conferees' action was approved by the House and Senate by voice votes, and the ultimate version of the measure was sent to the White House under the title S 2195, and was signed into law.

Provisions

1. Reauthorizes the Palisades Dam and Reservoir Project, with certain reservations on storage capacity for Grays Lake storage replacement and a limitation on allocation of funds for recreation facilities.

2. Authorizes the North Side Pumping Division of the Minidoka Project with administrative reservations and restrictions limiting use of funds for power lines to those for construction and operation of the plants authorized.

3. Authorizes the Secretary of Interior to contract with water users regarding use for their benefit of heretofore reserved storage capacity in American Falls Reservoir, and sets aside balance of the reserved capacity for use under contract for lands of the North Side Pumping Division of the Minidoka Project and for lands in the Michaud area found feasible for development.

4. Makes continuation of construction of the Palisades Dam contingent upon conservation of Winter water by users in the Upper Snake River Valley.

5. Authorizes appropriations of not to exceed $76,601,000 for Palisades Dam and Reservoir; $11,395,000 for the Minidoka Project's North Side Pumping Division, and $6,600,000 for the American Falls Power Plant.

BACKGROUND

The Palisades Dam Project initially was authorized in 1941 by the first session of the 71st Congress. Beginning in fiscal 1945, Congress appropriated $3,470,785 for preliminary construction work, in addition to the cost of engineering and investigation.

Construction of major units was regarded as dependent upon curtailment of certain wasteful Winter water diversions in the Snake River Valley. The Bureau of Reclamation undertook a study, and negotiations with users for curtailment were begun immediately after the Bureau's report was released in 1946. Also involved was reserved space under lease to water users in the American Falls Reservoir, built in 1927. A compromise was worked out among organized groups in the valley on disposition of the reserved space.

S 2195 and HR 5506, similar bills, were intended to confirm the tentative agreements with water users and authorize the construction of necessary facilites. S 2195, the version which utimately became law, was introduced by the late Bert H. Miller (D Idaho) July 6, 1949. The House bill was introduced the same day by Rep. John Sanborn (R Idaho.)

A Subcommittee on Irrigation and Reclamation of the House Public Lands Committee and a Special Subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs held joint hearings on HR 5506 Aug. 8-19, 1949.

The Senate Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs reported S 2195 favorably on Sept. 29, 1949, proposing several amendments including one to set a limit on the funds to be authorized. The House Committee on Public Lands had reported favorably HR 5506, with amendments similar to those proposed by the Senate committee.

SENATE

The Senate Interior and Insular Affairs Committee Sept. 6, 1950, submitted a supplemental report on S 2195 to the second session of the 81st Congress.

The report resulted from objections of the Bureau of Budget and recommended additional amendments. The Bureau asked that allocation of a portion of costs to fish and wildlife be limited to damages incident to construction and that the recreation allocation be limited to amount expended, and suggested other administrative reservations.

After brief debate, the Senate Sept. 13, 1950, passed the bill on a voice vote, after agreeing to the following amendments:

1. By the Interior and Insular Affairs Committee: Set limits on the funds for projects authorized, make completion of Palisades Dam conditional on execution of water savings contracts, limit certain non-reimbursable allocations and accomplish other administrative reservations.

2. By Sen. Homer Ferguson (R Mich.): Deny any authorization for construction of transmission lines.

HOUSE

In a supplemental report Aug. 26, 1950, the House Public Lands Committee recommended amendments to H R 5506 to make it conform to Budget Bureau recommendations, and reported that it "continues of the view the undertaking is a desirable one."

Reporting on the hearings, Rep. John R. Murdock (D Ariz.), chairman of the Committee, described the project as "a good example of a sound businesslike national investment."

The House then approved the Public Lands Committee's amendments setting limits on funds to be authorized, limiting certain non - reimbursable allocations and making administrative reservations.

After this, the House approved the bill (HR 5506) itself. Normally the House would have sent this measure across the Capitol to the Senate for its approval, but since the upper chamber had already passed a similar bill (S 2195), the House adopted a different tactic.

It voted to substitute the entire text of HR 5506 for the Senate language in S 2195. Accordingly, the measure that was sent to the upper chamber bore the Senate's number, but actually carried the lower chamber's text.

CONFERENCE

The Senate refused assent to the House's substitution of the language of HR 5506 for the original text of S 2195, and the legislation was sent to a joint House - Senate conference commitee.

The conferees recommended that the House agree to an amended version of the Senate bill. This amended version included authorization for construction of transmission lines, substations or distribution lines in connection with the projects themselves, deletion of a portion that would have made the act part of the federal reclamation law, and restoration of $350,000 for a nonreimbursable item that had been deducted through a misunderstanding.

The House agreed to the conference report Sept. 21, 1950, and the Senate agreed the following day, completing Congressional action.

LAW ENACTED

President Truman signed S 2195, authorizing the Palisades Dam and Reservoir Project, Sept. 30, 1950, and it became Public Law 864.

LOBBY STANDS

Representatives of the Bureau of Reclamation presented conclusions based on more than 20 years of studies, at joint hearings held by House and Senate Subcommittees on the Palisades Dam and Reservoir Project.

Watermasters, officials and representatives of communities in the Idaho area, and representatives of irrigation districts and other organizations of water users also appeared. In general they favored the project as did members of the Idaho Congressional delegation.

Representatives of private power companies favored the irrigation and flood control projects and offered to purchase surplus power and to construct facilities and transmit power.

They asked that the authorizations for construction of transmission lines, substations and distribution lines be deleted from the bill.

Shipping Subsidies

S 2786, HR 6719

SUMMARY

In 1949, the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee held hearings on and favorably reported a measure (HR 5346) to expand federal financial help to the U. S. shipping industry by extending the use of construction differential subsidies and other aid of a subsidy nature. But the Congress took no action on this measure. (See CQ Almanac, Vol. V, page 721.)

In 1950, a merchant marine study group of the Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee staged extensive hearings on a similar bill, S 2786. This legislation, however, was somewhat broader and more long-range. It was designed to amend substantial sections of the Merchant Marine Act of 1936 — frequently called the "Magna Carta" of the maritime industry.

For its part, the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee in 1950 also held hearings on so-called subsidy legislation, having before it HR 6719, a companion bill to S 2786. This House measure, however, was never reported.

Hearings on subsidy legislation touched numerous other aspects of the shipping industry. This was true in both the House and the Senate. Tramp shipping drew considerable attention. Even more discussion and study developed after the U. S. Comptroller General submitted a report on the way the Maritime Commission handled subsidies. However, most of the action stirred up by this report took place in the House Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. (See p. 616.)

Provisions Of S 2786

The Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee reported S 2786 on June 14. As submitted to the upper chamber, the measure was designed to aid the shipping industry by construction subsidies and lighter taxes as well. The subsidies were to go for vessels to be operated in the foreign trade. Allowances for depreciation of new ships were to be increased up to 10 per cent. Companies were to be allowed to hold their earnings in a special "construction reserve fund". Taxes on such funds were to be deferred until the new ships financed out of these sources were completely constructed.

The Senate itself failed to act on the legislation, but in both chambers of Congress some efforts connected with increasing or decreasing maritime subsidies were made with respect to the "omnibus" appropriations bill. (See page 113.)

SENATE

Hearings

Shortly after Congress reconvened in 1950, Chairman Warren G. Magnuson (D Wash.) of the Maritime Subcommittee of the Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee set Feb. 14 for the start of hearings on problems of the merchant marine. He noted that the hearings would cover several bills on various aspects of the industry, but principally S 2786, bearing on a long-range program of vessel construction and replacement.

When hearings opened, the initial attention focused promptly on S 2786. The features providing a deferment of taxes on shipping companies' revenues set aside for later construction purposes drew immediate fire from the Treasury Department.

Moreover, Magnuson said the Bureau of the Budget also opposed the tax provisions. However, the State Department and the Maritime Commission submitted letters to the Subcommittee giving modified approval to the measure.

Treasury Objections

In a sharply worded letter to the Subcommittee, Treasury Secretary John Snyder declared the provisions of the bill as introduced — particularly those allowing accelerated depreciation on ships of up to 15 per cent for income tax purposes, and extending tax deferment through construction reserve funds to domestic ship operators — would afford opportunity to shipowners to: (1) postpone indefinitely the tax on ordinary income; (2) convert ordinary income into capital gains; and (3) avoid tax completely in some cases.

Industry Support

But industry witnesses gave unstinted approval to the measure. Frazer Bailey, president of the American Federation of Shipping, Inc., discounted the Treasury contention that the bill would cost the government money. He said it would mean only that tax payments in some cases could be deferred, not lost. Daniel D. Strohmeier, vice-president of Bethlehem Steel Co. in charge of its shipbuilding division, said passage of the program would help to bring construction of projected ore-carrying ships to United States yards. Lachlan MacLeay, president of the Mississippi Valley Association, said his group "heartily approves" the legislation. Alexander Purdon, executive vice-president of the Quincy, Mass, Chamber of Commerce, said the bill would strengthen our economy by the expansion of our foreign trade.

Passage of the legislation would encourage an extensive program of new construction and modernization of existing vessels, W. B. Garner, executive vice-president of the Waterman Steamship Co., of Mobile, Ala., assured the Subcommittee. Garner's testimony was reiterated in substance by Dale L. Coy, a partner of Hutchinson & Co., of Cleveland, Ohio, and Leigh R. Sanford, executive vice president of the Shipbuilders Council of America. George W. Morgan, of New York,, president of the American Ship Owners, particularly praised the provision of the bill permitting tax-deferred funds for ship construction to be set aside out of earnings.

Union Support

John Green, of Camden, N. J., president of the CIO Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers of America, said it was vital that Congress provide a shipbuilding and repair program for this country to preserve the skills and equipment necessary for the maintenance of the industry. Herbert L. Daggett, president of the National Marine Engineers Beneficial Assn., urged direct subsidy assistance from the government for ship construction.

Magnuson placed before the group a letter from the Bureau of the Budget asserting that the subsidy aid and tax concession features of the bill could not be considered in accord with the President's program at that time because they raised questions of policy then being studied. Magnuson remarked that Congress will have to decide the policy question.

Sen. Herbert R. O'Conor (D Md.), a co-sponsor of the bill, Feb. 18 issued a statement declaring that unless Congress liberalized ship construction subsidies, the American shipbuilding industry would shrink below the standard needed for safe national defense. He noted that besides broadening subsidy aid and granting tax advantages, the proposed bill would: (1) Accelerate depreciation rate for income tax purposes; (2) Free ship owners of liability for that part of the cost of a ship "approved by the Navy as desirable for national defense"; (3) Remove a $25,000 ceiling now in effect on salaries of executives of companies receiving construction and operating subsidies.

Final S 2786 Testimony

Before winding up hearings on S 2786 on Feb. 24, the Subcommittee heard renewed protests from Treasury Secretary John Snyder, who contended the measure would subsidize a single industry and discriminate against taxpayers generally. He expressed his views in a letter read to the Subcommittee by Vance N. Kirby, reasury Department tax counse.

Grenville Mellen, Maritime Commission vice chairman, on Feb. 24 called the legislation essential to maintenance of an American merchant marine. He sharply criticized testimony given the day before by Commissioner Raymond S. McKeough who opposed features of the measure. Sen. O'Conor said Feb. 25 that unless the measure was enacted promptly, the shipbuilding industry "soon will be far below minimum security needs."

The Committee then shifted from considering S 2786 exclusively to studying related matters. These included the transfer of American flag vessels to foreign registry (p. 621), the questions of ship sales and charters, (620) and the status of the ship-repair industry (p. 620).

Subsidy Report Row

In a related development, the U. S. Maritime Commission was accused April 11 of "inept handling of delinquent wartime shipping accounts totaling more than $39 million." The accusation was made in a report by the Investigations Subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Expenditures in Executive Departments, which held lengthy hearings in 1949 on Maritime Commission operations.

Chairman Clyde R. Hoey (D N.C.) said in a statement accompanying the report: "The manner in which the Maritime Commission handled this very large backlog of delinquent accounts receivable, prior to the Subcommittee's investigation, is an example of inefficiency which should not be tolerated in government."

Steamship operators vigorously defended themselves against additional charges made by the General Accounting Office that "irregular" methods were used to arrive at ship subsidies. (Although these GAO charges were made before the House Committee on Expenditures, the rebuttal of the shipping companies was made before the Magnuson Subcommittee.)

Witnesses contended that their earnings were not attributed largely to government subsidies, which they claimed GAO charged. Those advocating no substantial change in the 1936 Merchant Marine Act which provided a shipping subsidy were:

John E. Slater, president of the American Export Lines; Solon B. Turman, executive vice-president, and Frank A. Nemec, secretary-treasurer of Lykes Brothers, Maitland S. Pennington, vice-president of Pacific Transport Lines, John M. Franklin, president of United States Lines, James A. Farrell Jr., president of Farrell Lines, and Emmet J. McCormack, treasurer of Moore-McCormack Lines, and George Killion, president of American President Lines. Statements also came from officials of the Mississippi Shipping Co., the American Mail Line and the Seas Shipping Co.

Tramp Shipping Reviewed

Turning in the third week of April to the question of tramp shipping, the Subcommittee investigating problems of the U. S. merchant marine heard John T. Carpenter, vice-president of the unsubsidized States Marine Lines, ask that the government "underwrite the difference" between the wage scales of American and foreign crews. F. Riker Clark said subsidies would have to be forthcoming to save the operators of 125 U. S. tramp vessels from bankruptcy. Such subsidies would amount to about $150,000 annually per vessel, he estimated.

Unless Federal subsidies were given to American tramp ships which operate on unscheduled routes, such shipping will be forced off the high seas within three years, subsidy advocates told the Senate group in subsequent appearances.

Operating subsidies were necessary to permit American tramp ships to meet foreign competition, according to the following witnesses: Marvin J. Coles, counsel for the American Tramp Shipping committee; Charles C Dunaif, president of the Polarus Steamship Co., of New York, William N. Westerlund, president of Marine Transport Lines, and Sylvester E. Rothschild, vice-president of the Ship Operators and Owners Association. Coles told the Subcommittee that the tramp shipping industry would be willing to submit to government regulation on the same basis as subsidized liner services in order to qualify for subsidies, estimated to cost about $141,000 per ship annually.

Opposition Registered

The subsidized lines emphatically opposed ship subsidies for the tramp vessels unless they were made subject to restrictions on operations. Those who testified to this effect were: Frazer Bailey, president of the National Federation of American Shipping, Inc., of Washington and Theodore Brent, chairman of the Mississippi Shipping Company, Inc., of New Orleans. George W. Morgan, president of the Association of American Shipowners, suggested it might be better to increase American foreign trade than to vote for subsidies for American tramp shipping.

Report

Although S 2786 was reported to the Senate on June 14, no action was taken on it during the remainder of the 81st Congress. In fact, the only discussion or action taken on the Senate floor in connection with maritime subsidies came in connection with debate and amendments to the "omnibus" appropriations bill. (See page 113.)

HOUSE

The so-called subsidy bill (HR 6719) was not itself taken up in the House Merchant Marine Committee until late Summer. But the entire question of federal subsidies to the maritime industry provoked considerable discussion in February in the House Committee on Executive Expenditures. These discussions paralleled hearings in the Senate on the upper chamber's companion bill (S 2786) to HR 6719.

Expenditures

A report by the U.S. Comptroller General on the way the Maritime Commission handled operating subsidies to American shipping lines was the subject of hearings Feb. 13 and 14 before a Subcommittee of the House Committee on Executive Department Expenditures. One of the Commission's own members, Raymond S. McKeough testified Feb. 13 in support of the Comptroller General's charge that shipping subsidy practices were frequently unjustified and were handled in a slipshod manner.

The report in the spotlight was submitted by Comptroller General Lindsay C. Warren, whose office serves as the "watchdog of the Treasury." It was in the form of a 1948-49 audit of the Commission's books,, and in it Warren advised Congress to take a close look at subsidy allowances which he said frequently reflected "distorted" figures and "overstated the subsidy" needs of the steamship companies. He said Congress might have to take steps to recover some "illegal expenditures". He did not enlarge on this except to say that the Commission used a formula that "goes wholly beyond the law" in figuring how much credit shipping lines should receive for old ships that they "trade in" for new vessels. He pointed out, too, that the value of the 12 American lines that receive government subsidies — to make up the difference between American and foreign operating costs — had increased in 12 years from $65 to $363 million.

Testimony also was offered the Subcommittee Feb. 14 by Gerald H. Helmbold, chief of the Commission's Bureau of Government Aids, who concurred "generally" in the Warren Report. He explained that shipping lines now are being required to submit sworn statements on data offered in support of their applications for subsidy grants. In the past, he said, these grants often have been made "without verification."

Helmbold did not dispute the Warren charge that so many "errors and omissions" were present in operating subsidy calculations as to render them "totally unreliable."

Rep. Porter Hardy, Jr. (D Va.), chairman of the Subcommittee holding the hearings, said the fact that errors consistently appeared to favor the companies "certainly raises the question of motivation." He would not enlarge on his observation.

Asserts Data Ignored

A ship-construction expert told the Subcommittee Feb. 20 that the Maritime Commission, in his opinion, ignored some official data he had submitted on foreign ship costs in computation of subsidies awarded to American steamship companies to enable them to maintain their competitive position. This testimony came from John E. P. Grant, former foreign representative for the Commission and a long-time maritime expert.

In a second appearance before the group, Helmbold testified the same day that in the case of the United States Lines, the Commission "appeared" to have used outdated information, although current figures had been at hand for months. Helmbold said in the case of a Grace Line ship, the subsidy had been figured on the basis of the vessel's maiden voyage, which he said would represent costs higher than normal.

The Subcommittee's inquiry was closed March 27 after Commission members had engaged in a brief tangle.

The controversy was touched off when a letter, written by Philip B. Fleming, chairman of the five-man Commission, in defense of the Commission's practices, was introduced as evidence at the hearings. Rep. Porter Hardy Jr. (D Va.), Subcommittee chairman, then asked if Fleming's views were those of the entire Commission. Two members — Grenville Mellen and Joseph Carson — said they "subscribed" to the chairman's views.

Commissioner Raymond McKeough, however, dissented. He had previously offered outspoken criticism of the Commission's subsidy payments and operations.

In a cross-fire, Mellen expressed belief that "it is far more than coincidental that McKeough's dissents coincide with the Comptroller General." McKeough expressed the opinion the Comptroller General showed he (McKeough) was no longer "in the minority" in opposing the Commission's operations.

Expenditures Committee Report

On May 18, the Hardy Subcommittee issued a blistering report charging the U. S. Maritime Commission with "incompetency, procrastination and inconsistency" in its job of serving as an intermediary between the government and the nation's ship operators.

The Subcommittee supported virtually all the Comptroller General's audit findings. Charging the Commission with holding a "one-way street approach for the benefit of the ship operators," the Subcommittee reported its agreement with the charge that the Commission was far too liberal in its aids to steamship lines. Errors in calculations, it pointed out, appeared most often to favor the companies.

The Congressmen were particularly critical of the Commission's personnel, including the commissioners. The testimony of the commissioners, the report said, emphasized a need "for consistent, well-founded and decisive administration." It called the then-Commission Chairman Philip Fleming to task for "inconsistency" and for "either a complete lack of understanding" or a "desire to meaninglessly quibble."

The report made no mention of President Truman's Reorganization Plan 21, abolishing the five-man Commission and establishing a three-man Maritime Board in the Commerce Department. The plan became effective May 23. (See page 371.)

Merchant Marine Committee

In the middle of August, a Subcommittee of the House Merchant Marine Committee received testimony from ship owners and others on its bill (HR 6719) designed to provide the tramp shipping industry with government operating subsidies.

On August 23, Marvin J. Coles, counsel for the Committee for the Protection of Tramp Shipping, said that without such subsidies the industry "could not exist for a year of normal commerce." According to Coles, there were more than 1,000 American-flag ships operating in tramp trades right after World War II but the figure is now about 100. The number of seamen employed by tramp steamers has gone down from 40,000 to 4,000, he asserted.

On August 24, representatives of other sections of the shipping industry opposed the proposed legislation. John Tilney Carpenter, vice president of the States Marine Lines, argued that it was wrong to help only a certain number of ship owners and not the rest. George Morgan, president of the Association of American Ship Owners, declared that subsidizing tramp freighters would work a disadvantage to the regular ship operator because the latter requires full or part bulk cargoes to support his over-all operation.

Among those testifying in support of tramp subsidies August 24 were F. Riker Clark, chairman of the Tramp Shipping Protection Committee, Vance D. Chapline, of Marine Transport Lines, New York; and Nicholas Manolis, of North Eastern Shipping Corporation. The CIO Maritime Committee submitted a statement favoring the measure.

After hearings on HR 6719 were closed, no further action was taken on the bill. However, some attempts were made to impose more stringent ceilings on federal subsidies when the "omnibus" appropriations bill was moved through Congress. (See page 113).

LOBBY STANDS

These were the major organizations registering stands on S 2786, HR 6719 and related measures pertaining to construction subsidies, tax advantages and other aid to shipping.

For subsidies and tax relief:

States Marine Lines

Ship Operators and Owners Association

U. S. Maritime Commission

U. S. State Department

National Federation of American Shipping

Bethlehem Steel Company

Mississippi Valley Association

Waterman Steamship Company

Lake Carriers Association

Shipbuilders Council of America

National Marine Engineers Beneficial Association.

Brotherhood of Boilermakers, Iron Shipbuilders and Helpers of America

CIO Maritime Committee

National Foreign Trade Council AFL

American Merchant Marine Institute

Against them:

U. S. Treasury

U. S. Bureau of the Budget

Other views:

The American Foreign Steamship Corp. was for subsidies for tramp ships, and so was the Committee for the Promotion of Tramp Shipping Under the American Flag, but the Association of American Ship Owners was definitely against subsidies for tramp steamers.

While generally favoring construction subsidies, the CIO Marine and Shipbuilding Workers Union asked for a different method of computing them than the legislation carried.

Great Lakes Shipping

HR 8847—P.L. 856

SUMMARY

As it became law, this bill (HR 8847) authorized the Maritime Commission to sell ten war-built, surplus vessels to private operators on the Great Lakes. The operators wished to purchase the ships in order to resume so-called "package freight" shipping and passenger services on the Great Lakes. Prior to World War II 24 ships had been engaged in freight shipping and 19 in passenger service.

The legislation, which sponsors said would greatly revive Lakes shipping, set a floor price for the government-owned vessels. It also provided that the government would refund the cost of conversion (up to 90 per cent of the purchase price) if the ships were converted and transferred to the Great Lakes by Dec. 31, 1951. In effect, this refund of such a large portion of the purchase price amounted to government subsidies for reinstitution of Great Lakes package shipping.

The measure (HR 8847) that ultimately became law was only one of 24 identical bills simultaneously introduced in the House on March 2. Seven Senators introduced a companion measure (S 3109), but it was the House bill that drew lower chamber passage on Aug. 21, Senate approval on Sept. 18, and President Truman's signature on Sept. 28.

HOUSE

Committee

On March 2, 1950, 24 Representatives from Great Lakes states introduced identical bills designed to "restore Lake shipping, upon which our national security and the prosperity of the Midwest depend." The bill was to authorize sale of 10 war-built vessels owned by the Maritime Commission to private lake operators. Purchasers were to be allowed to deduct from the price the cost of converting the ships to freight or passenger service.

Sponsoring the bills were: John Blatnik (D Minn.), John B. Bennett (R Mich.), Andrew J. Biemiller (D Wis.), John W. Byrnes (R Wis.), Chester A. Chesney (D Ill.), Thurman C. Crook (D Ind.), John C. Davies (D N.Y.), William L. Dawson (D Ill.), Albert J. Engel (R Mich.), Chester C. Gorski (D N.Y.), Harold C. Hagen (R Minn.), Edgar A. Jonas (R Ill.), Neil J. Linehan (D Ill.), Harold O. Lovre (R S.D.), Mike Mansfield (D Mont.), Fred Marshall (D Minn.), Charles E. Potter (R Mich.), Anthony F. Tauriello (D N.Y.), Clement J. Zablocki (D Wis.), Fred L. Crawford (R Mich.), Barratt O'Hara (D Ill.), Roy O. Woodruff (R Mich.), William Lemke (R N.D.) and George D. O'Brien (D Mich.).

The bills were referred to the Merchant Marine Committee, which opened brief hearings.

Rep. Blatnik went before the group on March 29 to assert that the restoration of package freight and passenger service on the Great Lakes would be "a substantial shot in the arm to the (entire) midwest" and would help meet "mounting unemployment."

The following month, in a resumption of hearings on HR 8847, the House Committee heard Reps. Jesse P. Wolcott (R Mich.), William Lemke (R N.D.) and Thurman C. Crook (D Ind.) testify in favor of the legislation. However, the Association of American Railroads opposed it at a May 18 session of the Committee.

(For additional organizations registering stands, see page 619.)

Related Bill

While HR 8847 received most of the House group's attention, a similar bill (HR 7954) by Edgar A. Jonas (R Ill.) did draw consideration. At hearings on May 17, the Lake Carriers Association, representing 40 Great Lakes shipping firms, The National Federation of American Shipping, and the Maritime Commission, opposed this legislation drawn to authorize reconstruction and charter or sale of nine old ore vessels.

These vessels had been acquired more than 10 years ago as trade-ins on new ships, and under the Merchant Marine Act of 1936, could be sold only for scrap. Gilbert R. Johnson, counsel for the Lake Carriers Association, stated that when Great Lakes operators acquired new vessels in 1943 they were assured the old ones would be scrapped at the end of the war emergency. Philip B. Fleming, Chairman of the Maritime Commission, said reconstruction of the 40-year old ships would not aid development of the American merchant marine on a long-range basis.

The measure was nevertheless approved by the House group on June 30, and passed the House on July 10, although it received no further action in the 81st Congress.

HR 8847 Reported

On July 13 the House Merchant Marine Committee favorably reported HR 8847, after amending it to prohibit the use of any of the subsidy (represented by the possible refund of 90 per cent of the purchase price) for moving the ships from their existing anchorages up the Mississippi River into the Great Lakes.

Floor Action

The sponsors of HR 8847 entered the bill on the House consent calendar, but when the measure came up via this device on Aug. 7, Rep. Boyd Tackett (D Ark.) objected. This sufficed to kill the measure's chances for final passage at that time.

On Aug. 21, however, the bill again came up when the consent calendar was called, and this time it was passed without objection.

SENATE

Committee

A companion bill to HR 8847 was a measure (S 3109) introduced in the Senate on Feb. 24 by Sens. Edward J. Thye (R Minn.), Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.), Paul Douglas (D Ill.), Homer Ferguson (R Mich.), William Langer (R N.D.), Milton R. Young (R N.D.) and Alexander Wiley (R Wis.).

Their measure also authorized the Maritime Commission to sell ten war-surplus ships for use on the Lakes. As the House bill had, their bill also specified that part of the purchase price would be refunded to permit private operators to offset some of the costs of converting the vessels and transferring them to the Great Lakes.

The measure was referred to a Merchant Marine Subcommittee of the Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce group, which opened hearings.

Thye and Wiley appeared March 13 to support their bill. The bill would revive Lakes shipping, they said. The cost of new ships or reconversion at the current government sale price was prohibitive to private companies, they explained.

Also testifying in favor were representatives of the International Shipmasters Association, Buffalo; Waterfront Labor Federation, AFL, Buffalo; and Reps. John A. Blatnik (D Minn.) and Charles E. Potter (R Mich.). Gregory Prince, of the Association of American Railroads, testified in opposition to the bill.

Floor Action

The Senate group reported S 3109 on June 14. On Aug. 8 it came up in the chamber when the calendar was called, but was blocked by an objection from Sen. John Williams (R Del.), Sens. Thye, Warren Magnuson (D Wash.), and Ferguson were unable to waive Williams' objections.

On Sept. 13 Magnuson brought up S 3109, then moved that the Senate proceed to consider the companion bill which had already passed the House, HR 8847. The measure was temporarily set aside the following day to permit consideration of the supplemental appropriation bill. When debate was resumed Sept. 15 Majority Leader Scott Lucas (D Ill.) obtained a unanimous-consent agreement to vote on all amendments and on passage of the bill on the following Monday, Sept. 18, with the time to be equally divided between Magnuson, for the bill, and Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.), opposed.

In the debate on the bill Magnuson and Thye contended that the sale of the ten surplus ships would encourage the revival of package freight and passenger shipping on the Great Lakes. Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) said that the ships would do more good if they were put to use than if they were permitted to rust.

Williams argued that the measure was contrary to the country's interests, as these ships were among the fastest and best equipped in the nation's reserve fleet. But Magnuson disagreed, on the basis that there were about 1,800 ships of this type, and that the country could well get along with 10 less.

O'Mahoney's objections centered largely around the allowance for conversion costs of up to 90 per cent of the purchase price. Humphrey pointed out that the government had allowed as high as 99 per cent for conversion costs on vessels going into foreign trade, and that the 90 per cent figure therefore seemed reasonaable.

O'Mahoney's amendment to reduce conversion allowance to 75 per cent was rejected by voice vote Sept. 18. Edward Martin (R Pa.) offered a motion to recommit which was rejected by a roll-call vote of 14-49 (see p. 724 for vote) and the measure passed by voice vote Sept. 18.

AMENDMENT REJECTED

Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.) -- reduce allowance for conversion from 90 per cent to 75 per cent of purchase price. Voice vote.

Law Enacted

President Truman signed HR 8847 into law on Sept. 28.

LOBBY STANDS

Organizations taking stands on the legislation either via witnesses at House or Senate hearings or via communications to Congress were:

Generally Favoring

Other Views

The Lake Carriers Association opposed legislation which would have transferred nine old vessels into package shipping on the Great Lakes. The LCA and the Lake Superior Iron Ore Association also joined to oppose a ban on alleged overloading of ore ships on the Lakes. The CIO Maritime Committee sharply criticized this alleged practice when it was discussed before Congressional groups.

Ship Sales, Charters

This legislation, permitting the Secretary of Commerce to sell war-built vessels through Jan. 15, 1951, was passed by the House June 29, by the Senate June 30, and signed by the President the same day. Without its enactment the authority granted by the Merchant Ship Sales Act of 1946 to the old Maritime Commission—now the Maritime Administration in the Commerce Department—would have expired June 30, 1950.

Under this act new charters may be issued only where required in the public interest, after public hearings by the Federal Maritime Board, and will be subject to annual review by the Board. The act also authorized extension to October 31, 1950, of charters in existence on June 30, if such extension were requested within 10 days after enactment, and approved by the Federal Maritime Board.

As it first passed the Senate on June 6, the bill extended to Dec. 31, 1950, the time in which sales might be negotiated. It extended chartering authority to Sept. 30, 1950. But when the House passed the measure on June 27, some changes were made, and the legislation was sent to a joint House-Senate conference. This group reached agreement June 29 on the compromise version that became law within 30 hours.

Organizations favoring extension of chartering and sales authority were the Sailors Union of the Pacific, the Marine Engineers Beneficial Association, the American Hawaiian Steamship Company, the Navy (for refrigerator ships only) and, to some extent, the Waterman Steamship Corp.

Against extension of chartering authority were the National Federation of American Shipping and Maj. Gen Philip B. Fleming, former chairman of the Maritime Commission, and since July 21 Undersecretary of Commerce for Transportation.

HR 3419—Vetoed

This legislation was also to amend the Merchant Ship Sales Act of 1946. One section provided for exchange, with full credit, of Liberty type war-built tankers for Liberty type war-built dry-cargo vessels. The other feature related to method of determining the cost basis of vessels sold by the government.

Under the 1946 Act a "statutory sales price" was established for merchant ships sold subsequent to enactment, and a formula provided for adjustment in prices paid by purchasers who bought vessels at higher prices prior to enactment. Sponsors of HR 3419 said that, even with this adjustment, the prior purchaser usually came out with a higher cost than the statutory sales price, but the Bureau of Internal Revenue had ruled that the statutory sales price would have to be used as the cost basis for purposes of depreciation. This lower figure resulted, of course, in lower depreciation charges and higher taxes.

HR 3419 would have amended the act to provide that "the cost basis of a vessel in respect of which the price adjustment is made shall be the undepreciated original purchase price reduced by the net amount of such adjustment in favor of the applicant."

The House had passed the bill Oct. 3, 1949. The Senate passed it Sept. 13, 1950. The President did not sign it before Congress adjourned, and the bill was "pocket vetoed".

On Sept. 28 Mr. Truman sent a "Memorandum of Disapproval" to the Congress. He pointed out that if HR 3419 became law it would destroy "the consistent pattern of treatment provided in the act. . ." ,and that operators might lose the advantage which they now have of being able to "choose the course of action which would prove the more beneficial to them taxwise, an election which will still be available to purchasers who have filed for price adjustments but have not yet accepted them."

Related Maritime Affairs

Here are some of the sundry maritime and related bills that Congress took up at one time or another during 1950. Some became law; most did not.

Ship Repairs

In the Spring of 1950, U. S. Maritime Commission and union spokesmen urged a Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Subcommittee studying merchant marine matters to support adoption of a $25 million program to prevent "demoralization" of the American ship repair industry.

Charles D. Marshall, general manager of the U. S. Maritime Commission, March 29 told the Subcommittee that ship repair employment in the United States fell from 78,762 in March, 1948, to 22,157 in December, 1949. As a stop-gap measure, he said the Commission recommended spending $25 million for drydocking, surveying, inspecting and repairing 134 vessels in the Commission's laid-up fleet. He estimated this would provide employment for 4,500 to 5,000 persons for one year. He also said the armed services should get out of the commercial shipping business, transporting in military ships only cargoes that cannot be transported commercially.

The fleet repair program was soundly endorsed by James A. Brownlow, secretary-treasurer of the Metal Trade Workers-AFL, and Maywood Boggs, Washington representative of the Boiler Workers-AFL.

No formal action was given the legislation.

Canadian Ships

The Senate June 16 passed and sent to the House a bill, S 3771, extending authority until June 30, 1951, for Canadian ships to carry passengers between various ports in Alaska or continental U. S. The House passed the bill June 22, and the President signed it June 29, when it became Public Law 584.

Troopships

A subcommittee of the House Merchant Marine Committee held hearings Aug. 29 and 30 on a bill (HR 9534) to authorize the government to buy at any time that money was available vessels required for the national defense. According to Rep. John J. Allen, Jr., (R Calif.), the immediate purpose of the bill was to enable the Commerce Department to buy the Mariposa and the Monterey, big 20-knot passenger liners that were used as troopships in World War II. The ships would be for use either in the Korean war or some future emergency.

This bill, however, was never reported. Instead, the House by voice vote and without opposition Sept. 13 passed and sent to the Senate another bill (HR 9626) authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to purchase the Mariposa and Monterey, for use as troopships. The Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee favorably reported the measure on Sept. 20, but it failed to get action subsequently.

Ship Inspections

The House Merchant Marine Committee Sept. 20 approved a bill (HR 9681) authorizing the Coast Guard and Bureau of Customs to transfer their responsibility for administering the navigation and vessel-inspection laws to the Secretary of Defense if he considers such a move necessary for the national defense. The bill was introduced in the House Sept. 15 by Rep. Edward J. Hart (D N. J.). The House passed the bill Sept. 21, but the Senate failed to act.

Investigations

A subcommittee of the House Armed Services Committee was appointed Sept. 1 to investigate whether the Military Sea Transport Service was in direct competition with private shipping. The subcommittee was appointed by Chairman Carl Vinson (D Ga.). Franck R. Havenner (D Calif.) was named to head the subcommittee. Other members were Jack Z. Anderson (R Calif.) and Clyde Doyle (D Calif.).

The Senate Commerce Committee had reported June 14 a bill (S 3687) to require the armed services to use American shipping for freight and civilian travel.

Sen. Herbert R. O'Conor (D Md.) said Sept. 27 that an investigation was underway into charges that an American merchant ship carried contraband gasoline and armor plate to Communist China. O'Conor said the ship had docked in San Francisco and that the investigation was being conducted by the Coast Guard and other government agencies. The investigation, O'Conor said, was touched off Sept. 22 after Sen. Warren G. Magnuson (D Wash.) read the Senate a letter written by a seaman, about the supposed incident.

Foreign Transfer

For a few days in February and March, a Senate maritime Subcommittee of the upper chamber's Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee looked at the question of American - flag ships being transferred to foreign registries.

The policy of American-owned vessels sailing under foreign registry was scored Feb. 27 by Joseph Curran, chairman of the CIO Maritime Committee, and Herbert L. Daggett, president of the National Marine Engineers Beneficial Association. They said American operators who transfer their ships seek cheap labor, evasion of taxes and the advantages of generally lower operating costs.

Oliver R. Grace, president of the Southern Seas Steamship Co., Feb. 28 told the Subcommittee that the U. S. tanker fleet was twice as big as needed for the coastal movement of petroleum. He said petroleum would be carried more cheaply in foreign ships as the Middle East replaces the U. S. as the world's major source of oil.

The same day, Rear Adm. W. M. Callaghan testified that the Navy Department saw no threat to national defense if old-type American vessels were transferred to foreign registry. Maj. Gen. Philip B. Fleming, chairman of the Maritime Commission, and Commissioner David J. Coddaire, said the general yardstick they applied to requests for transfers was whether the ship was necessary to the merchant marine for national defense. Commissioner McKeough opposed all transfers, on the grounds that "in war time anything that floats is a prize."

On March 3, the Association of American Ship Owners in a letter to the Senate group asserted that old ships uneconomical for U. S. owners to operate — did not constitute a threat to American - flag vessels if transferred to foreign registry. The Association said such transfers would actually be in the interests of an efficient American-flag shipping fleet.

No legislation on this question received formal action.

Synthetic Rubber Program

HR 7579 — P.L. 575

SUMMARY

Through a bill that became law hours before the North Korean invasion posed a new threat to the nation's natural rubber supply, the 81st Congress took action to keep the government in the synthetic rubber business for an additional two years.

The President signed HR 7579 June 24, 1950, and it became Public Law 575. Actually the bill's only provisions were for changes in dates of the Rubber Act of 1948 to extend it for two years without other revision.

The 1948 Act required the President to recommend a program for selling or leasing the remaining 33 of the 51 war-built synthetic rubber plants still owned by the government. Congress was reluctant to dispose of the plants because of the demands of national security. The President's proposal and alternate plans submitted by the industry all were rejected in favor of extension of the existing law.

Under the original Rubber Act, the government retained control of a new industry that was developed from almost nothing during the war years and which provided most of the nation's supply in the crisis. It contained provisions for eventual transfer of the facilities to private industry by action of Congress. Congress retained the disposal provisions in extending the Act.

The House passed the bill, on a voice vote May 19, 1950. The Senate passed the bill June 16, 1950, and the House concurred in a Senate amendment that reduced the extension to two years June 19, 1950.

Provisions

Public Law 575:

1. Requires that a report be submitted to the President and Congress by April 1, 1951, on a program for disposal to private industry of government-owned rubber-producing facilities other than those authorized to be disposed of in other sections of the Rubber Act of 1948. Before Jan. 15, 1952, the President, after consultation with the National Security Resources Board, is required to recommend to Congress legislation with respect to such disposal. These provisions were established by changing dates in the original act, which required a report April 1, 1949, and a recommendation to Congress Jan. 15, 1950. Changes were in Section 9 (a) of the act.

2. Extends the act from June 20, 1950, to June 30, 1952, by changing the date in Section 20 of the Rubber Act of 1948.

BACKGROUND

Congress re-evaluated the nation's synthetic rubber program in mid-1950 in an atmosphere of growing concern over the international situation generally and the importance of an unfailing source of rubber, natural or synthetic, to national security.

Congress studied the synthetic program at a time when Communist advances and internal disruptions threatened access to and the productive capacities of the Far East nations that are the source of more than 95 per cent of the world's crude rubber supply.

It found that synthetic rubber produced at about 18 cents a pound was cheaper than natural rubber, which had reached twice that figure (and later went still higher). Industry sources said rapid Russian stockpiling had skyrocketed the price.

In the four war years, total rub ber imports into the U.S. were barely enough for a six-month supply. According to a Senate committee report, some headway in production of chemical rubber had been made by several industrial concerns but the actual output of synthetic was only about 8,000 tons in 1941.

At a cost of $697 millions, the U.S. by 1944 had developed a synthetic rubber industry capable of producing more than 900,000 long tons. Facilities were government-owned and were operated on a contractual basis by private industry.

After the war, the 80th Congress studied the industrial rubber program and its relation to national security and drafted the Rubber Act of 1948. (CQ Almanac, 1948, p. 357.)

The Act directed that rubber producing facilities with an annual rated capacity of not less than 665,000 long tons be maintained and that government or privately operated facilities produce not less than 220,000 tons a year.

It also held that "the security interests of the United States will best be served by the development of a free competitive industry" and declared that government ownership and control should be terminated whenever consistent with national security.

The Act required a report to Congress and the President by April 1, 1949, on a program for disposal of the synthetic facilities to private industry, and a recommendation to Congress by Jan. 15, 1950, for disposal of remaining government--owned plants.

The required report was ultimately made by John R. Steelman, presidential assistant and acting chairman of the National Security Resources Board.

President's Endorsement

The President Jan. 15, 1950, endorsed the recommendations of Steelman and proposed a 10-year program with the President authorized to dispose of the plants to private owners "under conditions which will protect the national security and promote effective competition".

He asked authority to fix the minimum level of production and consumption of synthetic rubber, even where the plants had been placed in private hands, and suggested safeguards, in disposing of the plants, against abusive monopoly. The Steelman report spelled out the desired controls over specific facilities, level and type of production and consumption.

HOUSE

Committee Hearings

A special subcommittee of the House Armed Service Committees Feb. 20, 1950, began hearings on the President's recommendations concerning synthetic rubber.

In opening the hearings, Chairman Carl Vinson (D Ga.) of the Committee said that unless there was some compelling reason, he believed the Rubber Act of 1948 should be retained and extended in the interest of national security and because of chaotic world conditions.

Secretary of Commerce Charles Sawyer outlined the administration plan under which the government would retain control for 10 years of production and use of synthetic rubber, even where plants were disposed of to private industry.

Industry spokesmen generally opposed phases of the President's program. W. J. Sears, vice president of the Rubber Manufacturers' Association and chief spokesman for the industry before the Subcommittee, termed the President's plan a "no-disposal program".

Sears said the industry favored purchase or lease of the plants by private concerns but with a minimum of continued government control.

R. C. Jopling, vice president of Phillips Petroleum Co., said the administration plan would foster a big company monopoly, and said that under the 1948 Act the industry was not private and competitive but was a government-controlled monopoly.

Three Methods Suggested

For the rubber manufacturing industry, he presented the report of an industry National Security Policy Committee which included three alternate plans for transferring facilities to private ownership. The methods included stockpiling provisions and requirements for minimum production. Method A called for leases to be negotiated not later than Oct. 1, 1950, while Method B included a time schedule for transition of ownership with actual transfers to become effective July 1, 1951. Method C called for use and stockpile specifications over a two-year period and an industry report to government on recommendations for sale or lease of the plants before Jan. 15, 1952.

Several other prominent industry spokesmen either appeared or statements from them were read into the hearing record. Their testimony was accepted after a closed meeting of the Subcommittee, called by Vinson before any industry witnesses were heard to determine whether the hearing should be continued. Members indicated the committee "has about made up its mind" after two witnesses, both representing the administration, were heard.

An appraisal of the administration's case was offered prior to close of the hearings, by Earl W. Glen, chief of the rubber division of the Commerce Department. He contended that mandatory controls over both consumption and production of synthetic rubber are needed to keep the industry in good working order. Glen insisted the government needed wider authority to safeguard national security over the period of plant disposal and ensuing private operation.

The Subcommittee ended its hearing Feb. 27, 1950, and on March 2 recommended that the 1948 Act be extended unchanged for three years.

Committee Reports

Declaring that the President's 10-year program for U. S. synthetic rubber facilities did not "fulfill national security requirements as completely as the existing law", the House Armed Services Committee March 14, 1950, recommended a three-year extension of the Rubber Act of 1948.

The Committee also criticized three plans for the synthetic rubber facilities which were advanced by the rubber-manufacturing industry. The bill recommended was introduced by Rep. Carl Vinson (D Ga.), chairman of the Committee, and merely extended the existing act, which the Committee said "from the national security viewpoint...has no serious defects."

It strongly indorsed the eventual turning over of the government-owned facilities to private industry, the Committee said, but "is unwilling to surrender the jurisdiction of the Congress over this highly significant problem."

The President's recommendations, the Committee said, did not contain a statutory minimum figure of synthetic rubber to be produced and consumed annually in the U. S. and did not provide a definite capacity of synthetic rubber facilities to be maintained in stand-by or in operation. The Rubber Act of 1948 included both these security safeguards, the Committee added. It also expressed opposition to "long-term legislation on a matter so sensitive to world conditions and so vital to national security." The President proposed legislation for a 10-year period.

The industry plans, the Committee said, contained disposal, stockpiling and administrative and operating provisions which the Committee either opposed or felt to be impracticable.

Debate

President Truman's recommendations for the nation's synthetic rubber program were criticized as "nebulous and uncertain" May 19, 1950, when the House debated the bill (HR 7579) to extend the Rubber Act of 1948.

The administration's plan for disposal of plants over a 10-year period was termed "seriously deficient" by Carl Vinson (D Ga.), chairman of the Armed Services Committee which favorably reported Vinson's bill to prolong the life of the 1948 Act.

Members spent considerable time discussing the war-spurred synthetic rubber program and explaining the 1948 Act which provided for continuing operation of some plants while others were maintained on a stand-by basis. Both the production program and the legislation drew high praise and there was little actual debate on the merits of the bill extending the act.

Final Action

The House May 19, 1950, passed by voice vote the bill (HR 7579) to extend until June 30, 1953, the Rubber Act of 1948. (CQ Almanac, 1948 p. 357.)

The bill was to extend for three years the law maintaining war-time synthetic rubber plants in operating or stand-by condition, under government ownership.

SENATE

Committee Hearings

A Senate Armed Services Subcommittee held hearings June 5, 6 and 8, 1950, on three plans for the future of the government's synthetic rubber facilities.

One plan discussed was that embodied in HR 7579, merely extending the 1948 Act. Another was in the bill (S 3294)by John W. Bricker (R Ohio) to make the present optional leasing of government plants to private industry mandatory and reduce the compulsory use of synthetic rubber. The third was the program recommended by President Truman, providing for the sale of the plants to private industry but with continued government controls over production and consumption for a 10-year period.

Bricker testified June 5 in support of his bill and said it had the "overwhelming support" of the industry. He listed the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. as the only exception. He argued the administration's plan, attempting to embody both plant disposal and mandatory use of synthetic rubber, was unworkable.

George M. Tisdale, vice-president of the U. S. Rubber Co., said his company would not be interested in buying the government plants under terms of the administration's recommendations. R. C. Jopling, vice-president of the Phillips Petroleum Co., testified he doubted if anybody would purchase the plants under those terms.

O. V. Tracy, manager of the chemical products department of the Standard Oil Co., recommended that the two government-owned plants making butyl rubber be sold promptly to private industry. Assistant Secretary of Commerce Thomas C. Blaisdell, Jr., testified in support of the administration's plan but agreed with Bricker that the objective should be to encourage private development of synthetic rubber.

Harvey S. Firestone, Jr., chairman of the Firestone Tire & Rubber Co., June 6 urged adoption of the Bricker bill, while a letter from Hubert E. Howard, chairman of the Munitions Board, recommending adoption of the administration's plan, was read into the record.

Subcommittee Chairman Lyndon B. Johnson (D Tex.) commented that nobody wanted to buy the plants under the conditions that would be imposed by the administration and that Congress did not want to sell them. Joseph W. Crosby, president of the Thiokol Corp., Trenton, N.J., urged that small business be given a chance to participate in the operation of the government plants.

Committee Report

The Senate Armed Services Committee June 8, 1950, approved a House-passed bill (HR 7579) extending for two years the government's synthetic rubber program.

As passed by the House, the bill called for a three-year extension, but the Senate Committee recommended amendments to reduce the extension. Committee approval followed recommendations of a subcommittee which held hearings on the bill and on two other proposed programs for the future of the synthetic rubber industry.

The Committee said World War II "illustrated forcefully that this nation cannot survive a global hot war without a satisfactory substitute for rubber". It said the Far East, source for most of the world's supply of natural raw rubber, was a target for "a pattern of Communist-inspired harassment".

The Senate Committee on Banking and Currency June 16, 1950, concurred in the Armed Services Committee recommendation for passage of the amended bill. The Committee pointed out that it considered the original law and said the economic aspects and mechanics of the legislation should be remembered.

Floor Action

A bill to extend for two years the Rubber Act of 1948 (HR 7579) was passed by the Senate June 16, 1950. Amendments reducing the extension of the program for the government-owned synthetic rubber industry were agreed to without debate, and there was no debate on the bill itself. Passage was on a voice vote and returned the bill to the House for consideration of the Senate amendments.

House Concurs

The House took up the Senate amendments on June 19, and agreed to them without debate. This endorsing action cleared the legislation to the White House.

LAW ENACTED

Five days before the Rubber Act of 1948, basis for the post-war operation of the government-owned synthetic rubber industry, would have expired, President Truman June 25, 1950, signed a bill to extend the Act for an additional two years. The bill (HR 7579) became Public Law 575.

LOBBY STANDS

Hearings conducted by House and Senate committees revealed little opposition to extension of the Rubber Act of 1948. Under it synthetic rubber plants constructed during the war years were maintained on stand-by or operated by private industry on a fee basis while the government retained ownership.

Congressmen indicated opposition to several proposals for lease or sale of the plants on grounds national security might be endangered. They favored the 1948 Act, however, and some Members commented at the hearings and before the House that the law had been effective.

At both House and Senate hearings, an Administration proposal for a 10-year disposal period during which the President would exercise control over the industry encountered opposition.

The 1948 Act required the President to submit a recommendation for disposal of the plants to private industry. Congress apparently was opposed to selling or leasing the plants and relinquishing to the President control of the synthetic program, because of chaotic international conditions.

Spokesmen for the rubber industry generally were not in favor of the Presidential proposal to dispose of the plants while retaining strict prolonged control of their operations in the interest of national security.

W. J. Sears, vice-president of the Rubber Manufacturers' Association, presented three alternate plans for plant disposal, all of which provided for some degree of continued government control over production and use of synthetic rubber.

Sears expressed industry opposition to transfer of "broad discretionary powers" over the industry to the President and said Congress should retain control. He said the industry believed the 1948 Act "has been a good law from the standpoint of national security".

Prominent oilmen and executives of rubber companies appeared at committee hearings or submitted statements. Much of the testimony was directly concerned with the President's program which was considered only by subcommittees.

Defense Production Act of 1950

HR 9176—P. L. 774

SUMMARY

The Defense Production Act of 1950 was designed by Congress to increase the flow of war goods to the Korean front with a minimum of hardship on the home front. It provided for a system of priorities and allocation of scarce defense materials and facilities; it authorized the President to requisition property, make loans to expand defense plants; it provided for controls on real estate credit; set up special machinery to settle labor disputes growing out of the law; and it set up a standby program of price and wage controls and consumer rationing.

The House passed the bill Aug. 10 after several confused days of action and backtracking on the new, complicated program. The Senate approved the measure in different form Aug. 21. The House and Senate versions, neither of which satisfied leaders of the two parties, were rewritten into a final compromise bill which was accepted by the House Sept. 1 and the Senate later the same day. It was signed by the President Sept. 8, becoming Public Law No. 774.

Provisions

As it stands on the statute books, P.L. 774 opens with a "Declaration of Policy" that:

"The United States supports United Nations action for mutual defense.

"In order that expanded production may be maintained, normal civilian production must be curtailed and redirected.

"This act is designed to ease the adjustment from civilian to military production."

It now has the following provisions:

TITLE I — PRIORITIES AND ALLOCATIONS

The President is authorized to set priorities and allocate defense materials and facilities.

Hoarding of materials in short supply is punishable by one year imprisonment and $10,000 fine.

TITLE II— AUTHORITY TO REQUISITION

The President may requisition property needed for defense.

Just compensation must be paid for requisitioned facilities.

If the owner doesn't feel the payment is just, he may receive 75 per cent of the amount offered and then sue in the Court of Claims or any U. S. district court for the amount he feels is just.

Requisitioned property shall be returned to the owner at a fair price when no longer needed.

TITLE III— EXPANSION OF PRODUCTIVE CAPACITY AND SUPPLY

The government may guarantee loans or make loans for expansion of private facilities needed to fulfill defense contracts.

The government may buy or commit to buy raw materials for defense use or resale.

Exploration, development and mining of critical minerals shall be encouraged.

Agricultural commodities shall be resold at a price no less than the current market price or the CCC minimum sale price, whichever is higher.

For these purchases and loans, $600 million shall be immediately available — to be borrowed from the Treasury.

Another $1.4 billion may be appropriated by Congress.

TITLE IV— PRICE AND WAGE STABILIZATION

Voluntary action by business, agriculture, labor and consumers to stabilize wages and prices is encouraged.

If voluntary action fails, the President may set ceilings on prices, commissions, margins, fees, allowances, etc.

Ceilings will be fair to sellers and buyers.

Whenever ceilings are imposed on a particular material or service, the President shall stabilize wages and salaries in the industry or business producing the material.

Stabilized wages shall not be increased so that they require price ceiling boosts or impose inequities to sellers.

In setting ceilings and stabilizing prices due consideration shall be given to prices and wages at the May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950 period.

Ceilings on farm commodities should not be below the parity price or the May 24-June 24 price, whichever is higher.

Special treatment is specified for fixing tobacco and milk ceilings.

Ceilings can not be set on rentals for real property, fees for professional services, prices for press association news, books, magazines, motion pictures, newspapers, radio or television broadcasts, outdoor advertising, insurance, public utilities, common carriers, or commodity exchange margins.

The government may not compel changes in business practices or in use of brand names.

Retailers may not be rationed in their high - price - line sales.

A new, independent agency will be created to carry out price and wage stabilization.

In case of hardship, a seller may protest a ceiling price to the President and appeal an adverse ruling to the Emergency Court of Appeals and to the Supreme Court.

Persons selling processed chickens or turkeys to the government shall pass on to the government savings made in buying the chickens or turkeys from producers.

TITLE V— SETTLEMENT OF LABOR DISPUTES

The President may initiate conferences between labor, management and mediators in case of labor disputes growing out of the act.

The President may take such action as appropriate to settle the disputes.

The President may designate such agencies as appropriate to handle the disputes.

TITLE VI— CONTROL OF CONSUMER AND REAL ESTATE CREDIT

The President may regulate real estate construction credit on new construction started after Aug. 3, 1950.

Regulations may cover down payments, trade-in values, maximum maturities, amount of payments, etc.

TITLE VII—GENERAL PROVISIONS

Small-business enterprises shall be encouraged to share in defense contracts.

Civilian supplies shall be distributed, as near as possible, in fair shares to all businesses along the normal channels of distribution.

Defense contractors must keep complete records and allow government inspection of the records at any time.

The President may hire as many persons in the top government grades as are necessary to carry out the Act.

Additional persons may be hired on a per diem basis.

Government employees, including members of Congress, may not speculate in commodities directly or indirectly.

A joint Congressional committee is set up to keep a running check on operation of the Act.

Penalties are set for violation of various provisions of the Act.

Titles I, II, III and VII shall expire June 30, 1952, but no new contracts may be made after July 1, 1951.

Titles IV, V and VI expire June 30, 1951.

Congress or the President may terminate the act at any time.

Congress may terminate any section of the Act at any time.

BACKGROUND

The North Korean army moved into South Korea June 25. Days later, in gradual steps, United States Armed Forces were committed to aid South Korea.

President Truman sent a long message to Congress July 19 on the Korean war. The message:

1. Outlined the events leading up to the shooting war and then to UN and United States participation.

2. Explained U. S. policy in the Far East.

3. Listed steps he had ordered taken to fight the war.

4. Listed legislation that should be approved to insure adequate supplies to an expanded armed force while trying to keep the nation's economy on an even keel.

The latter point contained the germ of what was to be the Defense Production Act. Truman's message outlined what was needed as follows:

"I . . . recommend that the Congress now enact legislation authorizing the government to establish priorities and allocate materials . . ., to limit the use of materials for nonessential purposes; to prevent inventory hoarding; and to requisition supplies and materials needed for the national defense, particularly excessive and unnecessary inventories."

"I recommend that the Congress now authorize the control of consumer credit used for commodity speculation."

"I recommend . . . production loan guaranties and loans to increase production."

"I also recommend that the Congress authorize the making of long-term contracts and other means to encourage the production of certain materials in short supply."

Bills Introduced

As soon as the House and Senate clerks finished reading the President's message on Korea, previously prepared bills were submitted to carry out many of Truman's recommendations. The Defense Production Bill, introduced in the Senate by Burnet R. Maybank (D S.C.), chairman of the Banking Committee (S 3936), and in the House by Brent Spence (D Ky.), chairman of the House Banking Committee (HR 9176), was designed to be the basic legislation for consumer and producer control and aids.

Votes

The House adopted its first version of the bill Aug. 10 on a roll-call vote of 383-12. The Senate acted Aug. 21 on a 85-3 roll-call vote. The final compromise bill was accepted by both houses on voice votes. (For vote breakdowns see pp. 720, 727).

HOUSE

Bill

In response to the President's request, Brent Spence, chairman of the House Banking and Currency Committee, introduced HR 9176 July 19. It was referred to Spence's committee for study.

Purpose of the bill, Spence said, was to insure a steady flow of equipment to the expanding Armed Forces with a minimum of economic dislocation. Here were the provisions of the Spence bill as it was introduced:

Title I (Priorities and Allocations)

If the President offers a defense contract to a firm, the firm must accept it.

The defense contract must be given priority by the firm over any other existing or future contract for civilian production.

The President may ration or allocate materials and plants if that will help the defense effort.

Rationing of consumer goods in retail stores by the President is strictly forbidden.

Criminal penalties are provided for deliberate violation of the new law.

Title II (Authority to Requisition)

The President may requisition any plant or any materials needed for the defense effort.

A "just" payment must be made for anything requisitioned.

If the owner doesn't feel the payment offered is "just", the government will immediately pay him 50 per cent (75 per cent in the House bill) of the price it set, and then the owner may sue in a federal court for the full price he feels is due him.

Title III (Expansion of Productive Capacity and Supply)

The President may guarantee any loan made to a contractor or other person for defense purposes (in effect, the government would become a co-signer of the note to repay the loan).

The Federal Reserve Board may set interest rates and other charges on the guaranteed loans.

The President also may make direct loans to private businesses which must expand their production to do defense work, but which cannot find private financial backing.

The President may buy any mineral or raw material necessary in the defense effort.

Any material purchased may also be stored, processed, transported, etc.

Government corporations may be set up to make the purchases, guarantee loans, etc.

The corporations may use up to $2 billion, the money to be borrowed from the Treasury Department.

The corporations will continue to exist only through June 30, 1952.

TITLE IV (Control of Credit and Commodity Speculation)

The President would be allowed to set credit purchasing terms. He could regulate maximum credit values, minimum down payments, rates of payments, length of payments, etc. Under this section, a rule like the wartime "Regulation W" could be put into effect.

Persons selling on credit must keep records of all sales and allow them to be checked by the government.

Violators could be fined and jailed.

The President may set minimum "margins" (down-payments) for persons buying commodities for future delivery (this is designed to prevent speculators from forcing big jumps in farm product prices).

Sales records of commodities must be open to government inspection at all times.

The Commodity Credit Corporation, which buys up farm commodities to support their prices, may sell the commodities at the current support price (if that is not below the current market price) in order to stabilize the market. (Dropped from House bill.)

Title V (General Provisions)

Small businesses will be encouraged to take part in the defense work.

Any power given the President by this law may be passed on by him to any officer or agency of the government. An unlimited number of higher - paid executives may be added to the Federal payroll to administer the program.

Persons or firms taking part in the defense program must keep books and records and make them available to the government at all times.

Firms taking part are exempt from prosecution under anti-trust laws if their violation stemmed from compliance with a defense contract.

The entire act shall expire June 30, 1952.

Hearings

The Committee opened hearings July 24, listening to testimony from W. Stuart Symington, chairman of the National Security Resources Board. He was followed July 25 by Secretary of Commerce Charles Sawyer and R. M. Evans, of the Federal Reserve Board. Gen. Omar Bradley, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, wound up the hearings July 26 in a closed session.

Pattern of the testimony before the House group followed that of the Senate hearings, which usually were held earlier the same day. (For details of Senate hearings, see P. 631.)

Bernard Baruch did not appear before the House committee, but his testimony before the Senate group was followed by demands in the House for a wage and price freeze. The President, however, insisted a freeze was not necessary.

John C. Kunkel (R Pa.) offered the Committee a substitute for the original Administration bill. Kunkel's measure would have frozen all prices and wages and authorized consumer rationing. It was rejected 10-9 with nine Democrats and one Republican voting against it, while six Republicans and three Democrats supported it. Some of the Democrats voting "no" said later they would have voted for the Kunkel measure if it had been added to, and not substituted for, the Administration bill.

The committee then went on to approve the Administration plan July 29 with minor amendments. Final vote was 20-1.

Debate

The bill came to the House floor Aug. 1. By that time Kunkel had revised his substitute to include most of the Administration bill. In addition, two other substitutes had been printed and were ready for consideration. The House thus had before it:

1. The original committee-approved bill containing only Truman's requests.

2. The Kunkel substitute (HR 9308), calling for requisitioning powers similar to those in the existing Selective Service Act for a rollback of wages and prices to the level of the two weeks prior to June 25, for credit controls on consumer credit only, for standby consumer rationing and for creation of an Office of Inflation Control.

3. A Charles B. Deane (D N.C.) substitute (HR 9280) which included the Committee bill plus provisions for a wage freeze in industries where prices were frozen.

4. A Spence substitute. (On Aug. 1, the President wrote Spence that he would accept certain standby wage and price controls and consumer rationing if the House insisted. The President emphasized, however, that he was most interested in speedy adoption of his original requests. Spence prepared his substitute bill the morning of Aug. 2.)

The Spence substitute picked up all provisions of the first Committee bill and added standby consumer rationing and standby selective wage and price controls. Base period was set as the month preceding June 25. It also contained a section empowering the President to settle labor disputes affecting national defense.

Because the Spence substitute was drawn in response to the President's letter, the measure assumed the character of a "new" Administration bill, and the original Commitee bill was ultimately abandoned.

But Spence's "new" Administration measure was prepared in such haste that several lines were omitted from one section, and it was distributed so late that few Representatives of either party had a chance to read it before it was officially introduced Aug. 2.

Members of both parties objected to such hasty action, and informal suggestions were made to postpone debate for a day or to act on the Committee bill and then take up added provisions in the Spence measure at another time after further commitee hearings. Several Representatives claimed members of the other party were "confused", and a few took the floor to admit frankly that they themselves were completely confused by the new and complicated bill.

Finally Democratic Leader John McCormack (D Mass.) announced that he had conferred with Minority leaders and decided to postpone all votes on amendments to the substitute bill until Aug. 3. The rest of Aug. 2 was then spent in general debate — Spence and Kunkel answering questions about their respective substitutes.

Aug. 1 and 2 Debate

Statements made Aug. 1 and 2 by principal debaters were:

Eugene Cox (D Ga.) — "I cannot see that it is possible to control the price of a commodity without at the same time controlling the price of the principal elements of cost that enter into production."

Ray J. Madden (D Ind.) — "Congress must act now on curbing wartime profiteering before we lose the war at home through unnecessary inflation."

Christian A. Herter (R Mass.) — "It seems to me if we are going to do the right thing, we are going to give to the President of the United States the powers to institute controls that may be very painful to us, controls we will have difficulty of getting rid of later, but controls on the domestic front that will maintain a stable situation in order to give proper backing to those boys overseas."

Fred L. Crawford (R Mich.) — "Reinstating price controls and rationing puts us back into the black markets. It discourages production, without questions; and it not only discourages production, it prevents production."

Albert Rains (D Ala.) — "I dislike price controls very much, but I think I can tell you, because of recent trips to Alabama this month, that the people back home are away ahead of us and that they are demanding a stop to these unjustifiable price increases So I say . . . give to the President the powers that he needs to curb inflation and give him stand-by controls to hold down prices."

Kunkel — "I think it is extremely important to limit the President in general to the powers which he had during the last war, until we have at least had more time to examine the new powers requested more closely. That is what my bill does in respect to rationing, price control and wage control. These latter are in general based on provisions in laws used for similar purposes during World War II."

Charles A. Halleck (R Ind.)— "Here is a completely new bill in many of its (sections) that we will be called upon to act on today. No one has had a chance to see it. Certainly it should be open for amendment, and undoubtedly should be amended in many particulars. But under this sort of procedure, what fair chance does the House of Representatives have to find out what is in the bill and to prepare amendments?"

Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) — "We ought to have some assurance . . . from the President that he will not push the button for wage controls, unless contemporaneously therewith there is coupled an excess-profits tax."

Clare Hoffman (R Mich.) — "If this and similar proposed legislation, because of fear or hysteria, can be put through Congress, the end of the Republic has arrived; Stalin and the Communists need no longer attempt the overthrow of our Government by force or violence."

Aug. 3 Action

The House met Aug. 3 to act on amendments to the four controls measures. Attention centered on the Spence substitute, in effect the "new" Administration bill, because it carried most of the original bill's provisions, plus others accepted in Truman's Aug. 1 letter. All amendments offered were intended for the Spence bill.

Once more the cries of "confusion" rang out as amendment after amendment was voted on with little debate or clear explanation. As a result, at the end of the day the House had tentatively approved a Spence bill that differed in major respects from the sort of bill the President said he would accept.

Major changes were:

1. Price and wage controls were made mandatory when prices rise five per cent above the June 15 level. (The President said this was an open invitation for prices to jump at least five percent.)

2. The cutoff date of the bill was changed from June 30, 1952, to March 31, 1951.

3. Provisions for a special board to settle labor disputes arising from the bill were removed.

4. Provisions for regulation of commodity speculation were removed.

Automatic Control Provision

Most of the Administration's objections were aimed at the automatic imposition of wage and price controls after a five-percent price jump. An amendment to impose such controls had been offered by Clinton D. McKinnon (D Calif.). It specified that Bureau of Labor Statistics figures should be used to figure the price changes. The controls would be automatic after the five-percent mark was reached, but the President would have the discretion of determining what categories of materials and wages materially affect the cost of living. Only those vital materials and wages would be controlled.

McKinnon said his plan had these advantages:

1. It would commit the President to definite action at a definite time.

2. The psychological pressure would keep prices down as no one wants controls.

3. It would encourage businesses to get together and work out plans for absorbing price increases.

No objections to McKinnon's specific plan were raised on the floor, and it was accepted on voice vote.

Other Provisions Sought

There were several attempts to put rent control and excess profits limitations into the bill, but all were rejected — most on points of order on the grounds they were not within the proper scope of the bill.

One excess profits amendment was adopted on a "blind" vote, but later thrown out when the House found out what it had done. Walter B. Huber (D Ohio) offered an amendment, but suggested it was not necessary for the clerk to read it to the House. Huber did not explain his lengthy amendment, but there was no objection. Then, on a standing vote, the House approved the amendment 107-104.

Mike Monroney (D Okla.) demanded a new vote. Francis Case (R S.D.) asked that the amendment be read. There were no objections to that, so the clerk started reading. When Jesse P. Wolcott (R Mich.) saw it called for an excess profits tax, he made a point of order that it was not germane to the bill. The chairman said he was undoubtedly right, but it was too late to make such a point. Then Monroney's request for a new vote was taken up by other Representatives. A new vote was ordered. This time, on a teller vote, the amendment was rejected, 102-153.

The House continued to act on amendments, but within a self-imposed time limit. At one point with 27 members wanting to speak on an amendment and 24 minutes remaining, each was officially allotted seven-eighths of one minute. The final 13 amendments were acted on with only one minute of explanation devoted to each.

The Spence substitute as amended was then agreed to tentatively 139-127 on a standing vote and 159-128 on teller vote and the House adjourned.

Here were the Aug. 3 amendments (all of which were offered to the Spence bill, which was itself dropped on Aug. 4, however):

AMENDMENTS AGREED TO (Aug. 3)

Stephen Pace (D Ga.) — Change the roll-back date of commodity prices from June 15, 1950, to the average of the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950. Voice vote.

Frank Buchanan (D Pa.) — Exempt from price ceilings common carriers, public utilities, insurance companies, newspapers, magazines, radio or television stations, motion picture theatres, professional men and news wire services, Voice.

Clinton D. McKinnon (D Calif.) — Make price and wage freeze mandatory when prices rise five per cent over the June 15 level. Voice.

Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.) — Require the Attorney General to supervise administration of the act to avoid encouragement of monopolies. Voice.

Celler — Require the FTC to approve exemptions from prosecution under the anti-trust laws. Voice.

Graham A. Barden (D N.C.) — Remove section providing for special war-emergency labor disputes board. Division 150-75 and teller vote 166-83.

Harold D. Cooley (D N.C.) — Remove section providing for controls on commodity speculation. Division 132-85 and teller vote 146-77.

W. Sterling Cole (R N.Y.) — Maintain established balance between non-marketing milk-producing areas and the marketing producing areas if price controls are imposed. Voice.

Clarence J. Brown (R Ohio) — Reduce life of the bill from two years to seven months. 127-107 on division and 142-118 on teller vote.

Pace — Provide that ceiling prices on all commodities may be adjusted in case of crop failure. Voice.

Carl T. Durham (D N.C.) — Remove certain ceilings on purchase price of strategic materials. Division 138-90.

Clair Engle (D Calif.) — Make loan provisions apply to mining enterprises. Voice.

Ben F. Jensen (R Iowa) — Bar employment under the act of persons asserting the right to strike against the government or who join an organization that asserts such a right or which advocates overthrow of the government. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED (Aug. 3)

Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) — Roll back prices to April 15 level instead of June 15 level. Voice.

Frances P. Bolton (R Ohio) — Fix wages and prices as of the day the act becomes law. Division 42-58.

Daniel J. Flood (D Pa.) — Strike out wage control provisions. Voice.

Katharine St. George (R N.Y.) — Set up joint watchdog committee to supervise administration of the bill. Rejected on point-of-order as not germane.

Joseph P. O'Hara (R Minn.) — Extend and tighten rent controls act. Rejected on point-of-order as not germane.

Dwight L. Rogers (D Fla.) — Ban hoarding; make it subject to fine and jail sentence. Voice.

Mike Mansfield (D Mont.) — Provide 100 per cent excess profits tax. Rejected on point-of-order as not germane.

Jesse P. Wolcott (R Mich.) — Apply real estate credit restriction only to construction started after act becomes law. Division 96-101 and teller vote 121-123.

Helen Gahagan Douglas (D Calif.) — Include rents with price ceilings. Division. 58-118.

Edward H. Rees (R Kan.) — Limit number of high-salary government executives to be hired to administer the act. Division 103-129

Kenneth B. Keating (R N. Y.)— Provide that the act can be terminated by Congress or the President at any time. Voice.

Thruston Ballard Morton (R Ky.)— Provide that either Congress or the President can impose ceilings. Division 99-146.

Walter B. Huber (D Ohio) — Impose excess profits tax. First agreed to on division 107-104; then rejected on teller vote 102-153.

Fred L. Crawford (R Mich.)— Strike out section voicing support of the action of the United Nations. Voice.

Aug. 4 Action

The House met again early on Aug. 4 after members of both parties and the President had said they were dissatisfied with the hasty action taken the previous day. A meeting of Democratic House leaders with the House parliamentarian resulted in a decision to back up and start over again.

So on a 172-161 standing vote, the House rejected the entire Spence substitute and all amendments added to it. That left them with the original committee-approved bill up for consideration and once more open for amendment.

Both sides fired amendments at the bill — most of them the same as those acted on the previous day. Action on the amendments generally followed the pattern of Aug. 3, but some reversals were recorded.

Kunkel and Deane again introduced their respective substitutes. Kunkel's bill lost 130-165; Deane's lost 140-151. Both votes were by teller.

Then the McKinnon amendment was introduced again, calling for a wage and price freeze when prices jumped five per cent. After lengthy debate on the McKinnon amendment, the House decided it could get nowhere. It adjourned for the weekend. It was agreed to take up the bill again Aug. 8 with the McKinnon amendment still the pending question.

Several amendments were acted on Aug. 4, but two were left pending when the House adjourned. They were:

Clinton D. McKinnon (D Calif.) to the committee bill — Provide for a ceiling on prices and wages to be applied when prices jump five per cent over a June base period price.

Thomas B. Stanley (D Va.) to the McKinnon amendment — Provide that if certain producers market no commodity during the base period, but are producing during that period, then the ceiling on their commodity shall be determined by the average price of their commodity in the next 30 days when the commodity is marketed.

AMENDMENTS AGREED TO (AUG. 4)

Dwight L. Rogers (D Fla.) to the committee bill — Prohibit hoarding, making it subject to fine and jail sentence (same as Aug. 3 amendment which was rejected). Division 112-46.

Clifford R. Hope (R Kan.) to Deane substitute — Change the rollback date of commodity prices from June 15 to the average of the period from May 24 to June 24 (same as the Aug. 3 Pace amendment which was agreed to.) Voice (later lost with entire Deane substitute).

Frank Buchanan (D Pa.) to Deane substitute — Exempt from price ceilings common carriers, public utilities, insurance companies, newspapers, magazines, radio or television stations, motion picture theaters, professional men and news wire services (same as Aug. 3 amendment which was agreed to). Voice (later lost with entire Deane substitute).

AMENDMENTS REJECTED (AUG. 4)

Fred L. Crawford (R Mich.) to committee bill — Strike out section voicing support for United Nations action (same as Aug. 3 amendment which was rejected). Division 91-131.

Clare E. Hoffman (R Mich.) to committee bill — Provide that the Secretaries of Defense, Army, Navy, Air Force, Treasury, Commerce and Labor publish a schedule of fair prices for basic materials and commodities, those prices to be ceiling prices. Voice.

John C. Kunkel (R Pa.) — Add price and wage ceiling provisions of Kunkel substitute plus Aug. 3 Cole amendment on milk prices to committee bill. Tellers 130-165.

Charles B. Deane (D N.C.) — Substitute for committee bill. Tellers 140-151.

Thruston Ballard Morton (R Ky.) to Dean substitute — Strike out section on wage ceilings. Division 29-55.

Barratt O'Hara (D Ill.) to Kunkel substitute — Include rents in price freeze. Division 37-70.

Daniel J. Flood (D Pa.) to Kunkel substitute — Strike out wage control provisions. Division 23-98.

Aug. 9 and 10 Action

The House got back to defense production Aug. 9. The two pending amendments, by McKinnon and by Stanley, were disposed of immediately. The Stanley amendment was accepted on voice vote, but was then lost when the McKinnon amendment was rejected on voice vote.

The House on Aug. 10 completed action on the measure by an overwhelming vote, despite misgivings over several provisions voiced by members of both parties.

The President had asked for standby controls over commodity speculation. But provisions for those controls were dropped from the bill on roll-call vote 198-194. Southern Democrats and Republicans combined to reject the provisions.

Final provisions for control of real-estate and consumer credit left the will of Congress in doubt. Administration followers fought long and hard to keep in the bill a definition of credit which they said would cover almost anything — including commodity speculation and all real estate. Victory was 224-173 on roll call. But elsewhere in the bill it was specified that only real-estate and consumer credit could be controlled.

Administration followers lost to another GOP-Southern Democratic combine on the credit question when an amendment to limit real estate controls to new construction carried 202-188, on roll call. The Administration stand was that if sale of old construction could not be regulated, prices would spurt and rents would follow.

A vote on the entire wage and price ceiling section of the bill was no contest — it was endorsed 393-3 on roll-call vote. (Vote p. 720.)

Final Action

Final vote was 383-12 on roll call. Opposing the bill were Vito Marcantonio (ALP N. Y.) and 11 Republicans, Leo E. Allen (Ill.), Fred L. Crawford (Mich.), Ralph Gwinn (N. Y.), Clare E. Hoffman (Mich.), Edward H. Jenison (Ill.), Donald W. Nicholson (Mass.), John Phillips (Calif.), Robert F. Rich (Pa.), John Sanborn (Idaho), Sid Simpson (Ill.), and Thomas H. Werdel (Calif.).

Passage sent the measure to the Senate, where a similar bill was being debated. Major provisions of the House bill as it was passed on Aug. 10 were:

The President is authorized to fix priorities in industries related to national defense.

The President may allocate materials and manufacturing facilities.

Hoarding is made subject to fine and imprisonment.

Business, labor, agriculture and consumers are encouraged to take voluntary action to stabilize prices.

If necessary, the President may set price ceilings on any material or service.

Wage ceilings may be imposed in areas where wages influence fixed prices.

Wage and price fixing may be selective or general.

Wages and prices may be rolled back to the May 24-June 24 average.

Controls will not apply to rents, professional services, newspapers, books, motion pictures, magazines, radio or television stations, theaters, outdoor advertising facilities, insurance underwriters, public utilities, or commodity exchange margins.

The government may guarantee loans to firms wishing to expand for defense production. Up to $2 billion worth of loans may be backed.

Consumer and real-estate credit may be regulated by the President.

Real-estate construction credit may be controlled only on construction started after Aug. 3, 1950.

"Credit" means any loan, advance or discount.

The President may set up any new agency needed to carry out the Act.

The President may hire any number of new officials to carry out the Act.

The Act expires June 30, 1951.

Amendments Agreed To (Aug. 9, 10)

Thomas B. Stanley (D Va.)— Amend McKinnon amendment to provide a special base period for industries not in normal production during the McKinnon base period. Voice. (McKinnon amendment was later rejected.)

John C. Kunkel (R Pa.) — Remove provision for mandatory selective price controls tied to wage control Division 94-70 and tellers 118-96.

W. R. Poage (D Tex.) — Specify "ceilings" for wages, not "stabilization" and specify that both price and wage ceilings may be applied simultaneously. Division 146-71.

Harold D. Cooley (D N. C.) — Remove section giving President power to control commodity exchange margins. Division 140-103 and roll call 198-194.

Abraham J. Multer (D N. Y.) — Require FTC to approve any exemptions under the act from prosecution under the anti - trust laws. Voice.

Brooks Hays (D Ark.) — Provide that private records not be subpenaed if similar records exist in federal agencies. Voice.

Jesse P. Wolcott (R Mich.)—Specify that only real-estate construction started after Aug. 3, 1950, be subject to credit controls. Division 119-102, tellers 153-147 and roll call 202-188.

Jacob K. Javits (R N. Y.)—Authorize the President to set up new agencies to carry out the act and hire all necessary new officials. Division 65-13.

Ben F. Jensen (R Iowa) — Provide that no person be hired under the act who favors overthrow of the government or who advocates the right to strike against the government. Voice.

Brent D. Spence (D Ky.) — Add price and wage controls to bill. Voice and roll call 393-3.

Amendments Rejected (Aug. 9, 10)

Clinton D. McKinnon (D Calif.) — Make wage and price controls mandatory when prices rise five per cent over a June base period. Voice.

Albert M. Cole (R Kan.) — Guarantee meat processors a reasonable profit. Division 72-108 and tellers 86-125.

Donald W. Nicholson (R Mass.) — Specify that wages not be stabilized at a level higher than the June level. Division 40-96.

Frances P. Bolton (R Ohio) — Impose immediate wage and price freeze. Division 66-94.

Helen Gahagan Douglas (D Calif.) — Tie rent controls to other price controls. Voice.

Daniel J. Flood (D Pa.) — Make it the "intent of Congress" that excess profits be taxed at 100 per cent.. Division 80-121 and tellers 87-148.

Isidore Dollinger (D N.Y.) — Add standby rent controls. Voice.

Cecil F. White (D Calif.) — Protect milk producers from increases in cost of raw materials. Voice.

Wolcott — Confine credit controls to consumer or real estate credit. Agreed to on teller vote 151-124, later rejected on roll call 173-224.

Wolcott — Specify that all controls be applied only to the portion of the nation's economy directly concerned with the Armed Forces and the Atomic Energy Commission. Approved on division 96-89; rejected on teller vote 133-139.

Foster Furcolo (D Mass.) — Strike out authorization to hire per diem specialists. Voice.

Carroll D. Kearns (R Pa.) — Make all appointments under the act subject to regular Civil Service rules. Division 40-56.

SENATE

Committee

On July 19, the day the President asked for a defense production bill, Burnet R. Maybank (D S.C.), chairman of the Senate Banking Committee, introduced S 3936, a bill identical to the original Spence bill in the House. (For provisions, see Spence bill p. 626.)

W. Stuart Symington, chairman of the National Security Resources Board, opened Senate hearings July 24. He told Committee members that the special controls requested by the President and contained in the bill were necessary to check inflation and rush war materials to the Armed Services. He said the bill would not give the President more power than he had during World War II.

Symington said price controls and retail rationing were not then necessary, but he promised "more drastic measures" would be requested if prices continued to rise. Manpower controls also were a possibility, he said.

Homer Capehart (R Ind.) objected to the bill saying it would give the President power to "nationalize every industry in America." Symington, however, said the bill did not give the President authority to run a business — only to direct it to turn out war goods or seize it if it refused. He said he had no objection to specifying in the bill that seized plants be returned at the end of the emergency.

Secretary of Commerce Charles Sawyer testified for the bill before the Senate Committee July 25. He said he favored a trial of voluntary allocation of war materials. If this did not work, he continued, the mandatory controls contained in the bill should be put into action.

The Senate group also received a message from the Federal Reserve Board backing the bill. The message said, "Even before the attack by the Communist North Koreans, on June 25, prices were rising and we were in a potentially inflationary situation. Because of developments in the past few weeks, it is imperative that steps be taken to reduce or defer civilian demands and to lessen inflationary pressures." Consumer-credit restrictions, the FRB said, should be flexible and not as severe as those during the past war.

Gen. Omar Bradley, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and Symington appeared before the group July 26 in secret session.

Baruch Testimony

On July 26 Bernard Baruch set in motion an avalanche which swept through the House and Senate and eventually produced for the President a defense production bill far more extensive in many provisions than he had requested.

Baruch urged stricter controls than had been asked by the President. He said, "Our aim should be to organize the nation so that every factory and farm, every man, every dollar, every bit of material can be put to use where it will strengthen our defenses and fill the most essential needs first."

A system of priorities without retail price control, Baruch said, would mean that goods would go to the bidder with the most money. He recommended anti-profiteering taxes (including an excess profits tax), an agency to synchronize the mobilization effort, cut back of non-essential spending, rearming of allied nations, support of the United Nations and an immediate freeze of all rents, wages and prices — rolling them back to the June 25 level.

Baruch said it would be difficult to put his program across when the President didn't think the strict measures necessary.

And most Senate observers that day agreed that Baruch's fight for wage and price controls was a lost cause.

But immediately afterwards key Senators and Representatives, including Senate Majority Leader, Scott W. Lucas (D Ill.) and Carl Vinson (D Ga.), chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, lined up behind the Baruch plan. Letters from "people back home" protested the jump in prices since the war started, and asked for controls and rationing. The avalanche was rolling.

The Senate Committee continued open hearings on other provisions in the measure, and then went into executive session to thresh out the problem of price and wage controls and consumer rationing.

Witnesses On Farm Provisions

Allan B. Kline, American Farm Bureau Federation, Albert S. Goss, National Grange, Russell Smith, National Farmers Union, and Walter R. Scott, representing grain exchanges in Chicago, Kansas City and Minneapolis, appeared July 26 to testify regarding certain sections of the bill effecting farm commodities. Goss and Scott opposed giving the President power to regulate down-payments on commodity future purchases. Goss and Kline objected to the sale of surplus commodities held by the government at a price lower than now allowed. Smith opposed the section exempting businesses from compliance with anti-trust laws when fulfilling defense contracts.

Committee Chairman Burnet R. Maybank (D S.C.) said he agreed that some of the farm provisions should be modified.

Attorney General J. Howard McGrath, who testified July 27, told the Senate Committee that the controls of the Defense Production bill were designed to obviate future stricter war rationing. Consumer rationing was not then necessary, he said. McGrath added that "we still may have to come to every one of (the Baruch proposals), if the conflict spreads beyond Korea."

After the last witnesses had been heard, the Committee held a series of closed sessions to iron out final provisions of the measure. Main point of contention was the Baruch plan. Maybank told reporters unofficially that the Committee favored some kind of wage and price ceilings and consumer rationing, but was undecided on the form.

The President then wrote Maybank a letter similar to the one he sent Chairman Spence of the House Banking Committee, in which he agreed to accept standby controls on wages and prices and consumer rationing but did not feel they were needed.

Late Aug. 4 Senator John Sparkman (D Ala.) reported that the Committee had approved the idea of giving the President full discretion to invoke controls on wages, prices, and rationing. Sparkman said the group rejected Sen. J. W. Fulbright's (D Ark.) plan to impose controls automatically if living costs soared.

The Committee approved the rewritten bill Aug. 8. It was basically the same as the Spence substitute in the House. Final Committee approval was unanimous.

Debate

Floor debate opened in the Senate Aug. 10. Chairman Burnet R. Maybank (D S. C.) of the Banking Committee led debate in favor of the measure. He said, "If we sit idly by and do not take vigorous action now, the Nation may be in trouble". He conceded that the powers given the President in the bill were broad, but said they were needed — at least on a standby basis — as long as the nation is fighting.

Robert A. Taft (R Ohio) led the opposition. He insisted the measure was far too sweeping. He said, "The President is not willing to say that price controls and wage controls are needed at this time. I agree with him, and I think it is wrong for Congress to enact them at a time when they are not necessary."

Taft added, "It seems to me we are completely abdicating our authority, abdicating our duties, if we leave to the President the question of determining whether we shall turn the United States from a free economy country into, in effect, a dictated economy country."

A number of minor amendments were accepted Aug. 14 and 15. An attempt Aug. 15 to reach an agreement for a final vote on Aug. 18 was blocked by Matthew M. Neely (D W. Va.). Several key Senators were absent on political tours Aug. 16, 17, and 18, so debate was desultory, and no votes were taken. All Senators did agree, knowever, to take the final vote on the bill Aug. 21.

Aug. 14 Debate

John W. Bricker (R Ohio) led off debate Aug. 14 saying the Korean war did not warrant strict economic controls as provided in the bill. He told the Senate:

"So far a free economy has made this nation better prepared for war than the totalitarian governments which have relied on planned or regimented economies . . . It would be a tragedy to stifle American industry, labor and consumers with a maze of controls over prices, wages and rationing which cannot be administered fairly or efficiently even with the cooperation which prevails during total war."

Robert C. Hendrickson (R N.J.) agreed with Bricker Aug. 17 that controls were distasteful and "contrary to the whole philosophy of our form of government and our way of life." But he insisted that the present "world-shaking crises" made them necessary. He explained:

" . . . They are necessary because selfish, unpatriotic Americans have allied themselves with either one of two groups, both of which put the needs of their Nation second to their own selfish purposes. They are the profiteers on the one hand, and the hoarders on the other. We have had them with us always, but never have they been so prevalent and so disgustingly avaricious as they disclosed themselves to be since the Korean war."

On Aug. 14, a series of amendments were added to the bill, all on voice vote. Among them was a provision by Maybank which would assure a reasonable profit to all segments of the meat-processing industry. Maybank said it was necessary to prevent black market meat sales.

Homer Capehart (R Ind.) tried to add a guarantee of a reasonable gross profit to all industries affected by the Act, but the Senate rejected it on voice vote.

As the specified final-voting day of Aug. 21 neared, Republicans promised an attempt to add to the bill the Mundt - Ferguson - Johnston anti-subversives bill. Karl Mundt (R S.D.) said he would call up this measure as an amendment, unless Administration leaders promised to take up the bill at an early date. But Administration forces countered by preparing their own anti-subversive bill (CQ Almanac P 390.)

Many Amendments Offered

Among amendments agreed to during the week was one by John J. Williams (R Del.), making all government employees, including members of Congress, who speculate in farm commodities directly or indirectly subject to fine and imprisonment. It carried on voice vote. Williams said instances of speculation by government employees during the last war were reported, but nothing was done.

Several of the scores of amendments acted on were aimed at restricting the powers of the President in administering the emergency measure. Many of these amendments were adopted. One was by John W. Bricker (R Ohio). It struck out wording which would have allowed the President to apply wage and price ceilings where he thought necessary. Bricker said it would be unfair to control wages or prices in one industry and not in others. Administration supporters said selective controls were necessary to stop individual cases of serious inflation when they were encountered. The amendment carried 50-36 on roll-call vote.

Edwin C. Johnson (D Colo.) sponsored an amendment specifying that the Secretary of Commerce should handle the allocation and priorities program. The Administration wanted the President to decide which agency should handle particular allocations. Robert A. Taft (R Ohio) said the power should be concentrated so that "businessmen wouldn't have to run from one bureau to another to straighten out their problems." The Johnson amendment carried 47-42 on roll call. Another 47-42 roll call was used in a parliamentary move to bar any future attempt to reconsider the amendment.

An amendment by Taft limiting the defense procurement program to $300 million, unless specific approval by Congress was given, was approved on voice vote after the Senate had turned down Taft's request for a $100 million ceiling. The bill originally had authorized spending of up to $2 billion without further approval by Congress.

Eugene D. Millikin (R Colo.) secured approval on voice vote for an amendment which added the text of a mine subsidy bill to the controls measure. The Senate had approved this mine bill in 1949, but the House had shelved it in the Rules Committee (CQ Almanac, Vol. V, P 685). There was no opposition to the Millikin amendment.

Some Were Beaten Back

Not all attempts to limit the bill were accepted by the Senate. It rejected 6-75 on roll call a move by Homer E. Capehart (R Ind.) to strike from the bill all authority for standby wage and price controls. An amendment by John J. Williams (R Del.) requiring both price and wage controls to be rolled back to the same base period was rejected 11-74 on roll call.

The Senate knocked down 38-48 on roll call an amendment by Harry F. Byrd (D Va.) cutting the bill's life from June 30, 1952, to Aug. 31, 1951. An amendment by Taft dropping provisions for special machinery to settle defense labor disputes was also voted down 29-57 on roll call.

The GOP move to raise the Mundt-Ferguson-Johnston anti-subversives bill as an amendment unless Administration leaders agreed to call it up at a later date did not develop, because Homer Ferguson (R Mich.) withdrew the amendment. He told the Senate that Pat McCarran (D Nev.) had promised to alter parts of his bill (S 4037) to make it coincide completely with the M-F-J measure. He said that Majority Leader Scott W. Lucas (D Ill.) had agreed to call up the McCarran measure at an early date. Administration leaders said they would try to substitute their own anti-subversive bill during debate on the McCarran measure.

Final Action

Final approval of the controls bill was given overwhelmingly. First a motion to send the bill back to the Banking committee was rejected on voice vote. Then 85 Senators voted for the bill; while three opposed it. Voting "no" were Zales N. Ecton (R Mont.), George W. Malone (R Nev.), and John J. Williams (R Del.).

The measure was given the House bill number (HR 9176).

AMENDMENTS AGREED TO

Burnet R. Maybank (D S.C.) — Specify that no price ceilings shall be put on meat products which do not allow a reasonable margin of profit to the processing industry. Voice vote.

Kenneth S. Wherry (R Neb.) — Add to Maybank amendment the specification that "each segment" of the processing industry be assured a profit. Voice.

Maybank — Change base period for price roll-back from June 15 to the period from May 24 to June 24. Voice.

Maybank — Direct the President to take steps to prevent hardships to sellers who have civilian contracts which are superseded by defense orders. Voice.

John W. Bricker (R Ohio) — Permit Congress to terminate any section of the Act at any time. Voice.

George D. Aiken (R Vt.) — Specify that Presidential authority to hire new executives under the Act be restricted to temporary appointments. Voice.

A. Willis Robertson (D Va.) — Assure fair margin of profit to processors of farm products. Voice.

John J. Williams (R Del.) — Prohibit setting any price ceilings which would allow seller more than his normal profit. Voice.

Williams — Provide that poultry purchased below the ceiling price for sale to the government must be sold to the government at below the ceiling price. Voice.

Williams — Provide that employees of the government, including members of Congress, shall not speculate on commodities. Voice.

Bricker — Ban government orders to compel manufacurers to change business practices or change labeling practices. Voice.

Bricker — Encourage voluntary agreements to hold down prices and wages; exempt such cooperation from prosecution under anti-trust laws; require Attorney General to review such agreements. Voice.

John Sparkman (D Ala.) — Require FTC to review voluntary agreements in Bricker amendment. Voice.

Kenneth S. Wherry (R Neb.) and John Sparkman (D Ala.) — Provide that all individual businesses in normal distribution channels get their fair share of allocated materials, etc. Voice vote.

Wherry — Permit the President to compromise triple - damage suits. Voice.

Edwin C. Johnson (D Colo.) — Permit the President to improve existing industrial facilities owned by the government. Voice.

Spessard Holland (D Fla.) — Give litigants in all seizure cases the right to bring their claims before local Federal Courts rather than the Court of Claims in Washington, D. C. Voice.

Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.) — Require that the official approving voluntary agreements be appointed by the President and approved by the Senate. Voice.

Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.) — Permit government loans to be made for exploration, development and mining of strategic minerals. Voice.

Burnet R. Maybank (D S. C.) — Set ceilings on milk in areas not having marketing agreements so that the ceilings insure sufficient quantities of milk and are in the public interest. Voice.

Maybank — Require lending agencies to consult with Federal Reserve Board before setting regulations. Voice.

Maybank — Permit loans to be made for services as well as deliveries. Voice.

Maybank — Permit other base periods to be used for setting ceilings on tobacco not actively marketed during the usual base period. Division.

Guy Gillette (D Iowa) — Require that Commodity Exchanges take action to prevent excessive speculation. Voice.

Johnson of Colorado — Specify that priorities and allocations be administered by the Secretary of Commerce. Roll call, 47-42.

Robert A. Taft (R Ohio) — Permit loans to total only $100 million without specific appropriations from Congress. First rejected on a tie division vote; then agreed to on voice vote after ceiling was raised to $300 million.

Lester C. Hunt (D Wyo) — Drop provision shifting supervision of government rubber, tin and abaca programs from RFC to Secretary of Commerce. Voice.

Eugene D. Millikin (R Colo.) — Provide aid for exploration, development and conservation of mineral resources. (Identical with S 2105, approved by the Senate, CQ Almanac, Vo. V, p 685). Voice.

John L. McClellan (D Ark.) — Provide that heads of all regional and state administration offices be appointed with the approval of the Senate. Voice.

Robert S. Kerr (D Okla.) — Require government to "encourage" exploration for strategic minerals. Voice.

Lister Hill (D Ala.) — Provide that public utilities not be allowed to boost rates without 30 days notice to the President. Voice.

John W. Bricker (R Ohio) — Require that wage and price ceilings be general, not selective Roll call, 50-36.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Homer Capehart (R Ind.) — Specify that the President may create only one new agency to engage in procurement for national defense. Voice.

John J. Williams (R Del.) — Strike out all special treatment for farm product price ceilings. Voice.

Taft — Strike out penalty provision in Gillette amendment (above). Division.

Bricker — Require lending agencies to consult the FRB when handling loans exceeding $100,000. Division.

James P. Kem (R Mo.) — Provide that no rule shall require sellers to apportion their sales according to previous price range averages. Voice.

J. William Fulbright (D Ark.) — Give FRB control over FHA and GI housing. Roll call, 34-54.

Saltonstall — Provide that roll-back of fish prices not be lower than those of 1946. Division.

Milton R. Young (R N. D.) — Require price supports on basic commodities to be at least 90 per cent of parity, and permit supports on other commodities to be at least 90 per cent if in the interests of national defense. Division.

Bricker — Require base periods for both wage and price ceilings to be the same. Division.

Capehart — Remove all wage and price control from bill. Roll call, 6-75.

Williams — Require that wage and price controls be put into effect simultaneously, and require same base period to be used for each. Roll call, 11-74.

Williams — Require government wages to be frozen when any other wages are frozen. Division.

Harry F. Byrd (D Va.) — Fix termination date of bill at Aug. 31, 1951, instead of June 30, 1952. Roll call, 38-48.

William Benton (D Conn.) — Give FRB control over all private real estate credit — not just new construction. Voice.

Arthur V. Watkins (R Utah) — Permit sellers to keep their normal margin of profit. Voice.

Capehart— Specify that changes in business practices not be required. Voice.

Taft — Strike out section providing special procedures for settlement of labor disputes affecting national defense. Roll call, 29-57.

Homer E. Capehart (R Ind.) — Assure a reasonable gross profit to all industries affected by controls. Voice.

CONFERENCE

The House and Senate versions of HR 9176 were sent to a conference committee for harmonization. The conferees approved a compromise Defense Production Act Aug. 31. The House accepted the compromise Sept. 1 by voice vote, and the Senate followed suit later in the day.

A week of conferences between House and Senate representatives brought out a final compromise version that restored to the President most of the powers he had asked. The conference finished work on the measure Aug. 31 and sent the final version back to both House and Senate for approval. The conference made the following decisions on major conflicting provisions in the original House and Senate bills:

Dropped Senate requirement that universal wage and price controls must be imposed or none at all and accepted modified House provision allowing selective controls but requiring wage and price controls to be applied simultaneously in any given industry.

Dropped Senate amendment specifying that the Commerce Department must handle allocations and priorities and left assignment of this job up to the President as in the House bill.

Accepted a Senate provision that would allow only one special agency to be set up to administer controls.

Dropped special Senate treatment of meat packers under price controls assuring them a reasonable profit.

Kept a Senate provision to prevent hardship of a war contractor who has promised to fulfill prior civilian orders.

Struck out Senate amendment giving supervision of loan guarantees to the Federal Reserve System instead of the President.

Dropped Senate provision calling for self-policing of speculation by commodity exchanges.

Accepted Senate special treatment on tobacco and milk price ceilings.

Dropped Senate provision subsidizing exploration for critical minerals.

Dropped Senate $300-million limit on federal loan program without special Congressional appropriations and set $600 million limit; House had tied no strings to the overall $2 billion limit.

Compromised expiration dates: Wage, price and credit controls to expire June 30, 1951; priorities, allocations and loans to run to June 30, 1952.

LAW ENACTED

The President signed the bill Sept. 8 and it became Public Law No. 774. Minutes after he had signed the bill, the Federal Reserve Board announced restrictions on installment buying — the first move to be taken under the new measure. The President said wage and price controls would wait until they were clearly needed.

LOBBY STANDS

The Defense Production bill was the target of many national lobby organizations, although its relatively swift passage through Congress made for less pressure than a major bill usually attracts. Following are some stands taken:

The Congress of Industrial Organizations favored the bill in general, including standby rationing and price control. A wage freeze was considered unnecessary.

The American Federation of Labor favored the bill, stressing rent and real estate credit controls, control of commodity market speculation and maintenance of flexibility in price-wage controls.

The Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen opposed amendments guaranteeing profits to meat processors, barring regulation of grade labeling and brand names and simultaneous wage and price controls. The Brotherhood asked for price controls and standby rationing on scarce commodities.

The United States Junior Chamber of Commerce endorsed the Baruch plan.

The Disabled American Veterans favored a draft of military personnel, capital, labor and industry, plus action against black marketeers and hoarders.

Americans for Democratic Action called for expansion of production facilities for strategic materials; credit and rent control; standby rationing and price controls and limited curbs on wage increases.

National Association of Retail Meat and Food Dealers asked for strict meat control regulation at the farm, processor and eating place levels, and more simple rationing at the retail level.

The Committee for Economic Development asked for credit restrictions to curtail demands for consumers' durable goods, housing and business plant, equipment and inventories.

National Retail Dry Goods Committee on Emergency Controls recommended emergency controls on all inventories.

Restaurant Beverage Association petitioned for a freeze of food prices and institution of rationing.

Retail Industry Committee said price control and rationing were not needed.

The National Council for Prevention of War recommended restrictions on Executive powers to control the national economy.

Independent Petroleum Association of America told Congress that the oil industry could handle war needs without further regulation.

The National Petroleum Council said the oil industry was already geared for mobilization.

The Chamber of Commerce of the United States came out for freezing of wages, prices and profits.

National Association of Real Estate Boards opposed a freeze on the real estate economy.

The National Independent Meat Packers Association urged caution in delegation of authority to the Executive, and suggested a Congressional advisory committee.

American Farm Bureau Federation said price controls and rationing were not needed for the Korean war. It also opposed sections of the bill changing rules on sale of surplus farm commodities and on speculation curbs.

National Farmers Union endorsed most of the President's requests, but opposed emergency exemptions from anti-trust prosecutions.

The National Grange recommended a Congressional watch-dog committee, and opposed sections dealing with farm commodities.

The Illinois Manufacturers Association told Congress that extensive controls over the economy were not necessary and would hamper the war effort.

National Cotton Council opposed bans on commodity speculation.

Committee for Constitutional Government said "collectivists" were seizing on the Korean war as an opportunity to advance their program. The Committee said wage, rent and price controls, rationing, excess-profit taxes, elevation of upper-bracket income taxes, allocations of materials and priorities to producers would interfere with the war effort.

Emergency Reclamation

HR 7220—PL 451

This bill, designed to expedite emergency reclamation projects, was approved without opposition by both houses.

The measure provided that approval of a repair project by the Senate Interior Committee and the House Public Lands Committee would take effect immediately and that the project could be started as soon as approval of the committees was secured. During adjournment periods, the project could be started upon approval of the committee chairmen and ranking minority members. Previous legislation had specified that committee approval could not take effect until 60 days after the request for the project had been submitted to Congress.

House Bill Approved

The House Public Lands Committee reported the bill Feb. 14, and it was approved by the House Feb. 20. A similar bill (S 3001) was approved by the Senate Interior Committee Feb. 14. The House bill was substituted for the Senate measure and passed by the Senate Feb. 22. It was signed by the President March 3 and became Public Law No. 451.

Nominations

Several of the most controversial nominations made in 1950 by the President concerned figures in the general field of Taxation and Economic Policy. Some of the nominees won confirmation — and some did not. Each case, however, was accompanied by considerable debate, maneuvering and formal voting.

PIKE CONFIRMED

President Truman on June 19 renominated Sumner Pike of Maine to another four year term on the Atomic Energy Commission. At the time of his nomination, Pike was the Acting Chairman of the AEC following the resignation of David Lilienthal. The nomination, however, ran into opposition.

Although he filed no formal charges against Pike, Sen. Bourke Hickenlooper (R Iowa) insisted that the nomination be held up. He contended the Maine Republican did not measure up to the requirements of the important job. Support was given Hickenlooper by Sen. Edwin C. Johnson (D Colo.)

On June 29, Senate members of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy voted 5 to 4 to ask the Senate itself to turn down Pike. Sen, Johnson cast the deciding vote against Pike in a committee that otherwise was split on solid party lines. Committee Chairman Brien McMahon (D Conn.) announced the vote was as follows: for confirmation — Sens. McMahon, Tom Connally (D Tex.), Millard E. Tydings (D Md.), and Richard B. Russell (D Ga.); against confirmation — Sens. Johnson, Bourke B. Hickenlooper (R Iowa) Eugene D. Millikin (R Colo.), John W. Bricker (R Ohio), and William F. Knowland (R Calif.).

On June 30, Hickenlooper in a radio address asserted that Pike opposed development of the hydrogen bomb and "is not the most desirable man for another term on the Atomic Energy Commission." Later, Pike said Hickenlooper's statement was a "distortion of facts." He declared when facts about the bomb came in, his attitude changed and that any argument about development of the H-bomb ended in January when the President directed the AEC to go ahead.

President Truman on July 6 criticized Johnson's action, asserting at a press conference that Johnson voted much oftener with the Republicans than with the Democrats. He also reindorsed Pike's nomination.

The Senate took up the unfavorably-endorsed Pike nomination on July 10.

In the floor debate, McMahon led Pike's defense. Replying to criticism that Pike had "dragged his feet" on the hydrogen bomb project, McMahon read a letter from Defense Secretary Louis Johnson saying that under Pike's acting chairmanship at AEC, it "moved ahead with vigor and competence." Sens. Johnson and Eugene D. Millikin (R Colo.) acknowledged that part of their opposition to Pike came from his refusal to develop Colorado supplies of low-grade uranium ore as fast as they deemed desirable. Hickenlooper said Pike had to be bludgeoned into countermanding orders to an AEC scientist who was authorized to discuss with British atomic scientists certain highly secret data.

The Senate then voted 55-24 on a formal roll-call ballot to overturn the Joint Committee's unfavorable decision, and confirm Pike to a new four year term. On the final vote, 38 Democrats and 17 Republicans balloted for confirmation; five Democrats and 19 Republicans balloted against it.

LEE CONFIRMED

Josh Lee of Oklahoma, who was serving with the Civil Aeronautics Board under a 1949 Presidential recess appointment, was formally nominated by Mr. Truman on Jan. 5, 1950, for a regular six year CAB term. However, a contest in the Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee over the confirmation began to develop Jan. 25, when Sen. Herbert R. O'Conor (D Md.) requested and was granted postponed action on the nomination. O'Conor, a Committee member, said he would oppose anyone who favored wiping out small operators and giving the airline business to big concerns.

In testimony before the Committee, Lee asserted that on the whole he subscribed to the view of balancing the cost of a service to the government "as against allowing additional competition" which would cost more mail pay. Lee was criticized by Amos E. Heacock, of Seattle, president of Air, Transport Associates, Inc., for what Heacock claimed was Lee's inclination in CAB decisions to favor elimination of competition between big airlines and non-scheduled cargo-passenger services.

The Commerce Committee made no immediate decision on the Lee nomination, and when it came up in the group a second time on Feb. 8, action on it was delayed, again at the request of O'Conor, who was supported by Lester C. Hunt (D Wyo.).

Another delay was granted on Feb. 22, when the Committee agreed to give at least a one-hour hearing to a group of independent airlines seeking authority to continue services to Alaska from the Pacific Northwest. Chairman Edwin C. Johnson (D Colo.) said the Committee would hear Amos E. Heacock, president of the Independent Air Carriers Conference of America, made up of non-scheduled airlines.

But after receiving Heacock's views, the Committee decided to recommend confirmation, and the Senate did this on March 8 by unanimous consent.

HOOK REJECTED

Frank E. Hook, former Democratic Congressman from Michigan, was a 1949 recess appointee who failed to win confirmation in 1950. Hook was nominated formally in 1950 to be a member of the Motor Carrier Claims Commission. However, the Senate Judiciary Committee on June 1 recommended against his confirmation.

No announcement was made regarding the rejection. When the Senate took up the matter on Aug. 9, however, Senator Homer Ferguson (R Mich.) invoked an old Senatorial privilege by declaring that Hook's appointment was "personally obnoxious" to him. In 1948, Hook had unsuccessfully opposed Ferguson in a close race for the Senate seat held by the latter.

The Senate responded to Ferguson's comments, and rejected Hook by a voice vote.

HUTCHINSON REJECTED

Martin A. Hutchinson, Richmond, Va., lawyer and political opponent of Sen. Harry Flood Byrd (D Va.), was nominated March 6 by President Truman for a term on the Federal Trade Commission.

Hutchinson ran unsuccessfully for the Senate in 1946 against Byrd. Hutchinson's 1946 campaign literature described him as a strong supporter of the "liberal, humane and progressive program of Franklin D. Roosevelt." Another paragraph asserted he was: "A taxpayer who believes in economy in government and a balanced budget, but recognizes that governmental agencies essential to the security and safety of the nation must be maintained."

The Hutchinson appointment drew immediate reaction from the two Virginia Senators. In a letter addressed to the Senate Commerce Committee, both Byrd and Sen. A. Willis Robertson (D Va.) opposed the Hutchinson appointment on the ground the appointee "lacks judicial temperament and exhibits a blind support of public policies merely because such are advocated by certain party leaders." The Senators called the nomination "obviously political" made on the advice of William M. Boyle, Jr., chairman of the Democratic National Committee. They said they were not consulted on the nomination, as is the usual custom.

The Committee held hearings on the nomination.

In testimony June 14, Hutchinson told the members that he had made a primary fight against Byrd to get "the South back in harmony with the rest of the union." He denied that he followed party leaders "blindly" as the Virginia Senators charged. He said he would consider himself an arm of Congress in carrying out his duties as a member of the FTC. He did not recall talking with Boyle about the appointment and said he had not talked with the President although several friends had done so. "If there be any question as to my qualifications for this position, I would like to meet that issue squarely," he stated. "This appointment may be political, but what in the realm of government doesn't have a political tinge?" he asked.

On June 15, however, the Committee voted 5-3 to ask the Senate not to confirm Hutchinson. When the upper chamber considered the nomination on Aug. 9, it heard Sen. Warren Magnuson (D Wash.) contend that Hutchinson's record showed him to be "more than qualified" for the FTC post. But the views of Byrd and Robertson prevailed, and Hutchinson's nomination was rejected on a formal roll-call vote of 59-14.

(For additional nominations in the Taxation and Economic Policy category, see page 731.)

Scrap Metal Duties

HR 5327—P.L. 869

A bill (HR 5327) to suspend tariff duties until June 30, 1951, on metal scrap imports was passed by the Senate Sept. 22 on a voice vote and, after House concurrence the same day in a minor amendment, was sent to the White House.

President Truman signed it into law on Sept. 30.

Passed by the House in 1949, (See CQ Almanac, Vol. V, page 776,) the bill originally suspended the duties until June 30, 1950.

The Senate, which has postponed action on the bill, had to amend it to include the new date.

The suspended tariffs included those on iron and steel, 37½ cents a long ton; aluminum, 1½ cents a pound; magnesium, 20 cents a pound; and zinc, ¾ cents a pound.

Fur Rider Rejected

When HR 5327 was before the Senate, Sen. Alexander Wiley (R Wis.) tried and failed to tie an amendment to the bill curbing Russian fur imports. Finance Committee Chairman Walter F. George (D Ga.) offered a motion to table Wiley's motion and it carried by voice vote.

Copper Import Duties

HJ Res 494
HJ Res 502

SUMMARY

Imported copper had long been exempted from import duties under the terms of legislation passed by previous Congresses. However, this exemption legislation was due to expire on June 30, 1950. To continue it—and thus continue the suspension on import duty of two cents on each pound of imported copper — the House in 1950 passed two resolutions (H J Res 494 and H J Res 502.) Neither resolution, however, drew action in the Senate in its own right.

HOUSE

As the June 30, 1950, expiration date neared for existing legislation which suspended import levies on imported copper, Rep. James T. Patterson (R Conn.) secured preliminary approval of a resolution he sponsored (H J Res 494) continuing the suspension for an additional 60 days.

On June 27, Patterson put his resolution before the House, and the lower chamber formally approved it by unanimous consent.

But on June 28, moves were made to rescind the action. Rep. Walter S. Baring (D Nev.) introduced a resolution to this effect, after calling passage of the suspension resolution "a sneak attack upon the West." He called House passage of the suspension "railroading."

Resisting Baring's arguments, Patterson said his own suspension resolution met the "urgency" caused by the approach of the expiration date. Patterson added he had a bill (HR 7151) providing for a two-year extension of the suspension, and that the House Ways and Means Committee would hold hearings on it July 10.

Baring's resolution to reverse the House approval of the Patterson proposal was cleared by the Rules Committee June 29. But when Baring undertook to raise it for a vote, Rep. Kenneth B. Keating (R N.Y.) objected.

New Committee Action

Keating's objection served to block immediate action on Baring's resolution to nullify the effect of previous House passage of H J Res 494. Accordingly, the copper import tax fight reverted to the House Ways and Means Committee chambers, where Patterson's long-range bill (HR 7151) was being studied.

Originally, HR 7151 had called for a flat two-year suspension. The State Department had pressed for this period. However, witnesses from Western, copper mining states had gone before the House Committee on July 10 and 11 to argue against any suspension at all. They said the duty was needed to protect the domestic industry.

An official of the Arizona Small Mine Operators Association, Charles F. Willis, said that proponents of the suspension had used "an army of publicity men" to lobby for it. "They brought distinguished actors into the setting. The President of Chile, Gabriel Gonzalez Videla, was imported into this country, obviously for the purpose of influencing sentiment for the continued free entry of Chilean copper into the U. S."

Then, on July 12, Western Congressmen seeking to keep the two-cents-per-pound import tax on foreign copper suffered a defeat when the House Ways and Means Committee approved HR 7151. Although House leaders said July 13 the bill would be considered July 17 under suspension of the rules, HR 7151 was never formally reported.

Second Resolution Offered

Instead, an entirely fresh approach to the problem was made on July 12 when Chairman Robert Doughton (D N.C.) of the Ways and Means group submitted a second resolution (H J Res 502) dealing with the suspension of copper import duties. Unlike H J Res 494 which continued the suspension for 60 days beyond June 30, 1950, Doughton's measure urged a full year's continuation of the suspension.

This second resolution was reported from Doughton's group on July 14, and the House took it up on July 17.

Copper states Congressmen argued that the duty was necessary for the survival of a large part of the domestic industry. Proponents used national defense and the Korean emergency as the core of their contentions that the duty should be suspended again, as it had been for several years. Opponents said that imports might well be cut off in time of war and that the nation's marginal mines should receive encouragement, to which proponents replied that the domestic industry was unable to meet the country's copper demand.

Chief Speakers

Among proponents participating in the floor debate were: Reps. Doughton, Walter A. Lynch (D N.Y.), Chase Going Woodhouse (D Conn.), Kenneth B. Keating (R N.Y.) and Patterson. Opponents included John B. Bennett (R Mich.), Baring, Thomas E. Martin (R Iowa), and John R. Murdock (D Ariz.).

After the debate, however, the House voted 283-58 on roll call to pass Doughton's bill. (See Page 720 for vote.)

XUM

SENATE

Western Senators scored a victory June 30 when the House-passed stopgap bill (H J Res 494), suspending for another 60 days the two-cents-a-pound import tax on foreign copper, arrived in the upper chamber. They blocked immediate consideration by having it referred to the Senate Finance Committee. Meantime, copper imports went off the duty-free list as of July 1.

Patterson's resolution received no further action.

In connection with Doughton's resolution, the Senate Finance Committee Aug. 8 shelved it on a 9 to 4 vote.

In the final Committee vote, these Senators were for continued suspension: Chairman Walter F. George (D Ga.), Scott W. Lucas (D Ill.), Francis J. Myers (D Pa.) and Harry Flood Byrd (D Va.). These were against: Tom Connally (D Tex.), Lyndon B. Johnson (D Tex.), Clyde R. Hoey (D N.C.), Robert S. Kerr (D Okla.), Eugene D. Millikin (R Colo.), Robert A. Taft (R Ohio), Hugh Butler (R Neb.), Owen Brewster (R Maine) and Edward Martin (R Pa.).

In December, however, Sen. Brien McMahon (D Conn.) attempted to add the gist of Patterson's resolution to the excess-profits taxation bill (HR 9827) then pending in the Senate. (See page 669.)

Mining Subsidies

S 2105, S 3972, HR 8221

SUMMARY

Several mining subsidy bills were before Congress in 1950, but none was enacted into law.

The Senate had approved a mining subsidy measure (S 2105) in 1949, but the House turned the bill down March 16, 1950. The bill was then rewritten by both the House and Senate, and was reported favorably by the Senate Interior Committee as S 3972 on July 25, 1950, and by the House Public Lands Committee as HR 8221 on May 3, 1950.

The new House bill bogged down in the Rules Committee. Chairman Adolph Sabath (D Ill.) of the Rules Committee introduced still another compromise substitute (HR 8468) May 10, but it also failed to clear Rules. The Senate substitute did not see floor action.

BACKGROUND

During the first session of the 80th Congress, President Truman vetoed one mine subsidy bill because, he said, it would have contributed little to the production of metals then in short supply, and because it would have conflicted with the natural resources conservation policy. (CQ Almanac Vol. III, pp. 518, 548.)

During the second session, both houses worked on new mine subsidy legislation, but neither passed a bill. (CQ Almanc Vol. IV, p. 358.).

More bills were introduced during the first session of the 81st Congress.

The Senate Interior Committee reported two bills: S 240 by Senator James E. Murray (D Mont.) and others, which would establish premium price incentive plans similar to the program operated during the war and S 2105, based on a measure suggested by the Interior Department, which would permit the negotiation of selective contracts for exploration and conservation, would encompass fewer metals and minerals (primarily copper, lead and zinc), and would give the proposed National Minerals Board more discretion in administering the provisions of the bill. The Senate passed this bill in somewhat amended form Oct. 6 by voice vote.

The House Public Lands Committee reported three bills in this field: HR 976 by Clair Engle (D Calif.), a companion measure to S 240; then HR 5725 also by Engle, which contained provisions only for exploration contributions by the government, but on the same principle as HR 976; and finally, in considerably amended form, the Senate-passed bill S 2105. The Rules Committee never gave clearance to HR 976, and S 2105 failed to pass the House Oct. 17, when fewer than two-thirds voted to suspend the rules and pass the measure.

Arguments Used

In both houses, Congressmen from the mining areas of the Mountain States led support for the bill. In the House, Representatives from fourteen western states voted solidly for suspension of the rules. The votes missing from the necessary two-thirds could have been made up if the absent 20 members from these states and Wyoming had been present to vote with the members of their delegations.

Proponents of the bill stressed the plight of the mining industry and said the bill did not constitute a subsidy. Opponents attacked the measure because of its cost, and because it constituted an invasion into a field of private enterprise. Some said it would give too much authority and discretion to the administrator of the program. This argument resulted in a broader set of mandatory features — leaving a smaller area in which the administrator could say "no" to an applicant for federal aid.

Party Stands

Democratic Platform: "We shall expand our program . . . for the stockpiling of strategic minerals and the encouragement of a sound domestic mining industry."

Republican Platform: "We favor conservation of all our natural resources and believe that conservation and stockpiling of strategic and critical raw materials is indispensable to the security of the U. S."

Debate

Chairman J. Hardin Peterson (D Fla.) tried again in January, 1950, to get the Rules Committee to clear the Senate-passed mine subsidy bill (S 2105). Rules voted on the bill Feb. 27, but turned it down by a 6-6 tie vote.

Action was then initiated in the House March 13 under the 21-day discharge rule allowing any committee chairman to move House consideration of a bill, approved by his group, but lodged more than 21 days in the Rules group. Peterson was successful. A rule was adopted by voice vote.

Opposition in the debate came from a North-South coalition. Eugene Cox (D Ga.) contended the measure was "sold to the majority as a bid for votes" and Christian A. Herter (R Mass.) claimed it was "loosely drawn." Overton Brooks (D La.) cited it as an "outright subsidy" bill. Frank B. Keefe (R Wis.) and John B. Bennett (R Mich.) also opposed it.

Support came from Westerners claiming the country is depending on a "dying" industry for stockpiling of raw materials vital to national security. Proponents included Wesley A. D'Ewart (R Mont.), Dewey Short (R Mo.), Dixie Gilmer (D Okla.) and Antonio M. Fernandez (D N.M.).

The bill would have authorized $80 million a year for three years by a new Minerals Conservation Board that would aid the mining industry to locate, produce and stockpile strategic ores and minerals. It would have permitted the government to contribute to keeping valuable mines open.

A committee amendment adopted by a 59-16 division vote, however, eliminated a Senate-approved clause requiring mine operators to repay part of the aid money from any accrued profits. Herter and Kenneth B. Keating (R N.Y.) opposed the amendment. All committee amendments were adopted. (See CQ Almanac, Vol. V, p. 689.) Keating offered an amendment from the floor providing for quick sale of all metals produced under the Act and not added to the national security stockpile. It was adopted without objection.

Debate was brought to an end March 16 when Herter moved to send the bill back to the Public Lands Committee. The motion lost on a roll-call vote 155-161. Some members then left the chamber, and some who voted against recommittal also voted against the bill. The final vote was 144-166 on roll call, defeating the measure. (See p. 714.)

Substitute Bills

House rejection of S 2105 produced new efforts to enact similar legislation.

Clair Engle (D Cal.) introduced a compromise mine subsidy bill (HR 8221) April 26. It called for expenditure of $330 million in four years, a reduction in maximum expenditures from the old bill's $400 million. Also the Secretary of Interior was designated as the administrator of the program, instead of an independent board. Engle told the Public Lands Committee the new measure differed from the old just enough to make it acceptable under parliamentary rules. The Committee approved it May 2.

But this second try at a mine subsidy bill also stalled in the Rules Committee. Objections were voiced to its price tag, and it was voted down by the Rules Committee May 10. On the same day Chairman Sabath introduced a compromise measure of his own (HR 8468). It called for $165 million to be spent over four years—$30 million the first year and $45 million each of the next three years. Other provisions were identical with HR 8221.

The Public Lands Committee subcommittee on mines approved the Sabath bill, but the full committee did not act. Sabath asked his Rules Committee several times to approve his measure, but no formal action was taken. Instead the Committee reaffirmed its earlier action on the Engle bill by rejecting it again 4-5 June 28. There was no more House action.

Second Senate Bill

Sen. Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.) introduced a companion (S 3972) to the Engle Bill July 25. He said such legislation was essential and that if the Senate acted on his bill before the Engle measure was sent over from the House, then considerable time would be saved.

The Senate Interior Committee approved the O'Mahoney bill the same day it was introduced, but no further action was taken in the Senate.

Economic Reports

Two subcommittees of the Joint Committee on the Economic Report published findings during 1950 which supported repeal of the wartime excise tax rates. Neither subcommittee reported on the excises above but each found the levies had some adverse bearing on the economic area with which each group was concerned.

Unemployment Subcommittee

On Feb. 4, the unemployment subcommittee that had studied joblessness the Summer of 1949 reported it had heard from witnesses that "the repeal of the excise and luxury taxes . . .currently in effect would have a beneficial effect upon sales and production in the industries affected by such taxes and therefore would help reduce unemployment in these industries". Specifically cited was the testimony of Secretary of Labor Maurice Tobin, Secretary of Commerce Charles Sawyer and officials of the CIO and AFL.

This subcommittee's report also urged: 1. Liberalization of unemployment insurance programs; 2. further study of the nature of unemployment; and 3. development of regional and area programs to relieve geographically "spotty" joblessness.

Investment Subcommittee

An investment study subcommittee of the Economic Report Committee March 22 released a study which urged revision of the excise levies as one way to stimulate small business and private investment in it. Such revision would enhance the "availability of equity financing" by easing present taxes which militate against venture capital, said the subcommittee report.

The government was urged to take prompt action: 1. To provide aids of supplemental channels for capital loans and equity capital to small enterprise; and 2. to create a nationwide system to make such loans.

The document was signed by Chairman Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.), Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) and Rep. Wright Patman (D Tex.). Concurring in it generally, but issuing a supplemental statement were Sen. Robert A. Taft (R Ohio) and Rep. Christian A. Herter (R Mass.). They charged the majority put "too little emphasis on the results of heavy taxation" as a factor in investment troubles.

President's Report

The Korean war struck when the United States was at an all-time prosperity peak, President Truman told Congress June 26 in his regular Mid - Year Economic Report to the legislators.

He proposed a $10 billion military expansion program which he said could come out of the nation's record production without the imposition of many controls — provided no new crises arose elsewhere. The President asked no new controls beyond authority to regulate consumer credit, limit speculation in commodities and set priorities and allocations for war materials.

(For full account of Congressional response to and action on President's requests contained in the Mid-Year Economic Report, see story of Defense Production Act, p. 624, and Supplemental Appropriations Act, p. 130.)

While minimizing the necessity for controls, the President warned that "complete economic mobilization" was a possibility if the world situation were to worsen.

As for national production, he said it rose to a rate of $267 billion annually in the second quarter of 1950, setting a new record high.

Controls on producers, the report said, would have to be accompanied by restraints on the part of labor and the buying public. "Above all," it continued, "labor should join with management in the further consolidation of industrial peace."

To consumers ("every person in the United States") the President offered this advice: "Buy normally. The current outlook is that serious shortages of consumer goods will not develop unless they are created artificially by speculative or panicky acquisition of goods far in excess of industrial peace."

The Economic Report asked for:
1. An increase in taxes, including closing of tax loopholes and boosting corporate taxes and personal income taxes.
2. Authority to regulate consumer credit and limit speculation in commodities.
3. Authority to set priorities and allocations for war materials.
4. Authority to provide loans and incentives for the expansion of essential production.

Foreign - Trade Zones

HR 5332—P.L. 566

Congress completed action in 1950 on a bill (HR 5332) to amend the Foreign-Trade Zones Act. The measure eased restrictions on assembling and processing of foreign goods in the "foreign-trade zones" which the original Act set up in major U. S. ports. (These so-called "zones" permit foreign importers to have their products processed on U. S. territory before formally introducing them as imports to the U. S. market.)

The bill had been passed by both houses in 1949. However, the Senate had added an amendment requiring the President to protect the domestic fur industry from Russian competition. The House did not agree to the amendment, so the measure was sent to a House-Senate conference.

The conference committee agreed Oct. 13, 1949, to drop the Senate amendment. There was no further action that year, however.

The Senate took up the conference bill June 5, 1950. Almost all debate was over the removal of the Senate amendment. Walter F. George (D Ga.) told the Senate the amendment "does not give to the President one single power which he does not now have and which he could not now exercise."

But Eugene D. Millikin (R Colo.) protested removal of the amendment, saying, "We are today in such a position that we are called upon to spend more than $20 billion yearly to conduct a so-called cold war with Russia, and at the same time we are allowing overwhelming importation of Russian furs, the effect of which is to put our own fur farmers out of business . . . If adoption of the amendment serves no purpose other than as an admonition, it serves a useful purpose."

Tie Vote Broken

Vote on the legislation was on strict party lines. Thirty Democrats opposed 30 Republicans. President of the Senate Alben W. Barkley then cast his vote in the affirmative, and the bill was approved. (see p. 729.)

The measure then went back to the House, where it was approved on voice vote June 8. The President signed it June 17, and it became Public Law No. 566.

Freight Forwarders

HR 5967—P.L. 881

SUMMARY

Congress in 1950 approved a bill (HR 5967) to clarify the status of freight forwarders in interstate commerce. The President promptly signed it into law.

A freight forwarder is an organization which contracts with the general public to transport less-than-carload and less-than-truck load freight. The freight forwarder picks up the freight, holds it until it can be combined with other shipments to make a complete truckload or carload, ships the freight via rail, highway or waterway and delivers the freight to the consignee.

Except for their pick-up and delivery service in the two terminal cities, the freight forwarders do not own or operate facilities for transportation. For their inter-terminal shipments, the freight forwarders contract for the services of railways, motor carriers, etc. The freight forwarders however, offer the public complete through-service, charging a "through" rate and assuming complete responsibility for the safe carriage and delivery of the freight. They acquire their margin of profit by charging the public less-than-carload rates and paying the railroads, etc., carload rates.

BACKGROUND

On Sept. 24, 1948, the Interstate Commerce Commission ruled that under the Motor Carrier Act of 1935 as amended in 1946, freight forwarders were not "common carriers" and therefore could no longer contract with motor carriers (trucking lines) for truck-load rates lower than those offered the general public, as was the existing practice.

The ICC ruling would have handicapped many freight forwarders, as the spread between less-than-truck load rates, which the freight forwarders charged the public, and the full truckload rates, which the freight forwarders were themselves charged, was not enough to leave a margin of profit. (The spread in rail rates, however, was sufficient.)

Members of Congress said they felt the 1935 Act as amended had meant to include freight forwarders as common carriers and thus enable them, with ICC supervision, to make special rate deals with motor carriers. The ICC postponed enforcement of its ruling until Congress had time to pass a bill clarifying the Act.

Edwin C. Johnson (D Colo.) introduced such a bill in the Senate June 20, 1949, and Robert Crosser (D Ohio) did the same in the House Aug. 11, 1949.

Both bills specified that freight forwarders were common carriers and authorized them to enter into special rate agreements with motor carriers subject to the usual restrictions and ICC supervision applicable to similar agreements among common carriers.

HOUSE

The House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee held six hearings on the Crosser bill May 16 through June 13, 1950. Peter T. Beardsley of the American Trucking Associations, told the Committee his group opposed the bill because it would not safeguard small freight forwarders and truckers from unfair competition from the large forwarders.

Carl H. Bier, Brotherhood of Railway Clerks, supported the bill, saying it would enable carriers to provide complete pick-up to delivery service, without which the railroads would be hard-pressed financially.

Joseph Eshelman, representing the Pennsylvania and the Baltimore and Ohio Railroads, opposed the bill because, he said, it would enable motor carriers to underbid railroads for business.

Morrow Giles, Freight Forwarders Institute, told the Committee, "This bill is necessary not only to prevent basic changes and disruptions in freight forwarder service, with attendant harm to the shipping public, but it is essential to a proper administration of the law in the future."

The Committee approved the bill July 10 and sent it to the House with an amendment to specify certain responsibilities of freight forwarders and to protect small forwarders.

House debate Aug. 8 was extended by long explanations of the history and technicalities of the measure. Bill supporters said the measure would not alter the status quo and would protect the shipping public. Opponents said it would give some freight forwarders an unfair advantage over other common carriers.

A final decision was put off until Aug. 9. Then Gerald R. Ford Jr. (R Mich.) moved to send the bill back to the Committee. His motion lost on roll-call vote 145-233. Then the bill was passed by voice vote.

SENATE

The Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee had held hearings on the Johnson bill July 28 and 29 and Aug. 11, 1949. Testimony was similar to that given before the House Committee. The bill was reported favorably Feb. 24, 1950, after technical amendments had been added. The Senate did not act on this measure, however. Instead, it decided to approve the House-passed HR 5967, which it did on Dec. 6, without debate or record voting.

This cleared the measure to the White House, where President Truman signed it into law on Dec. 20.

Airline Subsidies

HR 9184

SUMMARY

The relation between federal money granted airlines for carrying airmail and money granted for other purposes — often operating subsidies — was further studied in 1950 by the 81st Congress. While the Senate in 1949 had borne the weight of an inquiry into airline subsidy practices (See CQ Almanac, Vol. V, page 741), the House produced the major bill on the topic in 1950.

The House measure was HR 9184, to direct the Civil Aeronautics Board to list separately the money it pays airlines for carrying airmail, and any money it advances in subsidies. Then, starting July 1, 1951, the CAB would pay only the latter, and the Post Office Department would pay the former.

The House passed HR 9184 on Dec. 11. However, the Senate failed to act on the measure. Moreover, the Senate failed to act on its own legislation (S 1431) drawn to clarify the relationship between airmail grants and operating subsidies, although the question was touched on by a Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee's investigation into transportation problems generally.

HOUSE

Committee

A House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Subcommittee opened hearings on Feb. 15 on a number of bills aimed at clarifying the relation between Civil Aeronautics Board funds to airlines for carrying airmail and funds to them for other purposes.

The principal measure before the Subcommittee was HR 2908, which had been introduced by Rep. John Kennedy (D Mass.) and which had drawn some Subcommittee attention in 1949. Under the terms of this bill, all airlines carrying airmail would receive federal money from the Post Office Department for this purpose, but would receive any subsidies as such from the CAB.

Secretary of Commerce Charles Sawyer was first witness at the 1950 hearings. He supported the legislation.

"I think that the air carriers should receive a fair compensation for carrying the mail," Sawyer testified. "This means a rate sufficient to cover actual costs of carrying mail, plus a fair return on that part of the investment devoted to mail service. Any government payments to the carriers in excess of this amount should be labelled for what they are — subsidies."

Sawyer's position was favored by Chairman John J. O'Connell of the Civil Aeronautics Board.

On March 9, Earl Slick, president of Slick Airways, endorsed the bill. He contended much of the government's mail costs involved outright operation subsidies for passenger airlines and he particularly criticized American Airlines. Slick Airways carried only freight and received no mail subsidies.

American, Slick declared, charged only 15 cents a ton-mile for freight compared with 60 cents for mail and passengers. Without its airmail subsidies, he added, the company "would have lost nearly $10 million in the freight business alone" in 1949 on a 15-cent rate. The freight-carrying lines, he argued, "don't want a subsidy—all we ask is fair rules of the game."

The Subcommittee concluded its hearings March 15 after taking testimony from Delegate E. L. Bartlett (D Alaska), and officials of the Post Office and the Independent Air Carrier Conference of America. Testimony favored the measure.

Hearings Reopened

On April 6, the Subcommittee reopened hearings on HR 2908, taking new testimony in favor of it from the Association of American Railroads and the American Veterans Committee. The one-day hearing was followed by another one on May 24, when more supporting testimony came from the CIO Maritime Committee and the National Association of Letter Carriers (AFL.)

But opposition to the measure was presented by John L. Sullivan, who represented the following certified airlines: All American Aviation, Inc.; Bonanza Air Lines, Inc ; Braniff Airways, Inc.; Capital Airlines; Chicago and Southern Air Lines, Inc.; Colonial Airlines, Inc.; Delta Air Lines, Inc.; Empire Air Lines, Inc.; Mid-Continent Airlines, Inc.; Northeast Airlines, Inc.; Northwest Airlines, Inc.; Piedmont Aviation, Inc.; Pioneer Air Lines, Inc.; Robinson Airlines Corp.; Roscoe Turner Aeronautical Corp.; Southern Airways Company and the Southwest Airways Company.

"Clean" Bill Readied

After concluding this last round of hearings, the Subcommittee decided to wrap the various changes it had made in HR 2908 into a new, "clean" bill, and introduce this latter version of the legislation. Accordingly, the Subcommittee drafted HR 9184, which Rep. John Heselton (R Mass.) promptly introduced. The measure was basically similar to the original HR 2908 on which hearings had been held.

The full Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee on Aug. 23 voted 15-2 to endorse the measure and report it to the House for action. No information was released with respect to the identities of the two lawmakers opposing endorsement. The measure was formally set before the House on Aug. 31.

FLOOR ACTION

The House took up HR 9184 on Dec. 6. During the debate, it was brought out that the Postal Affairs Task Force of the Citizens Committee for the Hoover Report (on Federal Reorganization) had estimated that passage of the bill would reduce the Post Office deficit by $30 to $60 million a year. It would separate concealed airline subsidies from Post Office payments for airmail and make the subsidies open appropriations, as recommended by the bipartisan Hoover Commission.

However, on Dec. 6, Rep. Oren D. Harris (D Ark.) moved to substitute for the text of the Committee-backed bill a different version endorsed by the Air Transport Association. This version (HR 9305) exempted U. S. international airlines from the separation process envisaged in HR 9184, and indefinitely postponed the effective date of the separation reform. In addition, it omitted cost standards specified in HR 9184 for determining certain Post Office Department mail payments.

But Harris' substitute was rejected in the Committee of the Whole on a 38-87 division vote. On Dec. 11, the House passed the bill on a 66-0 division vote.

SENATE

The Senate in 1950 continued its general study of the transportation industry authorized by S Res 50, passed in 1949. Although this inquiry was not confined exclusively to the airlines industry and subsidy questions connected with it, the subject did figure prominently in hearings by the Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce group. (For details on its 1949 study, see CQ Almanac, Vol. V, page 741.)

In 1950, the Senate group heard National Airlines assert on Jan. 30 that its financial condition was "unquestionably sound" and it should be able to maintain profitable operations in the future. The company asked that its statement be included in the Committee's record of investigation into the financial condition of domestic airlines. The airlines said it favored separation of federal subsidy and mail pay and believed that "national policy should discourage reliance upon mail pay for a sound future."

Other witnesses at the 1950 hearings which ran on Jan. 30 and 31, were Defense Department officials and Air Force officers, who explained some of the aspects of their air operations with respect to the airlines industry as a whole.

Companion Bill Neglected

Although a companion bill to HR 9184 had been introduced in the Senate in 1949 by Sen. Edwin C. Johnson (D Colo.), the measure (S 1431) drew no formal action from the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee.

However, Johnson, as Chairman, did issue an "interim report" on May 5, 1950 in which he outlined his own suggestions of a "method of separation" between airmail and other subsidies. He indicated that there was industry-wide support of the principles of separation, but that differing methods of effecting these were legion.

Johnson's report made reference to a study by a firm of private accountants, Ernst & Ernst, of New York, which had advised the Commerce Committee that any separation of airmail pay from subsidy payments should be accompanied by an increase in the mail pay.

The Commerce Committee never reported S 1431.

Tidelands Oil

HR 8137

SUMMARY

Considerable controversy was stirred in the 81st Congress during its first and second sessions by legislation affecting the so-called "tidelands" — oil - rich lands extending three miles out from the U. S. geographic coastline. Nub of the controversy was whether the federal government or the States should have the right to develop this "marginal belt," and also whether or not the federal government should have development jurisdiction over the "continental shelf." The latter term involves land beyond the three-mile offshore demarcation.

The major measure considered by the Congress in 1949 was HR 5991, which left control of the "marginal belt" to the States, and control of the "continental shelf" to the U. S. It also provided for exchange leases, and for a 50-50 revenue split with the adjacent state, from operations in the continental shelf, while 62 1/2 per cent of "marginal belt" proceeds are to remain with the states.

The bill ceded inland waters to the states (the bill specifically included the Great Lakes), but contained clauses to protect federal hydro-electric, navigation, irrigation, and flood control projects. The bill also reserved emergency powers to the federal government in the "submerged coastal lands" — continental shelf and marginal belt — to suspend operations or purchase of oil or natural gas produced. Leases would be issued under the provisions of the Mineral Leasing Act which applies to public lands.

(For further details and background, see CQ Almanac, Vol. V, page 770.)

However, the measure failed to get completed action in 1949.

In 1950, however, the House Judiciary Committee completed work on HR 5991 and set it before the House in the form of a "clean" bill — HR 8137 — which embodied most of the salient provisions of the original measure.

The legislation failed to draw action, however.

Senate Action

For its part, the Senate Judiciary Committee in 1950 attempted to find some kind of compromise which would afford an interim settlement of the tidelands dispute — which had been further complicated by a Supreme Court ruling in June. The Court ruled in favor of the federal government in connection with a tidelands case involving Texas and Louisiana.

To study a possible settlement, the Senate Committee held hearings in August on S J Res 195. But no final action was taken on the resolution.

HOUSE

A few weeks after the 81st Congress had reconvened for its second session in 1950, definite action was taken on tidelands legislation. A subcommittee of the House Judiciary group which had been studying HR 5991 reported the measure favorably to the full Committee.

The full Committee tentatively endorsed the measure on April 20. Rep. Ed Gossett (D Tex.), a Judiciary member and supporter of the legislation, said the group voted 16 to 10 for the measure. Those he listed as supporting the bill besides himself were: Francis E. Walter (D Pa.), author of the legislation, Jospeh R. Bryson (D S.C.), Frank L. Chelf (D Ky.), J. Frank Wilson (D Tex.), Dixie Gilmer (D Okla.), Boyd Tackett (D Ark.), Edwin E. Willis (D La.), James B. Frazier, Jr. (D Tenn.), Earl C. Michener (R Mich.), Chauncey W. Reed (R Ill.), Frank Fellows (R Maine), John Jennings, Jr. (R Tenn.), William M. McCulloch (R Ohio), J. Caleb Boggs (R Del.) and Angier L. Goodwin (R Mass.).

Those he listed against the measure were: Committee Chairman Emanuel Celler (D. N.Y.), Sam Hobbs (D Ala.), William T. Byrne (D N.Y.), Thomas J. Lane (D Mass.), Michael A. Feighan (D Ohio), Robert L. Ramsay (D W. Va.), Winfield K. Denton (D Ind.), Peter W. Rodino, Jr. (D N.J.), Clifford P. Case (R N.J.), Kenneth B. Keating (R N.Y.).

But instead of submitting HR 5991 to the House in its original form, the Committee made a number of changes in it, and then on April 21 introduced a "clean" bill with an entirely new number — HR 8137.

Main change made by the Committee affected the provision of the original bill providing for federal-state division of oil royalties from wells drilled on the continental shelf beyond the 3-mile limit. A split of 37 1/2 per cent to the states and 62 1/2 per cent to the federal government was voted instead of the 50-50 split originally provided by the subcommittee. The federal government would have jurisdiction over the shelf area.

The bill also provided: full title to the states on all oil within the 3-mile limit or as far as the state's boundary extended at the time it joined the union (in case of Texas, 10 1/2); and automatic renewal of leases granted before Jan. 1, 1949, on lands held by the federal government with the royalty rate fixed at 12 1/2 per cent.

Harsh Opposing Views

Opponents of the measure issued harshly critical statements. Chairman Emanual Celler (D N. Y.), who cast one of the 10 votes against the measure, said the minorty would issue a scorching report urging the full House to reject the measure in view of the government's pending suit in the U. S. Supreme Court against Texas and Louisiana for control of all submerged lands on their respective shorelines. (The Court held in 1947 that the government had paramount rights to submerged lands off the coast of California.)

On May 23, eight opponents issued their report. It called the measure a "calling card for war." The bill, the dissenters said, changed international law regarding coastal rights and could result in serious international disputes.

The report cited a Supreme Court ruling that all offshore properties were under federal controls as of June 23, 1947, and said the bill countenanced states which "thumbed their noses" at the high court.

Signers of the minority report were Celler; Sam Hobbs (D Ala.), William T. Byrne (D N. Y.), Thomas J. Lane (D Mass.), Michael A. Feighan (D Ohio), Robert L. Ramsay (D W. Va.), Peter W. Rodino, Jr. (D N. J.), and Winfield K. Denton (D Ind.).

New Court Ruling

A significant development in the entire tidelands situaton occurred on June 5, when the Supreme Court ruled that the federal government has the same primary rights to the oil-rich Texas and Louisiana tidelands as it does to those of California. The Louisiana case was decided, 7 to 0, in the government's favor. But the Court split, 4 to 3, in the Texas case. Justice William Douglas wrote both majority opinions. Douglas said for the court that the cases presented no real difference from that of California, decided in the government's favor in 1947.

The decisions evoked an eruption of comment in Congress. Sen. Tom Connally (D Tex.) stated he was "greatly shocked and disappointed" and "dazed" at the ruling. But Chairman Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.), of the Senate Interior Committee, said the ruling "removes all obstacles" to consideration of legislation to implement federal operation of the tidelands areas.

Meanwhile, HR 8173 was awaiting clearance to the House floor by the House Rules Committee. This group scheduled hearings on the bill June 14, at which both opponents and proponents of the measure showed up.

A favoring group from the tidelands oil states included: Ed Gossett (D Tex.), J. M. Combs (D Tex.), Ben H. Guill (R Tex.), Hale Boggs (D La.), Edwin E. Willis (D La.), and Clyde Doyle (D Calif.).

The author of the bill, Francis Walter (D Pa.) said reports to the effect that oil operations could be carried on more cheaply if the federal government controlled the off-shore areas was "propaganda."

But Judiciary Committee Chairman Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.), speaking in opposition to the bill, commented: "This bill will unsettle all our notions about state boundaries." Sam Hobbs (D Ala.) and Michael A. Feighan (D Ohio) also spoke in opposition to the bill.

The bill got no further than the Rules group, which never reported it.

SENATE

With the tidelands measure of the House bogged down in the House Rules Committee, the Senate Judiciary Committee held hearings Aug. 14-18 on a resolution (S J Res 195) introduced by Chairman Joseph O'Mahoney (D Wyo.) to provide an interim settlement of the controversy over control of off-shore oil-bearing lands.

The resolution was framed to give the Interior Department control of the land until a clear-cut Supreme Court or Congressional decision could be reached regarding ownership of the land.

Mastin G. White of the Interior Department said the controversy had almost halted oil exploration in the tidelands. The resolution, he said, would stabilize the situation and revive oil hunts. But Price Daniel, Texas attorney general, told the Committee the states should have interim control as existing contracts were between states and the oil companies.

Large delegations of coastal-state and city officials as well as coastal-state Congressmen testified against interim federal control. Oil company representatives also opposed the bill.

O'Mahoney's resolution, however, never received formal action.

Insurance Firm Taxes

HJ RES 371

SUMMARY

H J Res 371, a stop - gap resolution tightening up a section in the Internal Revenue Code which since 1946 had unexpectedly exempted the investment income of life insurance companies from federal taxes, was passed by both the House and Senate during the second session, but was finally enacted into law as a part of the general tax bill, HR 8920. (See Almanac, p. 573.)

The two chambers had differed on the extent to which the measure should tax retroactively. The House wanted to collect on the exempted investment returns for 1947, 1948 and 1949. The Senate had decided the tax should apply only to 1949 and 1950.

In this situation, the House Ways and Means Committee, anxious to see the resolution enacted, incorporated its terms in the major tax bill of the year that was then pending before it. First, however, it added 1950 to the House - approved taxable years. The House agreed with the Committee and passed HR 8920 with these provisions of the insurance resolution included. The Senate did likewise, but only after it had insisted on limiting the taxable years — once again — to 1949 and 1950.

Many compromises later, the conferees on HR 8920 decided that the insurance companies should be taxed only for 1949 and 1950. This is the way the big tax bill stood when it was signed by President Truman.

BACKGROUND

The House Ways and Means Committee received H J Res 371 on Oct. 10, 1949, a few days before the first session came to an end. It had been introduced by Committee Chairman Robert L. Doughton (D N.C.) at the request of Secretary of the Treasury John Snyder.

The resolution immediately was put in the hands of a subcommittee headed by Walter A. Lynch (D N.Y.).

In a letter to the Ways and Means Committee, Snyder had pointed out that life insurance companies were required to pay taxes only on investment income. Under the existing law, he wrote, no tax had been due from the firms since 1946. The situation, he said, resulted from the use of a formula for determining taxable income adopted in 1942, which was conceded to have become unrealistic.

The Secretary said he had been trying to work out with the companies since 1947 a long-range basis for taxing their investment income on an equitable basis, but he added that this had been impossible. Therefore he suggested the adoption of stop-gap legislation fixing net taxable income for the years 1948 and 1949 as gross income minus a fixed reserve and policy liability credit of 0.92 per cent for each of the years. This, he said, would eliminate the fixed interest element of 3.25 per cent in the existing formula, and yield $90 million in new revenue for the two - year period.

While the Lynch subcommittee began its work immediately after receiving the recommended resolution in October, the first session ended with no action taken on the proposal.

HOUSE

Committee

The full Ways and Means Committee received a report from its subcommittee Jan. 3, 1950, the day the second session opened.

The subcommittee reported that it had met with the staff of the Treasury Department, the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation, representatives of the American Life Convention and the Life Insurance Association of America.

Representatives of the industry, the group said, had objected to the "alleged arbitrary nature" of the Treasury formula as well as to the application of the tax to 1948. The subcommittee said the objection to the retroactive application of the tax was "untenable" but said it agreed with the objections to the Treasury formual. Therefore it recommended:

1. That the tax be made retroactive to include 1947 as well as 1948 and 1949.

2. That the statutory formula for determining taxable income be revised to reflect the average rates of interest assumed by the industry in maintaining its deductible policy reserves, thus eliminating the 3.25 per cent interest element fixed by the formula.

"It seems intolerable", said the subcommittee, "that so large an industry should pay no tax, due to the failure of a formula to accomplish the purpose for which it was designed." It pointed out that because of the change it made in the Treasury formula, the three-year retroactive tax would produce no more than the $90 million estimated by the Treasury for the two - year period.

The Ways and Means Committee adopted its subcommittee's report on H J Res 371 and submitted it to the House as its own recommendation.

Floor Action

The House Jan. 26 passed the measure by voice vote, after an unsuccessful attempt had been made by Joseph W. Martin Jr. (R Mass.) to tack an excise tax repeal onto the measure. The chair ruled the move out of order. (See Almanac, p. 595.)

The final vote followed Rep. Lynch's statement that it "would end the free ride and would make life insurance companies pay their fair share of the tax burden which presently bears so heavily on individuals and corporations with taxable income." A motion by Thomas A. Jenkins (R Ohio) to recommit was rejected by voice vote.

SENATE

Committee

The Senate Finance Committee took up H J Res 371 on March 16, holding hearings on that day and on March 17. Those appearing in support of the bill as passed by the House were: Reps. Doughton, Lynch, Richard M. Simpson (R Pa.), and A. Sidney Camp (D Ga.); and Vance N. Kirby, tax legislative counsel, Treasury Department; A. J. McAndless, representing the Life Insurance Association of America and the American Life Convention; Clarris Adams, president, Ohio State Life Insurance Co.; and Ellsworth C. Alvord, Washington, D. C. attorney.

Appearances in opposition to the bill were made by: Thomas I. Parkinson, president, Equitable Life Assurance Society; W. N. Stannus, secretary, Pyramid Life Insurance Co., Little Rock, Ark.; Clarence C. Kocksin, legislative counsel, Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Co., Milwaukee, Wis.; Edward J. Schmuck, Acacia Mutual Life Insurance Co., Washington, D. C.; and John A. Lloyd, president, Union Central Life Insurance Co., Cincinnati, Ohio.

The Finance Committee reported H J Res 371 on April 6, after first amending it to limit its retroactive applicability to the years 1949 and 1950.

Many of the companies, said the Committee in its report, had closed their books for the years 1947 and 1948, and in some cases had set up no reserves to cover any Federal tax liability.

Floor Action

The measure was passed by the Senate April 13 on a voice vote, exactly as it had come from the Committee. Walter F. George (D Ga.), chairman of the Finance group, gave an explanation of the bill and there was no debate.

CONFERENCE

The differing House and Senate versions of the resolution were referred to a conference composed of the following:

Reps. Lynch, Noble J. Gregory, (D Ky.), A. Sidney Camp (D Ga.), Aime J. Forand (D R.I.), Daniel A. Reed (R N.Y.), Richard M. Simpson (R Pa.), and Robert N. Kean (R N.J.); and:

Sens. George, Tom Connally (D Tex.), Harry Flood Byrd (D Va.), Eugene D. Millikin (R Colo.), and Robert A. Taft (R Ohio).

No action was ever taken by the conferees, however. Instead, the measure was incorporated in HR 8920, the year's major tax bill, and enacted as a part of it. (See Almanac, p. 573).

Import Controls

SUMMARY

Congress on June 29, 1950 completed action on a bill (S 3550) to extend for one year (through July 1, 1951) the President's authority to control imports of fats and oils, and rice and rice products.

The bill was signed by the President June 30, 1950, and became Public Law 590 only hours before existing legislation granting the President control powers would have expired.

With one exception, the bill merely prolonged the life of existing controls over fats, oils, rice and rice products, to permit the Commodity Credit Corporation to dispose, without heavy losses, of surpluses built up through wartime price-support programs.

Controls over coconut oil were eliminated by the Senate and an effort in the House to restore them was defeated. Told that any change in the Senate - approved bill would mean a conference and would prevent enactment of S 3550 before controls expired, the House also defeated efforts to write in authority for the President to impose controls on imports of petroleum, cheese, potatoes and ham.

(In connection with import controls, a Senate Labor subcommittee in July paid exclusive attention to the question of imported oil. Headed by Matthew M. Neely (D W.Va.), the group recommended that oil imports be "controlled" by means of an outright boost in the tariff on imported oil.

(Neely's subcommittee decided after lengthy hearings that a "substantial increase" in the tariff would tend to ameliorate what the group said was the adverse effect of imported oil on employment in the coal, oil, rail, silver, lead and zinc industries.

(But the full Labor Committee on July 13 refused to support the Neely group's recommendation, and said Congressional steps toward oil import controls via tariff increases "should await the Tariff Commission's recommendation in the matter.")

SENATE

Committee

The Senate Banking and Currency Committee May 5, 1950, favorably reported a committee bill (S 3550) continuing for one year (until July 1, 1951) the President's authority to control imports of oil-bearing materials, fatty acids, butter, soap and soap powder and rice and rice products. The bill, which extended authority provided by the Decontrol Act of 1947, excluded petroleum and petroleum products from import control.

Both the Agriculture and State Departments favored the extension, the Committee reported. The Secretary of Agriculture had informed it that a Commodity Credit Corporation program to dispose of surplus fats and oils built up as a result of wartime price-support programs would not be completed until after the June 30, 1950, expiration of the existing controls legislation.

The Committee added provisions which it said were intended to "mesh the exercise of authority over import controls with the obligations of the United States as a party to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trades" adopted by a United Nations conference.

Debate

The Senate amended the Committee's bill by excluding, from import controls, in addition to petroleum, certain coconuts and coconut products. In debate, members said the exclusion was requested by candy manufacturers who could utilize no substitute in making coconut candy.

Committee provisions referring to the UN Tariffs and Trades Agreement were eliminated by the Senate. Members said that as soon as conditions permitted, the President would remove the import restrictions.

The Senate passed the bill, as amended, on a voice vote June 8, 1950.

HOUSE

Committee

The House Banking and Currency Committee June 16, 1950, recommended passage of a House bill (HR 8737) to continue unchanged presidential authority to control imports of edible fat products and rice. The similar Senate bill (S 3550) was referred to the committee June 13, 1950.

The House measure did not exclude coconut products from controls, as did the Senate's, but the House Committee agreed that the Senate version be substituted, to avoid a conference when the House took up the legislation June 29, 1950, the day before the existing control legislation expired.

Debate

Members told the House immediate affirmative action was essential if the controls were to be continued. Circumstances behind the need for quick action, the coconut products exclusion and the bill itself all were subjects of considerable debate. Members were told the soap industry used 70 per cent of the coconut products imported in 1948 and that candy manufacturers used a comparatively small percentage of the total coconut imports.

The House voted down attempts to amend the bill to kill the exemption for coconut products. It also defeated proposals to write in controls for imports of cheese, potatoes, ham and petroleum and petroleum products.

A motion to recommit the bill to kill the provision excluding coconuts from controls and to write in controls on butter was defeated on a roll-call vote of 72 to 264 with 94 not voting. (See page 720).

The House then passed the bill on a voice vote, June 29, 1950.

LAW ENACTED

The President signed S 3550 June 30, 1950, and it became Public Law 590.

RFC Loans Investigated

SUMMARY

The lending activities and policies of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation were scrutinized in detail during the second session by the RFC Subcommittee of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee. The Subcommittee, headed by J. William Fulbright (D Ark.), gave the agency a rough going over and plenty of biting criticism. But at the end of the session, the task of wrapping its conclusions into a final report still remained before the group. It had until Jan. 31, 1951, to do this.

Members of the Subcommittee were: Chairman J. William Fulbright (D Ark.), Burnet R. Maybank (D S.C.), J. Allen Frear (D Del.), Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.), Charles W. Tobey (R N.H.) and Homer E. Capehart (R Ind.).

A resolution (S Res 219), adopted by the Senate Feb. 8, 1950, authorized the RFC study and provided $50,000 to finance it. The deadline for completion of the report originally was set for June 1, 1950. This was first extended, at Fulbright's request, to July 15, 1950, and, a second time, to the Jan. 31 deadline.

"Interim" reports, in the meanwhile, were submitted on two specific loans:

1. The $10.1 million loan to the Texmass Petroleum Company, of Dallas, Tex.; and 2. The transportation dealings between the Lustron Corp., a prefabricated housing concern which defaulted on a $37.5 million RFC loan, and the Commercial Home Equipment Corp. which had moved the Lustron houses from factory to the buyer.

Both the loan and the transportation dealings were criticized and termed improper, if not illegal.

The Subcommittee also held hearings, but made no report, on: 1. A $1.8 million loan to the Waltham Watch Company, of Waltham, Mass.; and 2. A series of 33 other RFC loans of varying sizes and proportions.

TEXMASS SURVEY

The Subcommittee held three hearings, April 13, 22 and 27, on the RFC's $10.1 million loan to Texmass. Prior to the hearings, the staff experts conducted a preliminary study of the facts and record and produced the following findings which served as the basis for testimony before the Subcommittee:

In 1944, Homer W. Snowden, a Dallas oil operator, and A. W. Smith, of Boston, Mass., induced a group of wealthy Bostonians to invest in oil ventures in a manner offering tax-saving possibilities. Texmass Petroleum Co. was organized in October, 1946, as successor to the Snowden enterprises and was at the outset heavily burdened with the Snowden-Smith partnership debts. Loans were obtained from private banks and other sources, mostly to buy out Snowden and his partners.

On March 30, 1949, the company applied for a $22.5 million RFC loan, to pay debts and acquire working capital. The Dallas RFC office decided against the loan as did the Washington RFC Review Committee. But the RFC Board of Directors voted two to one in September, 1949, in favor of a $15.1 million loan to Texmass, upon the condition that $10.1 million would be supplied by the RFC and the remainder by creditors of the company. Directors Harvey J. Gunderson and Walter L. Dunham voted for the resolution. Director William E. Willett opposed it and Chairman Harley Hise, who was present, disqualified himself. Director Henry A. Mulligan was absent. Texmass still had not met the condition for the loan at the time the Subcommittee took it up for study.

Hearings Held

At the first hearing April 13, the foregoing statement of finding was offered to Comptroller General Lindsay Warren. He told the Subcommittee the loan was "illegal." He said there was doubt the RFC ever would be repaid.

But James L. Dougherty, RFC general counsel, said the loan was, on the contrary, "perfectly legal." Chairman Harley Hise, of the RFC Board of Directors, said that group also believed "the loan is legal and that they are committed to make it." He also explained that he had disqualified himself in the voting because his cousin was the wife of one of the Texmass directors.

On April 22, Director Gunderson also gave support to the loan.

A Texmass prospectus, filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission, was presented to the Subcommittee. It stated that "investors should realize that the company's securities...are highly speculative, that they have no present value and that any future value thereof is very remote and dependent upon development of substantial additional oil and gas reserves."

On April 27, John H. Murrell, a geologist and petroleum engineer of Dallas, Tex., testified that the undeveloped oil reserves on the Texmass properties were not sufficient to secure the repayment of the RFC loan. He said it was more than "they could step out and sell the properties for, in my opinion."

Committee's "Interim" Report

Making it clear that it was seeking to stave off disbursement of the still-pending loan funds, the RFC Subcommittee went to work immediately on a report on RFC's role in the Texmass case. On May 19, the report was submitted to the Senate, stating that the loan was not in the public interest and was nothing but a "bail out" for the company's creditors. But the report was too late. On May 17, the RFC had begun to disburse the Texmass loan.

The Subcommittee's report also criticized the RFC directors as "remiss" in their duty both in failing to avail themselves of the full facts within the control of the SEC and in failing to give weight to those facts; said the RFC had not established that a loan to Texmass was "not otherwise available on reasonable terms"; and said the RFC had not shown the loan was properly secured as to assure repayment.

LUSTRON SURVEY

The Lustron Corp., of Columbus, Ohio, a firm formed to manufacture prefabricated enameled steel houses, obtained its first RFC loan on June 30, 1947, and subsequent amounts through September, 1949, which totalled $37.5 million. The company's own paid-in capital investment was $1.7 million.

Unable to repay the huge sum to the RFC, the company made proposals in 1949 for reorganizing and refinancing the loans, but none was acceptable to the RFC, which decided to foreclose.

Lustron officials, as soon as the 81st Congress' second session began, appealed to the Senate Banking and Currency Committee to do something. The Committee asked the RFC to withhold foreclosure until the firm's officials had had time to present their case, and the RFC agreed. Sens. Ralph E. Flanders (R Vt.) and John J. Sparkman (D Ala.), members of the Committee, thereupon made public Jan. 9 a letter in which Carl J. Strandlund, president of Lustron, said his company could start earning a profit in May, 1950, provided the RFC didn't foreclose on the company's assets.

The matter was referred by the full Committee to the RFC Subcommittee, but after a three-hour meeting Jan. 16, Chairman Fulbright (D Ark.) said the foreclosure was "up to the RFC." But the Subcommittee indicated it wanted to probe the Lustron case further.

In the meanwhile, the RFC had rejected all Lustron proposals for reorganization, and on March 1 went to court with its foreclosure action. Leo Goodman, director of CIO's national housing committee, voiced the charge that the RFC was "out to kill" the prefabricated housing industry, but the Senate Banking and Currency Committee, to which Goodman appealed, refused to interfere in the foreclosure action.

Hearings On Lustron

The RFC Subcommittee made it clear from the beginning that it disliked the Lustron loan. Instead of investigating the loan proper, however, it chose the transportation dealings and transactions that had gone on between Lustron and Commercial Home Equipment Corp., a Delaware-incorporated tractor and trailer firm organized for the specific purpose of transporting the prefabs from factory to home site.

Public hearings were held June 26-30. Those testifying included officials and employees of the Commercial Home Equipment Corp., Lustron and RFC.

RFC officials testified that there was evidence of "fraudulent" practices between Lustron and Commercial Home, and that the former was paying the latter concern for commodities never produced. It was brought out that Lustron paid for tractors it never received from Commercial Home. This was admitted by Lustron President Strandlund during his testimony.

However, an RFC Director told the Senators that so far as he knew, contracts between Lustron and Commercial Home had never been closly scrutinized by RFC.

Hearings were concluded after a Commercial Home representative denied that his firm had overbilled Lustron.

"Interim" Report on Lustron

On Aug. 11, the RFC Subcommittee submitted its interim report on the Lustron case to the Senate. Its conclusions were:

1. The RFC was "ineffectual" in its supervision of the transportation phase of the Lustron operation.

2. RFC officials in charge of the Lustron loan "exhibited inability to detect irregularities and an indifference to unbusiness - like procedure in dealings connected with the transportation contract."

3. Officials of Lustron and RFC were aware that a director of Lustron was also a stockholder and director of Commerical Home, and that he "actively conducted negotiations . . . with respect to the transportation dealings between the two corporations."

4. An exception to the "inefficiency" displayed by officials and employees of the RFC was "the activity of the Investigation Division of RFC." This division "displayed diligence and effectiveness in its thorough exploration of these transactions and thereby uncovered what are claimed to be excessive and irregular payments of more than $500,000 made to Commerical Home."

OTHER RFC LOANS

Both before and after the Lustron and Texmass hearings, the RFC Subcommittee looked into the agency's lending policies generally, and held hearings on a number of loans made under them.

The first of these involved a loan to the Ribbonwriter Corporation of America, of Dania, Fla. After a few hours of hearings, Subcommittee Chairman Fulbright said these facts had been established:

1. One of the company's directors, Wiley L. Moore Sr., was worth $5 million or more and was a long-standing friend of the RFC examiner who recommended the loan.

2. A vice - president of the company, Walter R. Clark, sheriff of Broward County, Fla., was believed by the manager of the RFC office in Jacksonville, Fla., to be a friend of President Truman and "in the money."

3. That Clark, who was removed from his office in 1942 by the then Gov. Spessard L. Holland (now Senator) on Broward County residents' complaints of gambling but retained his seat when the Florida senate did not concur, was called to testify before the Senate Crime Investigating Committee when it was in Miami.

Appraising practices of the RFC were scrutinized when the Subcommittee turned June 13 to the case of the Novelty Plant and Pottery Co., of Eastland, Texas, Fulbright said the company got a $48,000 RFC loan in 1947 and the RFC accepted the company's property, privately appraised at $98,000 as collateral. Two years later, when the loan was in default, an appraisal by an RFC agent showed the total value for the same assets to be only $4,514. Fulbright criticized this as an "example of an overly optimistic appraisal by an appraiser in the employ of the company."

On June 15, the Subcommittee turned to a loan of $18,500,000 to Carthage Hydro - Col, Inc. of New York City, and questioning of C. V. Dodds, manager of the RFC's Loan Office, brought out that the president of the company was Guy Gabrielson, chairman of the Republican National Committee. The loan was to help to pay for the building of a synthetic gasoline plant and pipeline at Brownsville, Tex. Fulbright criticized it as a case of the RFC assisting in financing "a new venture speculative in character." But Homer E. Capehart (R Ind.) remarked that those who preach free enterprise should practice what they preach and he didn't care what the name was.

Reno Hotel Loan

On July 3, RFC officials appeared before the Subcommittee to defend a big loan that was made by the agency to a Reno hotel despite an adverse recommendation by a review committee.

The loan was for $1,300,000 to the Mapes Hotel, of Reno, Nev., whose main income was reported to be derived from its gambling casino. Sen. Fulbright asserted the RFC loan was used chiefly to "bail out" the private banks which had originally lent the Mapes funds for constructing the hotel in 1946. He said the main operators of the hotel included Lou Wertheimer, whose brother, Mert, operated a competitive casino in Reno's rival Riverside Hotel.

RFC Chairman Harley Hise, RFC Director Harvey Gunderson and H. W. Robertson, RFC Washington examiner, were questioned closely, with Hise and Robertson defending the loan as a sound one. Hise said it had been granted on a three-to-two vote of the RFC Board of Directors over the objections of the agency's Washington Review Committee. Questioned by Fulbright as to whether the loan served the public interest, Hise said it did so by providing greater hotel accommodations for, among others, Reno's many divorcee residents.

A critical eye was turned July 5 on a $1,200,000 RFC loan made to the Hayward Woolen Co., of East Douglas, Mass. after a Massachusetts Congressman (unidentified at the hearings) persuaded all members of that state's delegation to intervene with the RFC on the company's behalf. Fulbright called this loan also a "bail out" for the firm's creditors. But John Hagerty, former manager of the RFC's Boston office, who then held the position of special assistant to the RFC Board of Directors, insisted that no improper pressure was exerted.

Another loan, this one to the Cooper Drug Co., of Georgetown, Tex., was described July 5 as "a mistake" by RFC Chairman Harley Hise. The loan was for $26,900, the greatest portion of which went to pay creditors of the firm's owner. Chairman Fulbright said "apparently this man took money from his business to build a home... when his creditors grew impatient over delays in payment of their bills he was able to turn to the RFC and get money with which to quiet them. This loan clearly 'bailed out' the creditors."

By way of contrast, Fulbright pointed to the $1,050,000 which the RFC had advanced to the Hayward-Schuster Woolen Mills, Inc.. In that case, he said, $350,000 was used to clear up existing bank indebtedness and the balance was left for operating capital. That loan was being kept up to date and the company was making a good showing, he said.

Waltham Watch Loan

On July 20 and 21, hearings were held on the $4 million RFC loan to the Waltham Watch Co., which in February, 1950, had closed its doors and surrendered its assets to the RFC as collateral.

The Subcommittee's Chairman Fulbright (D Ark.) said special attention was given the Waltham loan for two reasons: 1. The employment by Waltham of John J. Hagerty as president and general manager at a $30,000-a-year salary after he had, in his capacity as manager of the RFC Boston office, recommended approval of the loan; 2. The Subcommittee's impression that the loan "bailed out" New England banks to which Waltham owed $4.5 million. The company, on account of bad business, initiated bankruptcy proceedings in December, 1948. The RFC loans were made after that.

Hagerty testified in his defense. He said the RFC loan had not been made until Waltham had been completely reorganized and was out of the hands of the bankruptcy court. RFC directors Gunderson, Willett and Dunham also testified in Hagerty's favor.

SURVEY ECHOES

On Aug. 9, President Truman dropped RFC Chairman Harley Hise and Director Harvey Gunderson from the agency. Henry A. Mulligan, another director, had resigned earlier in the year. Appointed to take their places were: C. Edward Rowe, of Boston, Mass., W. Elmer Harber, of Oklahoma, and Walter E. Cosgriff, of Salt Lake City, Utah. Later in the year, the President designated Harber chairman of the agency.

On Oct. 2, Sen. Fulbright (D Ark.) chairman of the RFC Subcommittee, said his group would begin an inquiry into the four per cent interest rate charged on government loans to private business. He said he believed the rate often did not cover the actual cost of making the loan. No date was set for the study, however.

On Nov. 9, a program of retrenchment was announced, aimed at placing the RFC on a self-sustaining basis by the end of fiscal 1951. As a major step in achieving its objective, the agency said the interest rate on business loans would be increased to five per cent from the then-current four per cent. Also the two per cent interest it had been charging on loans in which it participated with banks was set at a flat two per cent, instead of the graded 1 to 1 1/2 per cent previously in effect. The RFC also said it would tap another new source of revenue by setting a fixed charge of $10 on loan applications up to $10,000 and of 1/8 to 1 per cent of the amount applied for an application above $10,000, with a maximum fee of $2,500. Previously, the RFC had processed loans without charge.

McCarthy Booklet

In connection with the RFC and Congress, Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy (R Wis.) admitted June 15, 1950, that he had received $10,000 for preparing a promotion booklet for the Lustron Corp., which was seeking to step up sales of its prefabricated houses. He said payment was made under a contract signed Nov. 12, 1948, and which McCarthy said was then still in force, for him to "keep the book up to date."

At the Lustron hearings, which were held subsequent to the McCarthy statement, Lustron President Carl Strandlund testified that the McCarthy booklet was a 97-page one, that it was "very excellent . . . housing propaganda . . . and the program which we sold, 35 cents on the booklet and 25 cents on an illustrated booklet which followed it, the recovery was $46,000." He then denied McCarthy had "been interested in Lustron." He said the Wisconsin Senator "has never interceded in Lustron, has never had anything that he has done to influence any particular thing for me, and our relations are quite at arm's length."

On April 20, Chairman Fulbright (D Ark.), of the RFC Subcommittee, released for publication a letter he had received from Jesse Jones, Texas publisher and former RFC chairman, that he favored "a decent burial, lock, stock and barrel" for the agency.

Monopoly Hearings

SUMMARY

The House Monopoly Subcommittee —a unit of the Judiciary Committee— in 1950 moved from the general to the particular in its study of monopoly power in the national economy. Having made in 1949 an exploratory review of monopoly generally (CQ Almanac, Vol. V, p. 745 ff.), the Subcommittee in 1950 made specific investigative forays into the steel and newsprint industries. Plans were also made for a similar look at the aluminum industry, but this was later called off on the grounds that it was unnecessary.

At the outset of the year, Emanuel Celler (D N. Y.), chairman of the Monopoly Subcommittee as well as chairman of the full Judiciary Committee, announced that his group would investigate monopolistic aspects of six industries. Steel and newsprint were two of these.

The others, which at the end of the year were still unscrutinized by the Subcommittee, were: E. I. du Pont de Nemours, the Delaware chemical and industrial firm; Lever Brothers, an American firm owned by Unilever of Great Britain and the Netherlands; Schubert Enterprises, controllers of numerous legitimate theatres; and the distilling industry.

While three bills to remedy so-called defects in the anti-trust laws had been introduced and acted upon under sponsorship of the Subcommittee, no report on the monopoly hearings themselves had been issued. (For story of the anti-trust bills, see page 661) But the investigations produced many reactions.

The members of the Subcommittee which made the pair of studies were: Reps. Celler, Francis E. Walter (D Pa.), Winfield K. Denton (D Ind.), J. Frank Wilson (D Tex.), Earl C. Michener (R Mich.), Kenneth B. Keating (R N. Y.), William M. McCulloch (R Ohio), Joseph R. Bryson (D S. C.), Thomas J. Lane (D Mass) and Edwin E. Willis (D La.).

STEEL HEARINGS

Chairman Celler (D N.Y.) opened the steel hearings April 17. They lasted three weeks. At the outset, Celler promised a "stem to stern" investigation focused on the possible need of government regulation. He elaborated: "The issue to be faced is whether in numerous key industries firms are of such size as to interfere significantly with competitive forces. In the steel industry one firm controls about one-third of the ingot capacity of the country...The steel industry is basic to the economic life and military security of the nation. The Subcommittee wants to find out whether the major policy decisions of the industry are arrived at competitively or whether they are determined by a few people in a few companies."

Oscar Chapman, Secretary of the Interior, was the lead-off witness. He depicted dwindling ore sources as the foremost problem facing the steel industry, adding that of parallel importance was the problem of maintaining competition. He told the Subcommittee five companies controlled the bulk of Lake Superior iron ore reserves and three-fifths of the nation's steel producing capacities.

James Boyd, director of the U. S. Bureau of Mines figured the gap between iron ore and production requirements would be 3,400,000 tons by 1959 "even though it is assumed that all foreign sources are accessible." Both Chapman and Boyd said they thought government financial assistance might be necessary to open up new supply sources but neither went into detail on the kind of required help.

Dr. George Stigler, of Columbia University, said he thought the best way to increase competitive forces in the steel industry was to dissolve U. S. Steel "and probably also Bethlehem and Republic" into a considerable number of independent companies.

James M. Mead, a Federal Trade Commissioner, said April 18 the FTC was watching the steel industry on three fronts for signs of what he called "substantial lessening of competition." These fronts: 1. The expansion of principal basic steel producers into the field of fabricated and finished goods. 2. Ownership and control of iron ore. 3. Continuing post-war shortage of basic steel supplies.

First Industry Witnesses

Frank Smith, independent brown ore producer from Cartersville, Ga., charged "big steel" companies with entering "an arrangement" with Republic Steel Corp. to force southern producers to sell only to Republic. Kenneth B. Keating (R N.Y.) interposed the charge that Republic made preclusive contracts with southern producers in which Republic was insured the entire ore output but could refuse to buy at its option.

Following Smith on the stand, Republic President Charles M. White demanded to know, "What's wrong with it?" But he denied flatly any arrangement with the U S. Steel Corp., or any other company governing exclusive ore purchasing. and vigorously defended Republic's right to tie up output with individual producers.

White warned the Subcommittee to "proceed with caution" in its "tampering with bigness." He declared the "high standard of living in this country has developed from the fact we are a mass production country. Mass production is big business . . . When you hurt big business you hurt every little business and every man, woman, and child in this country."

Cartel Charge Raised

The steel firms were accused April 24 by James S. Martin, former chief of the decartelization branch of the American Military Government of "covertly" engaging in a plan to re-establish an international steel cartel controlling world markets in the same way they were controlled before World War II. Martin presented documents to support contentions that:

1. The "big three" of the American steel industry — United States Steel, Bethlehem and Republic — through the medium of the Steel Export Association of America, joined the cartel in 1938 to divide the steel market, fix prices and limit competition.

2. Cartel agreements were being quietly resumed by 1947 with American steel men sitting in on "off-the-record meetings in Brussels supposedly as observers."

3. The cartel group sought to suppress development of the steel industry in areas which American policy wanted developed under the Marshall Plan and the President's Point Four program of economic assistance.

4. Before World War II, most of the American independents had been whipped into line so that the cartel controlled about 90 per cent of American steel production.

Donald C. Cook, Securities and Exchange Commissioner, April 25 testified that lack of equity financing and heavy capital requirements virtually prohibited new corporate additions to the steel industry. He said he didn't know of "any investment banking company which would be willing to undertake the financing of a new company." The answer to the need for greater steel capacity, he said, cannot be found in the organization of new steel companies.

"Big Steel" Replies

A bitter attack on "powerful" groups in government, which he said seek to dismember American business, was made April 26 by Benjamin F. Fairless, president of the U. S. Steel Corp. He testified for three days. Flanked at the Subcommittee's witness table by Irving S. Olds, chairman of the board of the corporation, General Counsel Nathan Miller, and other corporation officials, Fairless declared all American industry was on trial "because it has served the public too well— because it has pleased too many customers and has built the greatest industrial nation on the face of the earth."

Committee Counsel Edward H. Levi quizzed Fairless, at the end of his prepared statement, on the relative size of U. S. Steel. Is not U. S. Steel's capacity greater than all the mills of all other countries combined? inquired Levi. "Yes," snapped Fairless, "and I think that's the reason why we are the greatest nation on earth."

Fairless said it was "a matter of record" that when U. S. Steel was formed in 1901 it produced 66 per cent of all the steel made in America, but in 1950 produced only 33 per cent. Since 1935, he continued, the corporation increased its ingot capacity by about 1,400,000 tons but U. S. Steel's competitors grew 14 times faster.

Clashes Develop

The steel industrialist's appearances before the Subcommittee were frequently marked by clashes between him and his interrogators. One such collision occurred April 27, when Celler was questioning Fairless with regard to the Isthmian Steamship Co., which U. S. Steel owned.

Fairless said it was an "asset" to U. S. Steel, that it turned in a profit to U. S. Steel stockholders and provided transportation for steel products.

"I take it that other than the profit advantage, then, Isthmian does not add to the efficiency of your operations," Celler said. "Why don't you get rid of your steamship company?"

"Why should we?" snapped Fairless. "Because your company's getting too big," Celler retorted.

Celler then added that he thought U. S. Steel should get rid of some of its subsidiaries and that this could be done without affecting the efficiency of the corporation.

Fairless disputed contentions, previously submitted to the Subcommittee by Interior Secretary Chapman and others, that the nation's iron ore reserves, the raw material of steel making, were nearly exhausted. Fairless said supplies of low-grade usable ores, alone, were adequate to last more than 100 years. Moreover, he derided charges that U. S. Steel "controlled" the bulk of domestic ore supplies although it owns 51 per cent of the high grade mesabi ore in Minnesota. His firm he told the Subcommittee, will sell ore to anyone who wants it, including competitors.

At his final appearance April 28, Fairless was joined by General Counsel Miller in delivering a blistering rebuttal to allegations, previously heard by the Subcommittee, that U. S. Steel participated in prewar international steel cartel agreements, and was, even then, exploring possibilities of a renewed division of the world's steel markets.

Compliments Exchanged

Compliments were exchanged between Celler and Fairless at the conclusion of the latter's testimony. But Celler later made this statement with regard to U. S. Steel: "I don't think all the charges have been met. There is undebatable evidence of price fixing, and there is evidence that U. S. Steel has the best portion of better grade iron ore to the disadvantage of other producers. My view (is not shaken) that there was evidence — not conclusive — to indicate some participation by U. S. Steel in the international steel cartel."

Ernest T. Weir, chairman of the board of the National Steel Corp., followed Fairless to the witness stand. May 4 he told the Subcommittee that the steel industry has no monopolistic tendencies and those who make such charges only "itch to bring the industry under government control."

A warning against any tampering with "big" business was delivered to the Subcommittee May 9 by two "small" businessmen — Edwin Hodge Jr., president of the Pittsburgh Forging Co., and Robert S. Waters, of Johnstown, Pa., president of the National Radiator Co. Both were listed as fabricators of semi-finished steel produced by steel companies. They asserted: "We believe the destruction of the big companies would imperil our national safety as well as our national economy, and at the same time would not help the little fellow."

But a third witness, Samuel Wasserman, president of the American Pipe and Equipment Co., of Baltimore, Md., told the Subcommittee he was being forced out of business by refusal of steel companies to sell him pipe because he cut prices below figures quoted by his competitors. Wasserman said his pipe supply from the Mercer Tube Co., of Sharon, Pa., has been cut off by order of Republic Steel Corp., and no other steel company would accept his orders until August, 1949, when he was able to get only about one-fourth of what he needed from the Wheatland Tube Co. He said he "may have to go out of business this year."

Final witnesses were Professors George J. Stigler, of Columbia University, who had made an earlier appearance, and George W. Stocking, Vanderbilt University. Reviewing testimony during the steel hearing, Stocking concluded that the U. S. Steel Corp. could not justify its size from the standpoint of either efficiency or economic operation. Stigler said the question, "on the issue of bigness", was whether the largest steel companies produced more efficiently and led in the search for new resources and methods.

The Subcommittee concluded its steel study May 11, and set mid-June for the start of hearings on its next subject of investigation — the newsprint industry.

NEWSPRINT HEARINGS

Begun June 19, hearings on the newsprint industry concerned two main issues — the short supply of the product and the industry's marketing practices. The study was continued for a month, during which one 10-day recess was held. Chairman Celler (D N.Y.) made it plain at the outset that he believed Canada was attempting to control the flow of newsprint. He promised that the investigation would delve into national and international fields in a search for possible cartel arrangements which might be stifling competition.

The first witness, John H. Perry, publisher of a chain of Florida newspapers and head of the Western Newspaper Union, a small daily news and feature service, charged that the Canadian companies, which supply 80 per cent of the newsprint consumed here had collusive agreements. He said the United States is zoned, and territories parcelled out to designated companies, that prices are uniform and newspapers are compelled to sign contracts for 10 to 12 years ahead in order to insure a steady supply of newsprint.

Cranston Williams, general manager of the American Newspaper Publishers Association, another witness, said that, while newsprint consumption was rising far more rapidly than had been expected and the supply situation was "tight", there was not a single instance on record of a paper being compelled to suspend publication because of inability to get newsprint.

Subcommittee Chairman Celler (D N.Y.) then questioned: "Don't you know that the number of daily and weekly papers suspending publication last year was 200?"

"That may be so," the witness responded, "but no one of them suspended because they were unable to get newsprint." He said rising production costs, in which newsprint was only one factor, was responsible for the many collapses.

William F. Canfield, secretary-manager of the Inland Daily Press Association, however, endorsed Williams testimony, saying he considered the tight supply situation to be the fault of both publishers and newsprint producers who failed accurately to forecast the expansion in consumption over the last few years.

The cause of the newsprint shortage, according to Sen. Henry C. Dworshak (R Idaho) who testified June 20, was the booming demand for reading matter while the possible cure was the building of a bigger United States newsprint industry. He suggested a tariff on Canadian newsprint.

On June 21, Erwin D. Canham, editor of the Christian Science Monitor, told the Subcommittee he had "a deep conviction" that further controls over newsprint were not needed, but he said greater supplies would be a "net contribution" to peace.

Canadian Practices Defended

Rep. Clarence J. Brown (R Ohio), himself a publisher, and Charles E. Moreau, representative of the National Editorial Association, defended Canadian newsprint manufacturers against previously-voiced accusations that they kept prices artifically high and production down. Brown cautioned the Subcommittee against disturbing relations with Canada and said he thought "the solution is to develop the paper industry in the south."

Donald C. Cook, Securities and Exchange Commissioner, June 23 advised the Subcommittee to look into the "interrelation" of competing paper companies whose directors serve on boards of non-newsprint companies on which other newsprint companies also have directors. He described the International Paper Co., ranked as the world's largest paper and newsprint producer, as "the center of an elaborate network" of such interrelating directorates. But he told the group he had no knowledge that such "Common directorates" were resulting in any violations of the anti-trust laws.

On June 27, August B. Meyer, of New York, president of the Bowater Paper Company, said in his 30 years experience in the paper industry he had known of no agreements fixing prices and allocating newsprint.

John H. Hinman, president of the International Paper Co., denied June 28 the newsprint situation endangered the American free press. He said U. S. newspapers "never had so much newsprint as now — and at prices lower than prices prevailing in the 1920's when costs were generally lower."

Hearings Recessed

The newsprint hearings were recessed June 30 until July 10, to allow Subcommittee members to take advantage of the July 4th Congressional holiday. Chairman Celler (D N.Y.) said, as he brought the hearings to a temporary halt, that he had invited publishers of a variety of newspapers, from large metropolitan dailies to small country weeklies, to offer testimony when the hearings were resumed.

As a matter of fact, he asserted, he had invited them once before when the hearings were opened, but the response had been "bad." He added it might be "necessary to subpoena a number of (them)."

Despite the "invitations," and the Celler subpoena threat, no publishers, other than those who already had testified up to this point, showed up at the hearings.

Hearings Resumed

Returning to its investigation July 10, the Subcommittee heard Southeast Alaska described as the possible source of a "major expansion" of pulp and paper production. This was held out as a possibility by Ira J. Mason, chief of the U. S. Forest Service's division of timber management. He estimated the area's potential production capacity at one million tons a year, a fifth of all the American newsprint needs.

The Subcommittee on July 11 was told by Albin R. Caspar, vice-president of the Great Northern Paper Co., of Maine that low profits were mainly responsible for decreased newsprint production in the United States. Other factors, he said, were limited supplies of pulpwood, seasonal changes in available water power, and uncertainty on the part of manufacturers over the extent of the current paper shortage.

Chairman Celler concluded the day's hearing July 11 with the announcement that two Canadian newsprint companies — which he termed subsidiaries of the International Paper Co., of New York — had refused information to the Subcommittee.

The possibility of this country's obtaining up to 500,000 tons of newsprint annually by reprocessing yesterday's newspapers was described July 13 by F. B. Oldman, president of the American Industrial Co., of Buffalo, N. Y. He said a group of publishers already had set up a plant at Gary, Ind., to use a process developed by his firm for removing ink from used newsprint and reconverting the fiber into clean, fresh paper.

J. D. Zellerbach, president of the Crown Zellerbach Corp., of San Francisco, on July 18 told the Subcommittee that until newsprint prices were raised there could be no appreciable increase in the industry's manufacturing capacity. He said he thought the newsprint price was too low to attract the risk capital necessary to bring new capacity to the industry. Zellerbach also blamed the government for preventing the expansion of paper manufacture. His own corporation, he said, was warned directly by the Federal Trade Commission against any further expansion as it would tend to monopoly on the west coast. He added that the Celler group's investigation of the industry — which he described as the fifth since the war — was a "further deterrent" to any expansion of production.

Final witness was Sam B. Eubanks, exceutive vice-president of the American Newspaper Guild, who called for government assistance to increase U. S. newsprint production to at least double its present capacity.

Eubanks asserted: 1. The newsprint "monopoly" was creating a newspaper monopoly through enforced mergers and suspensions stemming from the "excessive cost burden" of newsprint prices; 2. The livelihood and economic security of newspaper workers were "again in jeopardy as they were in the depression years of the early thirties, although the newspaper industry is enjoying the greatest volume of business it has ever known"; 3. Newsprint producers were making "not less than $75 million a year, over and above a generous return on their investment measured by ordinary yardsticks of business profits."

Newprint Echoes

The hearings were officially concluded July 20, but continued to produce statements on the newsprint industry.

In October, two Canadian newsprint concerns, the Powell River Paper Co. Ltd. and the Abitibi Power & Paper Co., raised their prices 10 per cent. Congressman Celler (D N. Y.), who was in Los Angeles, Calif., at the time, promptly declared there on Oct. 15 that he would reopen the Monopoly Subcommittee's hearings if American companies followed the lead of the Canadian firms and also boosted their newsprint prices.

Following the statement up when he returned to Washington, Celler Oct. 24 wrote Attorney General J. Howard McGrath that actions of American newsprint manufacturers in the wake of price increases by Canadians "warrant close scrutiny" by anti-trust officials. If past experience was a guide, Celler said, the Canadian boosts "presage a general price increase."

At the year's end, however, no further action by Celler's group had been taken or was in prospect, either on the subject of newsprint or its earlier investigative topic, steel.

ALUMINUM HEARINGS

Chairman Celler (D N. Y.) Oct. 9 issued a statement announcing hearings by the Monoply Subcommittee beginning Nov. 1 on the production of aluminum for stockpiling. He said in the statement that "reports have indicated failure of the Munitions Board to stockpile aluminum, the supply of which is already considerably short of demand." He added his Subcommittee would seek to determine aluminum requirements for defense.

However, on Oct. 23, Celler decided to cancel the aluminum hearings he had scheduled two weeks before. "Important developments affecting availability of aluminum," he said, "and progress in drafting a national policy" had made hearings unnecessary.

Problems of Small Businesses

President Truman May 5 asked Congress to enact a five-point program to make it easier to finance small businesses. He noted in a special message to the legislators that while the nation's business system was "thriving" it was not growing fast enough to absorb the 1 million new workers who join the labor force each year. He asked Congress to:

1. Authorize federal insurance on a self-sustaining basis of bank loans up to $25,000 and repayable within five years.

2. Charter "national investment companies" whose major purpose would be to provide equity capital and long-term loans for "efficiently managed businesses unable to finance themselves on reasonable terms through the organized securities markets."

3. Broaden lending powers of Reconstruction Finance Corp. to ensure its authority to meet legitimate credit requirements of businesses unable to obtain private financing.

4. Authorize the Commerce Secretary to set up a clearing house to collect, disseminate and exchange scientific engineering and managerial information as a means of helping smaller businesses which can't afford high-priced research staffs to become more efficient. (See page 656.)

5. Give Commerce Secretary responsibility for all these programs as well as move the RFC under his supervision.

House and Senate bills were introduced May 19 to carry out Truman's proposals for aid to small business.

The Senate bill (S 3625) was introduced by Scott W. Lucas (D Ill.) Burnet R. Maybank (D S.C.), Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.) and John J. Sparkman (D Ala.). In the House Brent Spence (D Ky.) introduced HR 8565 and Wright Patman (D Tex.) sponsored the identical bill HR 8566.

Maybank said his Banking and Currency Committee would begin hearings on the bill in about a week. Spence said his House Banking and Currency Committee would take up the measure "soon".

None of the measures received formal action by the Committees howver.

SENATE

Government officials testified June 19 and 20 before the Senate Select Committee on Small Business on what can be done to assist small business in government procurement. Paul H. Griffith, Assistant Secretary of Defense testified that the primary purpose of military procurement was to get required materials efficiently and at the best possible price. However he said small businessmen were furnished competitive bid information and other helpful data through a munitions board small business office.

Meanwhile, the Administration-prompted S 3625 had been referred to the Senate Banking and Currency Committee, which opened hearings June 22. The first witness, Secretary of Commerce Charles Sawyer, urged approval of the Administration measure as a "practical approach to the major problems" of small business.

At the outset of the hearings, however, Sen. A. Willis Robertson ((D Va.) protested that the heavy schedule of business remaining for Congress made it obvious that the program could not be enacted at this session.

On June 23, Harvey J. Gunderson, a director of the Reconstruction Finance Corp., opposed the bill's provision that would relax RFC collateral requirements on loans to small business. The RFC already was helping small business considerably under existing law, he testified. Dr. James Boyd, director of the Bureau of Mines, said the bill would be of assistance in overcoming present difficulties of the metal mining industry.

However, hearings were halted shortly afterwards, and S 3625 was never reported.

Senate Small Business Committee Chairman John J. Sparkman (D Ala.), Sept. 20, directed the Committee staff to start an investigation of the soft drink bottling industry.

Sparkman said that reports had come to his attention that "competitive practices in the soft drink field are working unfair hardships on small bottlers to the degree that their chances of survival are being seriously endangered." He said the Committee staff would make a preliminary investigation of the industry.

In December, Sparkman's group issued a seven-page "primer" on how to sell to the government. Small businessmen were told that it isn't necessary to spend for entertainment and were advised to avoid "five per centers" who claim to have influence.

The pamphlet contained the "who, what, when and how" answers to questions that are often asked the Committee and described in simple terms how to make a bid, how to learn why a bid was rejected and where to get other necessary information.

A Subcommittee of Sens. William Benton (D Conn.), chairman, Andrew F. Schoeppel (R Kan.) and Russell B. Long (D La.) was named Dec. 4 by Sen. Ernest W. McFarland (D Ariz.), acting chairman of the Select Committee, to study manpower problems as they affect small business. The same Senators were named Dec. 1 to investigate charges by 57 independent fuel oil companies that four large oil companies have launched a price war in the Chicago area in an attempt to freeze them out.

HOUSE

Reconstituted in 1949 (see CQ Almanac, Vol. V, page 34), the House Select Committee on Small Business continued during the 82nd Congress to look into various phases of that subject. The group issued various reports and held various hearings.

Some organizations claiming to represent the small businessman may often be simply a front "for other purposes", the Committee charged Feb. 21 in a "case study report" on four organizations, all of which were said to solicit money contributions from "big business". The four named by the Committee were: the National Small Business Men's Association, of Chicago and Akron, Ohio; the Small Business Economic Foundation, Chicago; the National Tax Equality Association, Chicago; and the National Associated Businessmen, of Chicago.

The Committee stated that, in its opinion, none of the four organizations "is a bona fide small business organization." It said also that there were interlocking functions and officers among the groups.

In the case of the first two organizations, the Committee reported:

1. The president and founder of both was Dewitt Emery, head of the Monroe Letterhead Corp., of Akron, Ohio.

2. The main theme stressed by the two was of an "anti - labor union variety."

3. Positive support of strictly business issues by these two organizations "seems never to conflict with the side taken by big business."

Later the Select Small Business Committee began an inquiry June 26 of anti - trust law enforcement. Outlining the purposes of the inquiry, Committee Chairman Wright Patman (D Tex.) said efforts would be directed to finding out the extent to which small business suffers from: 1. refusal of large producers controlling major sources of supply to sell freely; 2. the exercise of geographical and quantity price discriminations by large, monopolistic enterprises; and 3. the policy of large concerns who buy up small and medium - sized competitors seeking to get established by competition on price and quality. (See page 661 for story of anti-trust legislation.)

The following day, the Committee released a report based on a subcommittee's 14-month study of oil imports, in which the Subcommittee contended the level of foreign petroleum coming into this country is too high. Chairman Patman made the findings public and in a statement said: "If permitted to continue beyond reasonable levels, national security, national economy and the virility of the domestic producing industry will be seriously impaired." While a recommendation for oil import restrictions was pointedly not recommended, the Subcommittee said importing companies should make voluntary agreements, under federal supervision to keep the oil imports at a "reasonable level."

In October, the group was advised in a report of staff activities that the National Production Authority appeared "to give fair and equitable representation to small producers" in selecting the Steel Products Advisory Committee.

However, the report also described the outlook for steel's small business as grim. It said that "the complexion of the committee indicates that independent fabricators and warehousers must look forward to an even greater 'austerity' program than they have had in the past few months . . . Cuts in quotas or outright refusal of orders by normal and regular sources of supply are brought to the committee's attention almost daily".

OTHER ASPECTS

The problems of small businesses and their relation to the national economy threaded other Congressional hearings and actions in 1950. There were small business aspects to major pieces of legislation such as the Defense Production Act (see page 624) and the Marshall Plan extension measure (see page 204). Small business and its role also drew considerable attention at hearings by various Congressional committees looking into the question of monopoly (see page 649) and anti-trust legislation.

In addition, the Senate in 1950 set up a special Committee on Small Business of its own. (See page 406.) There were also these developments:

The Senate May 26 approved a resolution (S Res 272) granting $10,000 to the newly created Small Business Committee. The resolution also gave the Committee power to employ a staff, take sworn testimony and hold hearings.

The Senate Banking Committee approved March 7 a bill (S 2943) to set up a small business coordinator in the Executive Branch. The coordinator would see to it that small businesses got their fair share of government contracts.

Steel Price Rise Row

SUMMARY

The United States Steel Corp., which owns about 35 per cent of the national steel ingot capacity, announced Dec. 15, 1949, a price boost which the firm said amounted to an average increase of $3.82 a ton for most steel products. This increase was virtually duplicated almost at once by seven other big steel companies which together with U. S. Steel have about 80 per cent of the country's ingot capacity.

An immediate response came from Capitol Hill, where Sen. Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.), chairman of the Joint Committee on the Economic Report, announced Dec. 18 his group would call corporation officials to explain the increases at a public hearing as soon as the second session began in January. O'Mahoney made it plain that he considered the price boosts unwarranted. He said they amounted "to levying an increased tax upon our whole system," and that "U. S. Steel is doing more harm to the American economic system than all the crackpots ever did."

O'Mahoney said other Committee members were in general agreement with him that there should be an investigation. It was set for Jan. 24.

In March, two months later, the Committee issued a report that aroused intra-Committee controversy. Formally branding the steel price boosts "untimely" and "unwarranted", the report flatly declared that the increases had been dictated to the industry by one firm, U. S. Steel. The Republican minority, led by Sen. Robert A. Taft (R Ohio), said this wasn't so, that the increase appeared to have been justified in view of costs for employees' 1949 pension grants and was something proper and to be expected in the framework of a free economy.

The real intra-Committee controversy had occurred two weeks earlier, however. Committee members had "leaked" the majority opinion to the press. Sen. Taft had then publicly taken the Committee to task for "smearing the steel industry." Later, in his weekly Ohio newspaper column, he said the Committee should have investigated the question of whether competition existed in the steel industry. He said he thought the evidence showed it did.

O'Mahoney promptly issued a statement asserting that in his opinion the evidence showed "there is no competition within the steel industry." He explained that "in the light of the publication of what purports to be minority views" in advance of the date set for official publication of the report, he had thought it advisable to issue a counter-statement.

But by the time the report was officially published, the Committee row had died down, and no more was heard during the remainder of the year about steel prices.

BACKGROUND

The 1950 steel inquiry was the second for the O'Mahoney group, which was established to receive and study the President's twice-a-year economic reports required of the Chief Executive by the 1946 Employment Act.

Steel industry leaders were called to account by the Committee in March, 1948, after the industry had raised its quotation on semi-finished steel by $5 a ton. Congressional protests were made after the industry made another general increase of $11 a ton in July, 1949, but no inquiry was called.

HEARINGS

The Committee on the Joint Economic Report, as scheduled, opened its hearings on the December steel price boost on Jan. 24, with officials of each of the concerned eight steel companies on the witness list, as well as representatives of other businesses, labor and the public.

Issued in advance of the hearings was a Committee report, entitled "Basic Data Relating to Steel Prices" written by staff experts. It said net income of 50 steel companies increased from $264,525,016 in 1946 to $542,085,610 in 1949 and that the rate of return on steel investments "was higher in 1948 than in any year since 1917." It emphasized that the December price boost meant higher prices all along the line, pointing out that this was already reflected in the higher cost of farm implements.

Chairman O'Mahoney made the opening statement as the hearings got under way. He summed up the inquiry in this way:

"We are dealing . . . with one of the most important problems in the modern world, namely, the manner in which large industrial corporations exercise the vast powers which have been accumulated by them under modern industrial organization . . .

"We now live in a world of industrial centralism in which the control of both production and price of most of the industrial commodities that the people need is settled by the decisions of a few private managers in private conferences . . . This is particularly true of the steel industry. . . Accordingly it is of great importance to the whole country when, following the leadership of United States Steel, each of these companies announces what amounts to a uniform change of price."

Fairless First Witness

Benjamin F. Fairless, president of the U. S. Steel Corp., was the first witness. He pointed his finger at the United Steelworkers of America (CIO) as the cause of it all when he stated that the steel industry could not pay out of the then - current profits the new employee pensions granted after the steelworkers' 1949 strike.

Both Fairless and Enders M. Voorhees, chairman of the U. S. Steel finance committee, rejected the possibility of cutting dividends to stockholders as a means of meeting the employee pension and insurance costs. "We did not believe in December, nor do we believe now," Fairless testified, "that there is any good reason why we should sacrifice the income of stockholders and the interests of the business as a whole in order to provide additional benefits for our employees."

Fairless encountered some strong opposition from O'Mahoney when he declared that "in my opinion U. S. Steel has not made a fair return on its sales or investment at any time during the last 20 years."

O'Mahoney cited figures indicating that the corporation had made almost six per cent on its investment "including the years of the depression" and that, he said, seemed to be a very good return. Fairless said he didn't accept such a figure as accurate. The executive later explained that he saw no reason why the new price of steel should lead to "harmful effects" on the price levels in other industries.

Spokesmen for other steel companies went on record Jan. 25 to state that steel prices, instead of being too high, were too low to assure the future health of the industry. The witnesses were: Hiland G. Batcheller, chairman of the board, Allegheny Ludlum Steel Corp., Admiral Ben Moreell, president, Jones - Laughlin Steel Corp., Ernest T. Weir, chairman, National Steel Corp.

Their case was succinctly expressed by Ben Moreell, who said steel prices have lagged so far behind other prices that in effect the industry is wasting its assests by not earning enough to replace them. He said his company has paid since its inception in 1923 an annual return averaging 1.6 per cent on the average asset value of the stock. He said goverments bonds paid 2.5 per cent.

Labor's Testimony

This testimony was sharply challenged Jan. 26 by Otis Brubaker, research director, United Steelworkers of America, who said Moreell quoted the percentage J. & L. paid in dividends to its shareholders. The company profits on its investment, Brubaker asserted, were 8.9 per cent. What's more, he declared, the December prices increase was "well above $4 a ton, or four per cent, as claimed by the industry."

Brubaker also assailed Fairless' assertion that the steel price increase was justified on the ground it was necessary to compensate for costs of union - won pensions to employees. The Steelworkers, Brubaker declared, were "tired of being a public whipping boy for this industry, especially when we are charged with responsibility for things we have not done." He called the price boosts "unwarranted" and "indefensible", and said the steel industry had a "public be damned" attitude. Despite industry claims, averred Brubaker, steelmaking costs have declined sharply since mid-1948. He said the industry was unwilling even to try to absorb costs as long as the market permitted an increase in price.

Donald Montgomery, director of the Washington office of the United Auto Workers — CIO, charged Jan. 26 that the steel price increase was a "flagrant use of arbitrary power" and that it "put to an end talk of further (auto) price reductions."

A. B. Homer, president, Bethlehem Steel Corp., was a witness Jan. 27 in the closing round of the hearings. He said his company had to increase prices to keep Bethlehem's "existing facilities up to high standards of effective and efficient production."

"Isn't that a method of obtaining capital at no cost to the company?" asked Rep. Wright Patman (D Tex.). The executive replied, "That's a new one on me."

"Why couldn't you have maintained a competitive price below U. S. Steel and got some of U. S. Steel's business?" O'Mahoney asked Homer.

Homer replied that there was not a competitive position as far as prices was concerned. He admitted that his company had had a record net income of $99 million in 1949, but he emphasized that even so his company had failed by $15 million to realize from sales revenue the average amount needed to maintain high productive standards.

Final Witness

Dr. Alfred C. Neal, vice - president and director of research for the Federal Reserve Bank of Boston, also was questioned Jan. 27 with regard to the proposed erection of a New England steel mill to provide reasonably-priced steel in that area. At the outset of the hearings, a group of Congressmen from New England had publicly invited the Committee to examine witnesses on the subject. This group included Sens. Brien McMahon (D Conn.), Styles Bridges (R N.H.), Henry Cabot Lodge Jr. (R Mass.) and Rep. Chase Going Woodhouse (D Conn.).

Neal told the Committee that the cost of steel used by New England industries "threatens the economic growth" of that area. He recommended construction of a steel mill there and said it would cost approximately $240 million.

O'Mahoney and Patman indicated they thought the big steel interests were the culprits. Patman described it as a matter of blocked credit. He said the same thing had happened in the southwest where steel officials, sitting on the boards of the nation's big banks, had blocked the credit needed to establish a steel mill.

Rep. Robert F. Rich (R Pa.) interrupted the discussion to exclaim: "Oh, bughouse! There is something wrong with New England if it can't raise the money."

REPORT

On March 7, the Joint Economic Report Committee was said by some members to have approved findings that the December increase in the price of steel had been untimely and unwarranted. The report was not released for publication and was not scheduled to be for several weeks but it was "said" to contain the following recommendations:

1. That the steel industry be required to make reports to the Federal Trade Commission on a current basis with respect to prices, production costs and profits.

2. That companies be required to give 30-day notice before raising their prices. An "appropriate" government agency meanwhile would conduct public hearings to determine the need and effect of the proposed increases.

3. That a study be undertaken to determine whether the strategic and economic importance of the steel industry placed it in the category of a public utility, subject to regulation by the government.

4. That another study seek to find methods of increasing competition in the industry.

G O P Reaction

Republicans let it be known that they had dissented sharply. With Sen. Robert A. Taft (R Ohio) serving as spokesman, they disclosed they had refused to sign the report and promised to file a minority report expressing their views.

Taft charged the report "looks in the direction of (government) price fixing" and "smears the steel industry." Sen. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.) retorted: "Talk about government price fixing is an excellent smoke screen to cover up what amounts to private price fixing." He declared the evidence gathered by the Committee showed "the whole steel industry acted uniformly on price increases. . . in the footsteps of United States Steel."

Sen. Taft March 15 opened the controversy anew when in his weekly Ohio newspaper column he criticized the still-unpublished majority decision and accused the Committee of tackling the wrong subject. He said it should have investigated the question of whether competition existed in the steel industry.

In his opinion, Taft wrote, the evidence showed "there is no collusion between the companies and that competition is reasonably active." He explained that the "doubtful question" in his mind was whether "the position of the U. S. Steel Corp. is so predominant that it has power to fix prices and at least modify the usual effect of competition."

If such a condition did exist, Taft said, Congress should consider legislation limiting the proportion of any industry which can be controlled by one company, and "whether it is possible to make the Sherman Act more definite and effective."

Learning in advance of publication of the column's contents, Chairman O'Mahoney flatly asserted March 14 that a majority of his group felt there was no competition within the steel industry.

He explained that "in the light of the publication of what purports to be minority views" in advance of the date set for release of both reports, he thought it advisable to issue a statement striking out at "any contention or pseudo-contention that competition exists in the steel industry."

Earlier, William H. Colvin, president of Crucible Steel Co., in a letter to O'Mahoney charged the Committee's report was "about as slanted as a thing could be."

When it was officially released March 27, the Committee's report was anti-climactic. It simply bore out what had previously been "leaked" by group members. Eight Democrats on the Committee signed the report. Six Republicans refused to, and issued their own minority views.

Minority Views

In their minority report, the Republicans hotly contended that the recommendations of the majority looked toward government price fixing and a controlled economy. With respect to the proposal for a 30-day warning of any proposed hike, the minority said: "The only actual power recommended is the postponement of price increases for 30 days, but it seems clear that any action by a steel company contrary to the recommendations of a federal board would bring an immediate demand for price-fixing powers."

A study to determine whether the steel industry had practically become a public utility was also condemned by the minority, which declared: "The clear implication is that it should be subjected to price fixing just as public utilities are subjected to rate fixing."

Transportation Survey

Congress looked into transportation problems in 1950 but produced no legislation that received formal action.

In the House, the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee held a day of hearings Aug. 29 on a bill (HR 9480) to bring the government to the aid of those pinched by a railroad boxcar shortage But at the end of the session, the measure remained on the Committee's shelf.

Across the capitol the Transportation Subcommittee of the Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee held four months of hearings on transportation problems in general. They began April 4 and were closed July 28. At the end of the year, however, the Subcommittee was still working on a report for the Senate.

House

The measure (HR 9480) before the House Commerce Committee, Aug. 29 was introduced by Rep. Harris Ellsworth (R Ore.). It proposed the establishment of the Railroad Car Reserve Corporation with a capital of $250 million and authority to purchase railroad boxcars to supplement the car supply in times of shortage or emergency need.

Those testifying were Rep. Ellsworth, Col. J. M. Johnson, Chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and Walter M W. Splawn, an ICC Commissioner. All urged the government to come to the help of the railroads, as it already had done in the case of the merchant marine, the airlines, the natural gas industry, water carriers and others.

HR 9480 never received any further Committee action.

Senate

Typical of the topics studied during the course of the hearings by the Senate Transportation Subcommittee was the freight car shortage. Witnesses told the Subcommittee that the railroads had nowhere near enough boxcars for another war emergency and no prospect of getting them for years.

ICC Chairman Johnson, who ran the Office of Defense Transportation during the war, said he did not believe the government should subsidize any railroad's car requirements, but that if should "stockpile" from 150,000 to 300,000 cars by buying them and leasing or renting them to the roads. He testified that he knew "we can do the war job if we have two million good cars." If the railroads could provide only 1,700,000 cars, Johnson stated, the government should stockpile 300,000 or whatever number was necessary to supply the difference up to two million.

Johnson attributed the slackened car orders to lack of money and higher costs. He said the cost of a single car had risen about $700 since the start of World War II. Both private car builders and railroad shops, he added, during April, 1950, delivered only 971 new freight cars, the lowest monthly delivery in more than 11 years.

In another phase of the hearings, the airlines, the waterways and other means of transportation were blamed by witnesses for ailments of the railroad industry and its rising rate requirements. Federal subsidizing of, and "special preferential treatment" to, truck lines, inland waterway transport and airlines all operated to the railroads' disadvantage said C. E. Huntley, secretary - treasurer of the American Short Line Railroad Association.

Huntley wanted changes in the forms of aid given to the "competing transportation agencies." Spokesmen for the U. S. Chamber of Commerce and the American Railway Car Institute echoed Huntley's views.

J. Carter Fort, vice president of the Association of American Railroads, on the other hand, came out flatly against all forms of government subsidies to transportation. Fort stressed that railroad earnings were dropping constantly because, he contended, traffic was being diverted to other forms of transport subsidized by the government. The aid Fort complained of, he said, included provision and maintenance of navigable waterways, airports, airways and highways.

But Robert Ramspeck, executive vice president of the Air Transport Association, came heatedly to the defense of the airlines. He insisted that only improved service and lower rates on the railroads' passenger lines were needed to cure the industry's ailments. He denied it was airline competition that had hurt the railroads' traffic business.

Chester C. Thompson, spokesman for inland waterways barge and towing interests, likewise came to the defense of waterway transportation. He accused the railroads of making "selective" freight rate cuts to eliminate competitive forms of transportation. Spokesmen for the trucking industry also defended their business and outlined their problems.

Technical Information

S 868 -- P.L. 776

The House in 1950 endorsed legislation (S 868) providing for the dissemination of technological, scientific and engineering information to American business and industry. Its action followed passage of the measure by the Senate in 1949. (For details, see CQ Almanac, Vol. V, page 723.)

The legislation authorized the Department of Commerce to act as a clearing house for such data. Before approving the bill on Aug. 28, 1950, the House amended certain administrative portions of the measure. The Senate accepted these changes on Aug. 31, and the bill was sent to the President. He signed it into law Sept. 9.

Bank Holding Companies

S 2318

In 1950, the Senate Banking and Currency Subcommittee considering legislation (S 2318) to clamp federal controls on bank holding companies — concerns which control several banks and sometimes other businesses. The group heard bankers urge strict curbs to prevent "chain store banking" in the United States. The basic idea of the bill was endorsed March 3 by spokesmen for the American Bankers Association, the National Association of Supervisors of State Banks and the Independent Bankers Association of the 12th Federal Reserve District.

Chairman Burnet R. Maybank (D S.C.) of the Committee said March 7 that officials of the Transamerica Corp. wanted to register opposition to the bill. Transamerica is the holding company for the Bank of America, headed by L. M. Giannini. Sen. Harry P. Cain (R Wash.) had demanded March 3 that officials of the West Coast bank holding company be called to testify.

The Transamerica Corp. appeared March 16, and testified that the legislation would weaken banks and deprive depositors of protection. It would subject bank holding companies to Federal Reserve Board regulations.

W. L. Andrews, vice president of Transamerica, attacked what he called the "discriminatory" measure particularly because it would require Transamerica to give up holdings in non - banking enterprises in the far west. He said this would compel his concern to get rid of "assets that now furnish more than 90 per cent of the financial support it has available for its banks."

Preston Delano, Comptroller of the Currency, appeared before the Committee March 21 and offered many technical criticisms of the Federal Reserve Board's version of the proposed act. Sen. Charles W. Tobey (R N.H.) accused Delano of "damning this bill with faint praise."

Samuel B. Stewart, Jr., attorney for Transamerica Corp. took to the witness stand March 21 to attack the Federal Reserve Board and criticize T. Leonard Townsend, solicitor for the Board.

Hearings on the legislation closed March 23. But the Committee voted 4-1 on May 10 to reopen them, even though A. Willis Robertson (D Va.) sponsor of S 2318 asserted that the motion for more hearings would kill the bill as no time for discussoin could be found during the rest of the session. Robertson's assertion was borne out. No further action was taken on the bill.

Tin Smelting

S 3666 -- P.L. 723

SUMMARY

Significant during the Far Eastern crisis was legislation (S 3666) enacted into law Aug. 14, 1950, which extended the government's legal authority to own and operate a tin - smelting plant at Texas City, Tex. The legislation became Public Law 723, and was approved by President Truman Aug. 21.

The U. S., a have - not tin nation, constructed the Texas City plant when the Japanese in World War II conquered Southeast Asia, possessor of 70 per cent of the world's tin supply. Operation of the plant was put in the hands of the Tin Processing Corp., a Dutch-owned concern. In renewing government control of the plant, Congress held that the national tin supply again was "vulnerable" because of Communist activity and threats of activity in Asia.

SENATE

S 3666 was reported in the Senate June 23, from the Armed Services Committee. As reported it extended unchanged for five years the government's authority to maintain a domestic tin - smelting industry "in the interest of national security."

The existing law (due to expire June 30, 1951) which gave the government the power S 3666 sought to extend, authorized the Reconstruction Finance Corporation: 1. to buy, sell and transport tin, tin ore and tin concentrates; 2. to maintain and operate, by lease or otherwise, the government-owned tin smelter at Texas City; 3. to finance research in tin smelting and processing; and 4. to do whatever might be necessary to accomplish these purposes.

The Committee's report, written before the Korean war broke out, said Communist-inspired activities in Southeast Asia "constitute a self-evident threat to the free world's supply of tin . . . The international situation which originally made construction of the Texas City tin smelter essential is virtually duplicated again today."

The measure was brought up and passed in the Senate June 30, by voice vote. It was approved, apparently without objection. There was no debate.

HOUSE

Before any action on S 3666 had been taken in the Senate, the House Banking and Currency Committee June 16 reported HR 8569 which was virtually identical to the Senate measure with one exception. Where the Senate's was simply an extension bill, the House measure had a clause directing the government to take notice of "the public interest in the maintenance of domestic smelting of Western Hemisphere tin ores and concentrates by American private enterprise."

The Committee had held a hearing on the bill June 12. Spokesmen for the RFC urged adoption of the five-year extension bill, saying the previous method of year-to-year extension was detrimental to defense. H. H. Buckman, representing the Vulcan Detinning Co., of Sewaren, N. J., testified that his privately-developed plant was having difficulties attributable to government tin ore purchase policies.

The House July 25 adopted the Senate-passed S 3666 by voice vote, after first passing its own bill and then substituting that one's text for the Senate measure's language.

Before final passage, however, objection was raised by John P. Saylor (R Pa.). He pointed out that the smelter was operated by a Dutch-owned firm. He said it should be turned over to American private enterprise, or, if that were impossible, be operated by the United States Bureau of Mines. He offered an amendment to that effect, but it was defeated by voice vote. Wesley A. D'Ewart (R Mont.) then proposed an amendment to require the Dutch firm to make available to American processors all patents and knowledge it gained through use of the plant. This amendment also was defeated.

CONFERENCE

The Senate refused to accede to the House changes in S 3666, and so the measure was sent to a joint House-

Senate conference for harmonization. The conferees reached agreement Aug. 11. The House Committee's amendment was thrown out. Both the House and Senate adopted the conference report Aug. 14.

Unemployment Study

S Res 274

The Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee in 1950 made a study into "increasing unemployment" and its causes in several industries. The Committee's report and recommendations were filed July 14. By that time, however, the impact of the Korean war on the nation's economy was beginning to be felt, and unemployment no longer was critical. The recommendations, to re - examine oil tariffs, were not acted on.

Sen. Matthew M. Neely (D W Va.) introduced S Res 274 May 12 calling for an investigation of the "causes of increasing unemployment in the coal, oil, silver, zinc, lead and railroad industries."

The Labor Committee approved the resolution May 15 and the Senate passed it unanimously the same day on voice vote. Neely told the Senate "a flood of foreign oil" was injuring the domestic oil industry, closing coal mines and throwing railroad workers out of their jobs.

Acting Majority Leader Francis J. Myers (D Pa.) urged approval of the resolution and Owen Brewster (R Maine) and Kenneth S. Wherry (R Neb.), usually critics of Administration trade policies, applauded the proposal.

Neely, Elbert Thomas (D Utah) and Robert A. Taft (R Ohio) were appointed to the investigating committee. Hearings started May 22.

Coal Industry Testimony

Early testimony, from coal miners, coal operators and oil men emphasized the conviction of these groups that only a sharp curb on foreign oil imports could save the jobs of thousands of American workers. Neely said that he expected higher oil tariffs.

Vice President Thomas Kennedy, of the United Mine Workers, May 22, charged that of the 642,000 barrels of oil imported daily in 1949, 204,000 were barrels of residual oil "dumped on the market at ridiculously low prices and in direct competition with the coal industry." D. T. Buckley, National Coal Association spokesman, said the equivalent of a year's work for 50,000 bituminous coal miners was being destroyed by foreign oil at the current rate of importation. He advocated a $1.05-a-barrel excise tax on imported residual oil. On May 23, H. B. Fell, executive vice president of the Independent Petroleum Association of America, joined L. Ebersole Gaines, president of the New River Company, of Mount Hope, W. Va., a bituminous coal producer, in urging steps to brake oil imports, either through an increase in tariffs or a quota system.

Taft commented that the higher tariff advocates faced a "strenuous" job to get the Administration to reverse its reciprocal trade policy. However, Sen. Harley M. Kilgore (D W.Va.) testified May 24 in support of increasing the tariff on imported oil. R. M. Davis, a West Virginia coal executive, echoed Kilgore's tariff testimony, asserting that unless something was done to curb foreign oil imports 200,000 coal miners may lose their jobs within a year to 18 months.

Oil importers continued to be blamed for acute unemployment in a number of American industries — primarily oil and coal. But Neely denied May 1 that the oil importers have been refused permission to testify before the group.

Oil Importers Reply

The only rebuttal from the importers, meanwhile, came from New York, where Eugene Holman, president of the Standard Oil Co. (New Jersey), May 24 said oil imports played only a minor part in the coal industry's loss of markets in recent years. He said the major fields in which coal lost business to oil competition were in diesel fuel and home heating, fields which are supplied not from imports but from domestic crude oil.

The attack on oil imports was unaffected, however. Sen. Edward Martin (R Pa.) appeared before the Neely Subcommittee to favor a proposal that crude oil imports be taxed $1.05 a barrel, instead of the existing 10 1/2 cents. He blamed the importation of cheap-grade foreign oil for the closing of several soft coal mines in Pennsylvania.

Others who supported Martin May 29 in advocating the tax were Walter A. Thurmond, secretary of the Southern Coal Producers Association, George J. Burger, vice president of the National Federation of Independent Business, and William I. Powell, of the American Mining Congress.

On May 31, the Subcommittee heard Stark Fox, of the California Oil Producers Agency, testify that unemployment in the California oil industry had mounted to 17.3 per cent since August, 1948. He blamed the situation on "excessive imports of oil into the Atlantic seaboard."

Conflicting Views Heard

Conflicting testimony was offered the Senate Labor Subcommittee June 9 on the effects of oil imports on the coal market.

Charles L. Harding, director of the Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., testified that unemployment among miners was primarily due to factors other than the importation of foreign oil. He listed these factors as including mounting costs of coal production, need for allocating supplies, technological advances and the efficiency and convenience of oil as a fuel.

On the other hand, John D. Battle, executive vice president of the National Coal Association, told the Subcommittee that layoffs in the coal fields were due to "the flood of foreign oil being dumped on our shores." He said there was no doubt the oil imports were not only causing widespread unemployment but were also disrupting the national fuel economy and threatening the security and welfare of the nation.

On June 9, J. E. Warren, president of the Independent Petroleum Association of America, told the Subcommittee that the North American market was being used as a new market for oil imports, particularly by Venezuelan producers who were "satiating" the European market. He thought a high tariff on oil imports would be the solution. V. E. Smith, vice president of the Independent Refiners Association of America, suggested imports be reduced to a point where they "supplement" but not "supplant" domestic production. S H. Willison of the American Mining Congress said the closing of the last mercury mine in the country was an example of what foreign imports could do to wreck domestic production.

Others who testified June 8-9 on the cutbacks in coal production and employment included: John Crichton, superintendent of the Pennsylvania mines for the Johnstown Coal and Coke company; Jesse V. Sullivan, secretary of the West Virginia Coal Association; Adolph Pacifico president of United Mine Worker of America, district six in Ohio; John P. Busarello, president of UMW district five in Pennsylvania; John T. Jones, president of UMW district 16 in Maryland and West Virginia; Cecil J. Urbaniak, president of district 13 in northern West Virginia; William Blizzard, president of district 17 in West Virginia and Kentucky.

Farm Position

S. M. McAshan, president of the Texas Cotton Association, wrote the Subcommittee that his group opposed restrictions on oil imports because such action would "impair the ability of foreign buyers to take and pay for U. S. cotton." On this point Neely commented: "I suppose the more than 10,000 idle coal miners and their hungry children are no concern" to the TCA members.

The Subcommittee concluded public hearings June 16 with contradictory testimony from the Governor of Oklahoma and a major oil company official.

Governor Roy J. Turner of Oklahoma attributed a decline in jobs and general business in his state to petroleum imports. Unless the general trend were halted, he warned: "The oil industry will — within a very short time — become decidedly unhealthy from the standpoint of employment, potential production and discovery of new reserves."

Opposing the move to curb oil imports, M. J. Rathbone, director of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, testified that foreign oil was responsible for "only a small part of any unemployment in the coal industry". He added that imports did not appear to have harmed the domestic oil industry.

Recommendations

The Subcommittee recommended to the full Labor Committee that "a substantial increase" in the tariff on imported oil should be imposed. However, the full committee, in its report July 14 recommended only "a re-examination of tariff rates on imported oil." The report added that "Congressional action should await the recommendation of the Tariff Commission in this matter."

Synthetic Fuels

H R 8975 -- P.L. 812

Secretary of the Interior Oscar Chapman June 23 asked Congress to authorize $25 million more for synthetic fuel research. In a letter to Vice - President Alben Barkley, Chapman asked that the government's existing research program be extended until April 5, 1955, even though it still had several more years to run. He said the program should be assured another five years.

The program, in which the Interior Department has been engaged for several years, involves research and experimentation with processes for extracting liquid fuel from coal, oil, shale and gas.

In response, the House Public Lands Committee decided July 13 to authorize an additional $27.6 million for the synthetic liquid fuels program, and to extend the program until 1955. The approved bill earmarked $2.6 million of the total for an experimental plant to be built at Morgantown, W. Va., by the Bureau of Mines, which was experimenting there with coal synthetics.

The House passed the bill on July 19 without objection. Brief debate preceded the action, as Reps. J. Hardin Peterson (D Fla.) and Harley O. Staggers (D W. Va.) spoke of the importance of stimulating federal research into fuel production from oil, shale, lignite coal, and other materials. Rep. Wesley D'Ewart (R Mont.) declared "This is an important bill in connection with the war effort."

The Senate Interior and Public Lands Committee favorably endorsed HR 8975 on Aug. 22, and the Senate took up the measure on Sept. 13. It passed it without controversy. As cleared to the President, the bill brought total authorization for synthetic liquid fuels research since the program started in 1944 to $83 million. An attempt by Sen. Edward Martin (R Pa.) to strike out provision for $2.6 million to build an experiment station at Morgantown, W. Va., was defeated by standing vote.

The President signed the bill into law on Sept. 22.

S Res 239

While HR 8975 was drawing Congressional action, the Senate Interior and Insular Affairs Committee on July 13 opened a study of several resolutions calling for a survey of the coal industry. It heard its first witness, Secretary of the Interior Oscar Chapman, urge that the study be expanded to cover all forms of fuel. "A single fuel, such as coal or oil or natural gas cannot be studied independently with real success," Chapman said. Senators Hubert Humphrey (D Minn.) and Wayne Morse (R Ore.) agreed that all fuels should be brought within the scope of the survey.

One of the resolutions before the Senate group came from Sen. Francis J. Myers (D Pa.) (S Res 239) and asked Congress to formulate a national fuel policy. A second one, sponsored by Chairman Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.), would have implemented President Truman's request for a national commission to study the coal industry. Mr. Truman's request was made in March during the coal strike. (See page 275.)

Ultimately, the Senate Committee focussed exclusively on Myers' S Res 239, and reported it favorably to the Senate. The upper chamber passed the resolution on Aug. 15, and approved $20,000 to finance the Interior group's investigation of available fuel supplies. The results of this study, plus a national fuel policy the Committee was charged to formulate, were to be set before the Senate in 1951.

Central Arizona Project

S 75

SUMMARY

A bill (S 75) to authorize construction of the Central Arizona (Bridge Canyon) reclamation project was approved by the Senate Feb. 21. But in the House of Representatives the $196 million authorization measure was indefinitely shelved by the House Public Lands Committee on Dec. 15

This project was one of the most controversial in the West as it involved a quarter - century water dispute between Arizona on the one hand and California and Nevada on the other, over the nation's "last waterhole" — the Colorado river. It was not acted on by the Senate in the first session. (CQ Almanac Vol. V, p. 766.)

Provisions

As approved by the Senate Interior Committee in 1949, S 75 provided for the construction of seven dams and reservoirs, power lines and other works on the Colorado River in central and northwestern Arizona and New Mexico. The Committee amended it to permit a suit to be brought within six months from the date of enactment of the legislation to determine judicially the rights of the parties, and to permit the United States government to be made a party to the suit. This amendment was inserted to placate to some extent California's opposition to the project.

The projects included in the Committee - approved bill and the costs of each were:

Coconio Dam and Reservoir	$ 7,487,000
Bridge Canyon Dam and Reservoir	191,939,000
Bridge Canyon power plant	73,419,000
Havasu pumping plants	25,973,000
Granite Reef aqueduct	131,716,000
McDowell pumping plant and canal	3,346,000
McDowell Dam and Reservoir	16,326,000
McDowell power plant	1,012,000
Horseshoe Dam (enlargement) and Reservoir	7,078,000
Horseshoe power plant	2,628,000
Salt-Gila aqueduct	34,585,000
Buttes Dam and Reservoir	29,037,000
Buttes power plant	1,159,000
Charleston Dam and Reservoir	9,270,000
Tucson aqueduct	6,401,000
Safford Valley improvements	4,090,000
Hooker Dam and Reservoir	15,484,000
Irrigation distribution system	54,086,000
Drainage system for salinity control	9,973,000
Power transmission system	83,771,000
Total	708,780,000

All proposed projects were in Arizona except Hooker dam and reservoir which were to be located in New Mexico.

SENATE

The Senate took up the bill Feb. 21, 1950. California Senators said the issue was one of expense. Said Sheridan Downey, (D Calif.), "The true issue here (is) whether the taxpayers of the United States and the power user should be burdened down with a cost of thousands of dollars an acre for the benefit of 225,000 acres of rather inferior crop land."

Countering Ernest W. McFarland (D Ariz.) said the project was needed to save Arizona from "disaster." "It has been estimated," he said, "that up to 250,000 American citizens will be made displaced persons if this project is not authorized."

William Knowland (R Calif.) moved to send the measure back to the Interior Committee. The motion was rejected on roll call vote 30-56. Several minor amendments were adopted on voice vote. Several riders offered by Knowland and Downey were rejected on roll-call votes. The Senate then approved the bill on a 55-28 roll-cal vote. (Votes p. 724.)

AMENDMENTS AGREED TO

Pat McCarran (D Nev.) — Bar construction of government steam plants for production of electrical power at the project. Voice vote.

McFarland — Limit elevation of Bridge Canyon Dam to not more than 1877 feet. Voice.

McFarland — Remove silt control, river regulation, recreation and general salinity control from list of services to be nonreimbursable to the government. Voice.

McFarland — Require Interior Secretary to attempt to buy Indian tribal lands to be used in the project rather than simply designating them for use. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Knowland - Downey — Require project to await construction of silt - control reservoir in upper Colorado. Roll call vote 29-56.

Knowland - Downey — Provide that repayment for costs for power shall come within 50 years and for irrigation within 60 years. Roll call 31-54.

Knowland - Downey — Give consent to joinder of the United States as party in any suit over the water between lower Colorado states; and to postpone construction until Supreme Court has ruled on ownership of the water. Roll call 27-58.

Knowland - Downey — Require that certain revenues from irrigation services be anticipated before project starts. Roll call 28-58.

Knowland - Downey — Provide certain repayment dates for costs of services. Roll call 31-54.

HOUSE

The Senate - passed bill was sent to the House Public Lands Committee. Hearings opened April 19 before a subcommittee. Rep. John R. Murdock (D Ariz.) supported the bill but submitted one amendment limiting total authorization to $596 million, and agreed to another by Rep. Fred L. Crawford (R Mich.) deleting tentative authorization of a tunnel to carry water to the project from proposed Bridge Canyon Dam. Rep. Clair Engle (D Calif.), leader of the opposition, said he had no changes to propose. Meanwhile, the Budget Bureau advised the Subcommittee that the President would not express approval of the project until the water rights controversy between California and Arizona was settled.

Cost of $596 Million

The Subcommittee on Irrigation and Reclamation tentatively approved the bill Aug. 31, after setting the overall cost at $596 million. Repayment of construction costs were to be made within 75 years. Authorization for a 78 - mile tunnel — not part of the original construction estimate — was cut from the bill.

The full House Public Lands Committee on Dec. 13 adopted by a 15-9 vote an amendment which would have forbidden the construction of the Bridge Canyon Dam on the Colorado River until Congress had authorized reservoirs to prevent damage to the dam or its power generating plant from silt deposits.

Measure Tabled

But two days later, on Dec. 15, the Committee decided to shelve the measure altogether. It tabled S 75, which received no further action.

Vermejo Reclamation

S 3517 -- P.L. 848

Congress in 1950 passed into law a bill (S 3517) authorizing the Bureau of Reclamation of the Interior Department to construct, operate and maintain the so-called Vermejo Reclamation Project in Colfax County, N. M., to irrigate some 7,200 acres of semi-arid land. However work was not to start until the President had approved a State report on how the project would be used once completed.

Passage of S 3517 in 1950 contrasted with the fate of a similar bill (HR 3788) which Congress sent the President in 1949 but which he vetoed. (See CQ Almanac, Vol. V, page 768.) The following year, however, S 3517 was passed by the Senate on Sept. 13, by the House on Sept. 14 and signed by the President on Sept. 27.

Anti-Trust Bills

HR 2734—P.L. 899

A Senate Judiciary Subcommittee April 15 disclosed its approval of a bill (HR 2734) strengthing the Clayton anti-trust law governing corporate mergers, but with a proviso exempting companies regulated by various federal bodies. Herbert R. O'Conor (D Md.), Subcommittee chairman, announced the action on the measure which was approved by the House Aug. 15, 1949. (See CQ Almanac, p. 715.)

Subject to exceptions specified in the amendment, the bill would forbid acquisition by any corporation of the assets of another corporation where the effect would be to lessen competition substantially or tend to create a monopoly, (the Clayton Act prohibits a corporation from acquiring the stock of another in furtherance of monoply) but the law is bypassed by corporations that take over physical assets to accomplish the same ends.

The Subcommittee's amendment would exempt from application of the law corporations subject to jurisdiction of the Civil Aeronautics Administration, the Federal Communications, Federal Power, Interstate Commerce and Securities and Exchange Commissions and the Agriculture Dept.

On May 22, the full Senate Judiciary Committee approved HR 2734 without change. The vote was 7 to 2. The Committee issued its report on the bill June 2. Minority views, urging defeat of the legislation, were submitted by Forrest C. Donnell (R Mo.).

On Dec. 13, the Senate passed the bill with the amendment, to which the House agreed Dec. 14. This cleared the measure to the White House, where President Truman signed it Dec. 29.

President Truman signed the bill into law on Dec. 29. At a White House ceremony attended by Senators and Representatives who had a hand in framing it, and members of the Federal Trade Commission which was to enforce it, Mr. Truman said:

"I have signed this Act with great satisfaction, because it closes a gap in our anti-monopoly laws that has existed since 1914.

"Much of the concentration of economic power which has taken place since 1914 has been due to this gap in the law. The closing of the gap is an important step in preventing the growth of monopolies and thus assuring the survival and health of free competitive enterprise."

Asks "Vigorous Enforcement"

The President added: "I am very glad that this major piece of legislation has at last become law. I shall expect the Federal Trade Commission to be alert and vigorous in its enforcement."

On behalf of Congress, Sen. O'Mahoney declared in a letter to FTC Chairman James Mead and U. S. Attorney General Howard McGrath: "Those of us who sponsored this new law did so in the belief that the preventive remedy of the Clayton Act should be made available to supplement the punitive action of the Sherman Law."

HR 8763

The House passed July 17 a bill (HR 8763) to allow the government to recover actual damages resulting from antitrust law violations. Passage was by voice vote. The measure was to amend the Clayton Act to provide:

1. That the federal government may sue to recover actual damages to its business or property resulting from violation of the law. Private individuals already may bring suit for recovery of triple damages, but the government has no recourse to law.

2. A new six-year federal statute of limitations to govern both federal and private actions. At the present time, private triple damage actions under the antitrust laws are governed by statutory limitations of the various states.

(The Supreme Court in 1941 held that the United States was not a "person" within the meaning of the triple damage section of the antitrust laws and so could not recover for losses.)

The favorable action in the House was preceded by consideration of the bill by the Judiciary Committee, which favorably reported HR 8763 on June 30. Prior to this, hearings held May 8 and 10 before a Judiciary Subcommittee on Study of Monopoly Power produced statements on an earlier version of the bill from the Justice Department, National Association of Manufacturers, United States Chamber of Commerce, American Bar Association, and others.

The Senate did not act on HR 8763 in 1950.

HR 7827

On June 5, the House passed by a voice vote a bill (HR 7827) designed to boost from $5,000 to $50,000 the maximum fine for violation of the Sherman anti-trust law.

The bill called for the first increase in penalties since the Sherman Act was passed in 1890. At present a person found guilty of violating the Sherman Act, which prohibits conspiracies and monopolies in restraint of trade, is subject to a fine of $5,000 and/or imprisonment of one year on each count.

House passage followed Judiciary Committee approval March 23. The Monopoly Power Subcommittee of this group had endorsed the measure (originally known as HR 6679) on March 8. Hearings before the Subcommittee on Feb. 1 and 15 had brought statements from government officials, the National Federation of Independent Business, Inc., and the National Alliance of Independent Business.

On Feb. 1 Herbert A. Bergson, Justice Department antitrust chief, and James W. Cassidy, associate general counsel of Federal Trade Comission, appeared in support of the legislation. Bergson said an increase in penalties would "help make the punishment fit the crime, enhance in the public mind the gravity of the offense and act as an added deterrent to violators of the law." Cassidy said he would like to go beyond the figure suggested by the bill and suggested that fines should be a percentage of the net profit of the company during the period of violation.

HR 7827 was not acted on by the Senate, however.

Rent Control Extension

S 3181—P. L. 574

SUMMARY

Federal rent controls due to expire June 30, 1950, were given a new lease on life June 12 when the Senate voted 36 to 28 to continue them through December 31. The next day the House voted 202 to 163 to extend controls a month beyond this date, to January 31, 1951.

Both the Senate's extension bill (S 3181) and the House's companion measure (HR 8276) carried similar features permitting cities, towns or villages, by a vote of their governing bodies or by referendum, to retain controls past the cut-off dates in the extension bills. Local bodies could retain controls only through June 30, 1951, however.

The Administration had asked for a flat one-year extension, the President sending three messages to Congress on the subject. The first was his State of the Union message early in 1950. The second was an April 20 plea to the House to grant the Office of the Housing Expediter, which handled rent control, more money. In this message, the President said extension "for another year is essential to the welfare of the Nation." Mr. Truman's third message, sent Congress the following day, urged continuation of rent controls in the "public interest."

The principal difference between the House and Senate bills involved duration of rent control. The Senate favored a six-month reprieve. The House specified seven, and set its version before the Senate on June 13. The upper chamber refused to accede to the House provision, and sent both bills to a conference committee for harmonization.

The legislation that emerged set a six months' mandatory extension of federal rent controls, and preserved the "local option" features of the House and Senate bills permitting states, cities and counties to retain controls another six months if they wished, or throw them off altogether. Granting counties this latter option to decontrol their unincorporated areas was a new feature in the 1950 measure. Previously this option had been afforded to states and cities only.

The House and Senate both passed the conference report on June 21, by respective record votes of 176-145 and 40-24. President Truman signed the measure into law on June 23.

Figured In Other Bills

Congress' attention to rent control matters in 1950 was not confined solely to S 3181, however. The question of continued controls figured in several other bills. Major ones were:

1. Urgent Deficiency Appropriation bill (HR 7207), approved in March. This was the measure which, among other grants, approved more money for the OHE, to keep it operating through June 30, 1950, when rent controls kept in force by 1949 legislation would have expired without the enactment in 1950 of S 3181. The rent control aspects of the Urgent Deficiency bill provoked considerable debate and action, in the Senate especially. (For full story, see page 110.)

2. Deficiency Appropriation bill (HR 8567) approved in June. This carried $600,000 for the OHE. Republicans in the House attacked this feature of the money bill, and unsuccessfully sought to earmark 50 per cent of the OHE sum for liquidating that agency. (For full story, see page 111.)

3. Defense Production Act (HR 9176). When this bill was being considered in August, Rep. Barratt O'Hara (D Ill.) offered an amendment to it which would have granted standby authority for full-scale rent controls during the life of that Act. The amendment was rejected on a point-of order as not germane, although the Chicago legislator had argued the entire Act "is a bill of controls" and therefore "nothing could be more germane to such a bill than control over the prices that people can charge for housing." (For full story, see page 624.)

Provisions

The measure S 3181, entitled the "Housing and Rent Act of 1950", provided for:

1. Extension through Dec. 31, 1950, of the federal rent control powers conferred on the government by the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended.

2. Extension of these same powers through June 30, 1951, if "any incorporated city, town or village . . . prior to Dec. 31, 1950" decided it wished rent control extended. The decision was to be reached "by resolution of its (the city, town or village) governing body adopted for that purpose, or by popular referendum in accordance with local law."

3. Extension of these same powers if a similar decision were reached by "any unincorporated locality in a defense - rental area" in which an incorporated town had decided to retain rent controls past Dec. 31, 1950.

4. Prompt reports to the Office of the Housing Expediter of decisions made.

5. Repeal of the entire rent control extension measure if so ordered by a Presidential proclamation or a concurrent resolution of Congress.

6. Decontrol by the OHE of housing units in "any incorporated city, town or village, or in the unincorporated area of any county upon receipt of a resolution of its governing body—(that) there no longer exists such a shortage in rental housing accommodations as to require rent control. . ." Further, if a major portion of a defense-rental area has been decontrolled under such circumstances, the OHE may "decontrol any unincorporated locality in the remainder of such area."

Votes

The Senate passed S 3181 on June 12 by a roll - call vote of 36-28. (See p. 726)

The House passed an amended version of S 3181 on June 13 by a roll-call vote of 202-163. (See p. 716)

The Senate agreed to the conference report on S 3181 on June 21 by a 40-24 record vote, and the House agreed to the conference report the same day by a 176-145 record vote. (See pp. 726 and 716).

Party Stands

The Democratic 1948 Platform declared: "Adequate housing will end the need for rent control. Until then, it must be continued."

The Republican 1948 Platform contained no statement on rent control.

BACKGROUND

Continuance of the federal rent control law for as much as a year after its scheduled expiration June 30, 1950, was listed high among Administration objectives by Senate Majority Leader

Scott W. Lucas (D Ill.) when the 81st Congress swung into action at its second session.

Lucas said Jan. 3 the extended controls would be asked to stave off "another round of wage increases, with resulting inflation."

Congress had been in session for only one day when President Truman asked it to continue rent control for a year beyond June 30. In his State of the Union speech, the President stated: "Rent control has done a great deal to prevent the housing shortage from having had worse effects during this period of postwar adjustment. Rent control is still necessary to prevent widespread hardship and sharp curtailment of the buying power of millions of consumers in metropolitan areas. I recommend, therefore, that rent control be continued for another year."

By the middle of March, 1950, however, the Office of the Housing Expediter, which had charge of controlling rent ceilings, was bailed out of impending bankruptcy only after considerable wrangling in the Congress. The OHE needed $4 million to keep going until June 30 when the rent control law would have lapsed, but many Congressmen were loath to grant the agency these emergency funds.

Ultimately, however, the Congress passed the Urgent Deficiency Act of 1950, which did keep the OHE afloat.

(Refer to page 110. Refer also to CQ Almanac, Vol. V, page 208, for mention of "assurances" given the OHE in 1949 that if it ran out of funds in 1950, it could get more.)

By April 1, 1950, the OHE had about 11 million housing units under federal rent controls. In November 1946, when rent controls (originally instituted in March, 1942) were at their peak, some 16 million dwelling units had been under controls.

The drop reflected the OHE's acceleration of decontrols, and also decontrol actions taken by states and cities under the terms of the 1949 extension law.

Shortly after Administration leaders in the House and Senate had introduced new bills to extend federal controls past June 30, 1950, President Truman spoke up again.

He reiterated his request for continued controls in an April 21 message to Congress on federal rent control extension. "I strongly advocate extension of rent control because I am convinced that the public interest requires it," he said. (After June 30, he predicted, "rent control will still be a national problem. The housing shortage will still be acute." At the same time, he pointed out in a message to the U. S. Conference of Mayors, "we must continue our present policy of granting justifiable increases in rent to the landlord.")

SENATE

Hearings

The Senate Banking and Currency Committee announced March 7 it would open hearings April 24 on a bill (S 3181) to extend rent controls for another year. The extension bill, urged by President Truman, was introduced March 3, by Senate Majority Leader Scott W. Lucas (D Ill.) and Sen. Francis J. Myers (D Pa.).

Hearings on rent control extension opened April 24 in the Senate Banking Committee. Backers of extension occupied the stand during most of the week.

First witness was Housing Expediter Tighe E. Woods. He predicted "an intolerable rise" in rents if controls are allowed to die June 30. He asked that the existing law be kept with an amendment allowing cities to recontrol themselves if they find decontrol doesn't work. Rent increases where ceilings have been removed, he said; have averaged 26% to 41% in many cities.

Gov. Bowles Views

Gov. Chester Bowles of Connecticut said removal of controls "would throw out of balance our whole price-wage structure and reopen the question of widespread wage increases."

Scott W. Donaldson, deputy assistant secretary of the Air Force, said that housing near military installations was about 275,000 units short. The biggest factor in the prevailing low rate of re-enlistments, he said, was the housing shortage.

Gov. Adlai E. Stevenson of Illinois told the committee that the "Chief Justice of the Municipal Court of Chicago which handles eviction cases, informed me. . . 'It is safe to predict that there will be mass protests and perhaps some violence' " if rent controls were lifted.

Rep. Jacob K. Javits (R. N. Y.) and Sen. William Benton (D Conn.) both asked that controls be extended a year.

Mayor Thomas B. Wright, Mansfield, Ohio, however, asked that the control law be allowed to die. He said, "I cannot be for the existing law of controls that is defeating the very purpose for which it was established." He explained: "Mansfield doesn't need controls — we need more rental properties."

Mayor A. B. Chambers, Des Moines, suggested a six-month extension. His city council, he said, agreed that "a bad rental situation might develop if controls were eliminated on June 30." But he added, "Another six months period would make available enough new units to eliminate the difficulties that otherwise might happen."

AFL's Green Testifies

William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, told the committee: "From my long experience in the labor movement, I know that a wide-spread wave of sizeable rent increases will be reflected in the demands of organized workers for higher wages."

John C. Williamson, VFW; Richard L. Hawkins, AVC; and William Boucher III, ADA, also asked another year of controls plus local recontrol privileges.

Opponents of extension had their say during the final two sessions.

Among the national organizations represented were the National Association of Real Estate Boards, National Apartment Owners Association, Property Owners Association of America, Friends of the American Constitution, and National Home and Property Owners Foundation. Persons representing local property owners groups came from Cleveland, Los Angeles, Chicago, Long Beach, Calif., Dallas, Detroit, St. Louis and Springfield, Mo.

Richard V. Hopkins, Cleveland, said, "Yes, rents will rise if controls are removed, but why shouldn't they?" He said Cleveland rents have risen 28.6 per cent above the 1935-39 level while food has gone up 101.6 per cent, clothing 83.4 per cent and wages 140.5 per cent. Douglas Dorn, San Francisco, told the Committee that controls have held up new construction.

(For additional lobby stands, see section at end of this story.)

Committee Vote

On April 28, the Senate Committee closed hearings on S 3181. Group members said there would be no final decision on the matter until the House Banking Committee had finished hearings on a compromise extension bill (HR 8276) introduced by Rep. Brent Spence (D Ky.), committee chairman, April 27. (The House group completed its action in May. The Senate Committee then voted 8-5 on June 2 to report S 3181, and did so on June 6.)

Debate

The Senate opened debate on S 3181 on June 7. An ardent foe of rent control, Harry P. Cain (R Wash.) held the floor June 7 threatening to speak against the measure "for as long as I can stand up, or for as long as is necessary." He said the bill was being pushed in the Senate for "promiscuous, political and untenable" reasons.

On June 8, the Senate temporarily laid the bill aside, but on the following day, Cain returned to the attack. Beginning at noon on June 9, he won the floor and held it for 12 hours and two minutes to denounce rent control as "an indefensible violation of property rights", forcing thousands of small property owners into "involuntary servitude." Cain said he might also filibuster against a compromise version when it comes up.

During Cain's filibuster, two roll-call votes were taken. One rejected, 13-33, William F. Knowland's (R Calif.) motion to adjourn. The second approved, 29-15, a motion by Majority Leader Scott Lucas (D Ill.) for the Senate Sergeant-at-Arms to round up Senators for a quorum, "arresting" them if necessary.

Cain's talkathon frustrated repeated attempts by Lucas to get agreement to vote on the pending measure at a specified time. Then, after the Senate had been in continuous session for more than 17 hours, Lucas acceded to Cain's demand that the first test on the bill be a vote on a recommital motion offered by Minority Leader Kenneth Wherry (R Neb.).

One o'clock on Monday, June 12, was set for the ballot, and the Senate wearily recessed June 10 at 3:43 a. m. When Senators reconvened after the weekend, they faced a second wave of last-minute debate before voting on recommittal. Senators Walter F. George (D Ga.), John McClellan (D Ark.) and others explained they would vote against returning the bill to Committee, but said they opposed the measure itself. Other opponents included Wayne Morse (R Ore.) and Clyde Hoey (D N.C.).

Maybank (D S.C.), Paul Douglas (D Ill.), and Lucas once again rounded up arguments in favor of extension. The move for recommittal was put to the test, and defeated, 25 to 44 on roll call. The 39 Democrats present voted to a man against recommittal.

Just before final passage, Sen. Matthew M. Neely (D W. Va.) offered an amendment which would have included the District of Columbia in the measure. He later withdrew it, to submit subsequently as a separate bill.

The final, approving ballot of 36-28 was then taken.

HOUSE

Hearings

The House Banking and Currency Committee opened hearings May 8 on a bill (HR 8276) to extend rent controls six months with local option for another six months.

Tighe E. Woods, Housing Expediter, repeated his Senate testimony to the House Committee May 8 and then set out to answer some arguments advanced by the anti-rent control forces. Woods said, "The charge that rent control retards new construction is without foundation. There is no rent control on new construction." Woods told the committee that in Spokane, Wash., after rents were decontrolled, new construction went up 72 per cent; while in Seattle, which is still controlled, there was an increase of 75 per cent in the same period.

Ample rental vacancies did not exist in large cities, he testified. Woods did not specifically endorse HR 8276. He said chiefly that controls were needed for at least another year.

Others testifying in favor of extended rent ceilings were John C. Pastore, governor of Rhode Island, Joseph M. Darst, mayor of St. Louis, Mo.; Eugene H. Swartz, mayor of Gary, Ind.; and James A. Hedrick, mayor of Decatur, Ill. They said that controls were necessary in their areas and asked that removal of controls be left up to the local government.

Gov. G. Mennen Williams of Michigan told the committee May 11: "I can conceive of there being disorders in cities such as Detroit" if rent ceilings are allowed to expire. The following veterans organizations went on record with the committee the same day favoring continued contols: American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars, Amvets, American Veterans Committee and Jewish War Veterans.

Representatives of the CIO and AFL wound up testimony on the measure May 17. They told committee members that rent controls should not be allowed to lapse.

Richard J. Gray, AFL, said, "The cold facts are that the removal of rent controls at the present time would have the same effect on millions of workers as a nationwide pay cut." He continued, "If rents are decontrolled on a nationwide basis, I am absolutely certain that unions all over the country will demand an increase in wages."

John Edelman and Donald Montgomery, CIO, presented a joint statement taking the same point of view. They added, "We agree that provision should be made for orderly relaxation of controls, area by area, as housing needs are met. But this adjustment process must be a flexible one — it must work both ways, so that when a local area finds that it has decontrolled too soon it may reverse that action and reinstate controls until it is proven safe to relax them for good."

Committee

The House Banking Committee approved the rent control extension bill on May 18 by a 13-4 vote. As reported from the group, the measure provided for an outright extension of federal rent control until Jan. 1, 1951. Rent controls would end automatically on that date in all communities which did not decide, by local option, to continue controls until June 30, 1951. Controls would be continued until June 30, 1951, if cities voted for continued controls before the end of the year by resolution of the governing body or by popular referendum.

Those not voting for the second extension, would automatically be decontrolled Jan. 1, 1951. Cities voting out controls could not change their mind and vote them back in. State legislatures would continue to have power to decontrol entire states.

After the bill was reported, the House Rules Committee granted it a rule, for floor debate after June 12.

Debate

The lower chamber took up its rent control measure June 13 under a rule permitting only three hours' general debate. The House moved quickly, with Majority Leader John McCormack (D Mass.), Reps. Ray J. Madden (D Ind.), and Vito Marcantonio (ALP N. Y.) the most outspoken proponents. Among those resisting the measure were Reps. Jesse Wolcott (R Mich.), Leo Allen (R Ill.), and Fred L. Crawford (R Mich.). Debate was relatively brief — a general summation on both sides of arguments similar to those expressed in the Senate.

A motion by Wolcott to recommit the bill was defeated 143 to 227 on roll call, and the House voted 202 to 163 to approve the measure itself.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Walter Judd (R Minn.) — Extend controls for seven months, through January 31, 1951, and permit local governments to retain them an additional five months. Voice.

James C. Davis (D Ga.) — Give counties privilege of ending rent controls, by resolution or by referendum conducted by county governments. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Isidore Dollinger (D N. Y.) — Grant one-year extension of federal rent controls. Voice.

Jacob Javits (R N. Y.) — Prevent Housing Expediter from taking any federal actions inconsistent with rent control laws in states which have them. Voice.

Dollinger — Permit recontrol in defense areas which have been decontrolled. Voice.

Dollinger — Repeal provision of present law designed to determine a fair net operating return for landlords' investments in their property. Voice.

Andrew Jacobs (D Ind.) — Permit landlords to appeal to courts if rent controls are considered confiscatory or precluding a fair operating income. Courts to be empowered to order higher rents. Voice.

CONFERENCE

The differing House and Senate versions of S 3181 were sent to a conference committee on June 15 for reconciliation. The conferees moved rapidly, reaching a compromise version on June 19.

They accepted the Senate's view on how long rent controls should be extended, setting the duration of extension at six months instead of the seven originally specified by the House.

But the conferees dropped an amendment which would have permitted the decontrol of Chicago apartment hotel rents.

On June 21, the conference report came up in both chambers. The House passed it on a 176-145 record vote, and the Senate approved it 40-24, on a record vote.

As sent to the White House, the approved conference report permitted counties, as well as cities and states, to remove rent controls before Dec. 31. Any local government wishing to retain them through June 30, 1951, was authorized to submit the question to a referendum. In any event, controls were not to be carried past June 30, 1951.

LAW ENACTED

President Truman signed S 3181 into Public Law 574 on June 23. He made no statement.

LOBBY STANDS

As they had in 1949 (see page 702, CQ Almanac, Vol. V), scores of organizations made their views known on the subject of extended federal rent controls. Many of the organizations sent representatives to the House or Senate hearings on the extension legislation. Others sent messages to the Committees dealing with it. Still other organizations and groups registered their stands either in their general literature or in specific material forwarded Congressmen.

Here were major organizations and groupings going on the record about rent control extension.

Generally In Favor

These were witnesses at Senate or House hearings who were generally in favor of rent control extension legislation:

More Detailed Views

Here are typical views pro and con the legislation which were repeatedly put before Congressmen.

Opposing Extension

National Association of Real Estate Boards' publication, Headlines, reported its spokesman told the House Committee that "rent control should be abolished because the need no longer exists, and the Housing Expediter has failed to present factual evidence to show that it does." NAREB challenged Housing Expediter Tighe E. Woods' statement that the average rent increase in six decontrolled cities ranged from 16.2 per cent in Salt Lake City to 41.3 per cent in Houston.

American Home Owners, Inc., of Indianapolis—"for economic freedom"—wrote Senators and Representatives "facts you should know." Some of the statements were:

"Rent control has made millions for the Real Estate Salesman. . . Tighe Woods, the Housing Expediter, has accumulated figures to show a larger rise in rents than actually take place. . . Rent Control is a gravy train for Lawyers who charge a large fee for their work. . ." The letter also said Woods' forecasts of what will happen when rent control goes off have not come to pass in decontrolled cities.

The Property Owners Association in boldface red type declared, "Rent control is the most Communistic, radical, anti-American legislation ever foisted on the American people — barring none."

Independent Retail Lumber Dealers Association sent Congressmen copies of their 12, 1950 convention resolutions, which included opposition to rent control.

Property Owners Association, Cedar Rapids, Iowa, sent Congressmen mimeographed post cards, part of whose message was: "Either you believe in free enterprise or you don't. Rent control is the key to communism in America. Kill it now or you will kill Americanism."

From the Springfield, Mo., Property Owners Protective Alliance, legislators received a leaflet headed, " 'Gyping' the public to pluck the landlord. The bureaucrats get the gravy but the taxpayer gets the bill." Message of the leaflet said dwelling repairs were held up "by the ominous threat of punitive rent control orders," and that rent control "makes idleness and hurts business. Rent control is a racket. It is vote bait for the benefit of politicians. Write your Congressman and Senator in Washington city that rent control must be abolished."

Favoring Extension

Congress of Industrial Organizations — Rebutted property owner arguments with such statements as, "Systematic falsification by real estate interests of the record of evictions and rent gouging in those cities cannot be relied upon by members of Congress as their justification for permitting those interests to increase and intensify their extortions."

CIO said further, in asking extension of rent curbs, "Committees of Congress have investigated and reported the severe scarcity that exists in housing accommodations below the luxury level. Habitable places for rent at rents which ordinary families can pay are not to be had."

On the local option issue, CIO stated, "The 3400 cities, towns and villages now under federal rent control have already demonstrated their wish to retain it by not having exercised their option to end it. To require them now to reaffirm that decision by taking formal action within six months is plainly designed to provide open season for filibusters by realtors to prevent action by city, town or village councils."

International Association of Machinists in its weekly newspaper said a "united labor movement, 15,000,000 strong" was backing rent controls for another year "to block the all-out drive of the real estate lobby." The labor lineup included IAM, AFL, Railroad Labor Organizations, and CIO, said The Machinist.

It cited government surveys in decontrolled cities showing rents rose "25 to 40 percent on the average." A. J. Hayes, IAM president, said local lodges were drawing up proposals for wage increases and want to know the future of rent controls. If rent controls were "killed" the "prospect of sharply increased rents" would necessitate proportionately greater wage demands, stated the Hayes letter.

American Federation of Labor in January called for continuation of effective rent-control until the pending middle-income housing programs were enacted. The League Reporter of AFL Labor's League for Political Education printed three cases of "how people suffered when rent controls were lifted."

"Write your Congressman and tell him why he must vote to extend rent controls — and to strengthen them," said the labor paper.

What Mayors Said

The American Municipal Association queried mayors on the question of continued federal rent controls in their communities. Results indicated that they were sharply divided on the point. A total of 191 wanted federal controls to continue; 191 wanted to abandon rent ceilings and 31 wanted to retain controls with modifications. AMA reported that mayors of the big cities generally favored continued controls; mayors of medium size cities were fairly evenly split; and mayors of small communities generally favored abandoning controls.

Where housing was still tight and vacancies low, as in St. Louis, sentiment was strong for continued controls. But where the housing situation had eased, as in Salt Lake City, decontrol was said to have stimulated more home purchases and requests for building permits.

The Chicago Situation

The question of decontrolling rents in Chicago caused much argument.

Property owners and real estate men claimed rents were usually low in Chicago when controls went into effect in the city in 1942. William J. Wilson and R. L. Vanderslice of two Chicago hotel associations maintained that rents would not go much higher if they were decontrolled. Vanderslice even predicted that "Within six months after rent controls go off, there will be a lower level of rents than prevails today."

Tenant groups and federal rent officials were apprehensive about decontrol of rent ceilings in the nation's second largest city, nonetheless. In his April 21 message to Congress, President Truman stated: "Chicago landlords argued in court last fall that they were entitled to a 71.5 per cent rent increase."

Housing Expediter Woods reported in Congressional testimony that "Chicago landlords have already gone on record" that an increase "in rent of 71.5 per cent is justified." He said that they asked the U. S. Emergency Court of Appeals to grant "an immediate increase of 45 per cent" with the balance of the increase resulting "through the operation of economic laws at the end of the rent control". These demands by Chicago landlords, Woods maintained, "where the overall vacancy rate in the city is less than one per cent, show what would happen in our larger cities."

2nd Rent Control Extension

S J Res 207 — P.L. 880

SUMMARY

Both Senate and House Dec. 7 approved measures for a brief extension of federal rent controls after Dec. 31.

The Senate, which voted first, passed its proposal (SJ Res 207) for extension until Feb. 28, 1951, by a vote of 55 to 28. The House then passed, 221 to 152, its measure (HR 9763) providing for a 90-day extension of federal controls, or until March 31, 1950.

Controls would have expired Dec. 31, 1950, except in communities which had acted to prolong them for six months under a local option provision.

The two conflicting extension measures were sent to a joint conference committee, which soon reached agreement. It favored the House view — and the conference report extended rent controls through March 31, 1951.

President Truman signed the resolution on Dec. 20.

SENATE

Committee

The Senate Banking Committee Nov. 29 approved a resolution (SJ Res 207) to extend the existing federal rent control law for two months beyond its original Dec. 31, 1950, expiration date. The resolution was reported to the Senate Nov. 30.

Chairman Burnet R. Maybank (D S.C.) of the Committee said 10 votes were cast for extension, some of them by proxy, and that Senators John W. Bricker (R Ohio) and Ralph E. Flanders (R Vt.) opposed extension. Sen. Homer E. Capehart (R Ind.) voted present.

As approved, the resolution would have retained federal rent controls until Feb. 28, 1951, and allow communities to extend them until June 30 by local action taken before Feb. 28. Maybank said the measure would give the new Congress a chance to consider a new law in 1951, but Capehart said the opinion of the Committee was that no new law would be enacted unless controls were placed in effect generally. Maybank said that "was not quite my understanding".

W. Stuart Symington, chairman of the National Security Resources Board, and Tighe Woods, housing expediter, appeared before an executive session to urge the extension.

Floor Action

The Senate took up SJ Res 207 on Dec. 7. Chairman Maybank termed it stop-gap legislation and said it was impossible during the brief session to work out a new law to meet conditions imposed by the Korean war. He said the two-month extension would give the new Congress time to act.

Sen. Robert A. Taft (R Ohio) said the President had not seen fit to use wage-price control powers given him by Congress and declared that rent controls were not necessary if the other controls were not.

The Senate rejected, 29 to 53, an amendment to establish a new formula to determine rent ceilings. Offered by Sen. Ralph E. Flanders (R Vt.), it would have based rents on the average received during April, May and June, 1950, from comparable dwellings not under control. Sen. Russell B. Long (D La.) said the amendment would have killed control "by subterfuge".

The Senate approved by voice vote an amendment by Sen. Harry P. Cain (R Wash.) making clear that governing bodies of communities which want to continue or discontinue rent control under a local option provision need only approve a simple resolution.

The Senate then voted final passage of the resolution, which carried on a 55-28 roll call ballot.

HOUSE

Committee

The House Banking Committee approved its extension measure (HR 9763) on Dec. 5 by a vote of 17 to 3. It was opposed by Wolcott, the ranking GOP member, and Reps. Albert M. Cole (R Kan.) and Donald W. Nicholson (D Mass.). Wolcott said then that Housing Expediter Tighe Woods wanted controls extended because he was dissatisfied with the number of cities that acted to keep controls.

Some 800 communities had signified desire to retain controls under a provision in the existing law for local option on ceilings until June 30, 1951. Nearly 1,700 communities had taken no action and faced decontrol Dec. 31.

Wood and W. Stuart Symington, chairman of the National Security Resources Board, were the Administration's principal witnesses for controls at the House Committee hearing.

House leaders had hoped for a vote Dec. 6 but HR 9763 was blocked temporarily in the Rules Committee. The Committee voted, 6 to 5, on Dec. 5 to postpone action until an undetermined date. On the following day, however, it reversed and reported the bill by the same vote margin.

Floor Action

The House took up HR 9763 on Dec. 7. House Republicans protested that other controls should be restored if rent controls were to be retained. Rep. Jesse P. Wolcott (R Mich.) said that government statistics showed rent had increased less than almost any other cost of living item and said "there is no economic justification" for the extension, which he said was "sponsored by those who want to keep controls for controls' sake."

Wolcott moved to recommit the measure, but his motion was defeated on a 153-223 record vote. The House then passed the bill on a 221-152 roll call ballot. (See page 716 for votes.)

The vote on final passage in the House found 190 Democrats, 30 Republicans and one American Labor member in favor of the 90-day extension. Opposed were 33 Democrats, and 119 Republicans.

CONFERENCE

The differing House and Senate versions of extension legislation were sent to a joint conference committee for reconciliation. Conferees ultimately decided to favor the House approach—a 90-day extension instead of the Senate's 60-day extension.

The conference report on S J Res 207 was adopted by the Senate on Dec. 8. There was no debate. The House adopted the report on Dec. 11, by a voice vote. This cleared the measure to the White House, where the President signed it into Public Law 880 on Dec. 20.

Trade With China

S Res 365

The Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee approved Dec. 13 a resolution (S Res 365) by Warren Magnuson (D Wash.) and Herbert R. O'Conor (D Md.) authorizing expenditure of $25,000 for an investigation by the Commerce Committee into export policy and controls. The Senate approved the resolution Dec. 21 on voice vote.

Prior to the introduction of the resolution, the Subcommittee on Merchant Marine and Maritime Matters of the Commerce Committee had conducted an investigation of alleged shipments of military material to Communist China. A series of hearings was conducted by O'Conor as acting chairman. Magnuson was the chairman of the group.

Letter Launches Probe

A crewman's letter written in August started the Subcommittee on its investigation. Author of the letter was Alvin F. Bonawitz, then an electrician aboard the Isbrandtsen Line's Flying Cloud.

On Oct. 19 Bonawitz told the Subcommittee the letter was written to a friend in the Naval Reserve. In the letter, which he said was not intended for publication, he asked if shipments of armor and gasoline to the Reds were permissible. Sen. Magnuson inserted the letter in the Congressional Record Sept. 22 without identifying its writer.

Bonawitz testified he later learned the Flying Cloud was carrying mild steel plate instead of armor and oil instead of gasoline.

O'Conor said the Subcommittee had information about 13,000 drums of oil that "actually went to Communist China as late as August." Testifying for the Commerce Department, Edward Guinane, assistant chief of the investigation staff of the International Trade Office, said six or seven ships were used to haul the oil to Chinese ports.

Mason Ostroff, general counsel of the International Trade Office, testified none of the oil required an export license at the time it was shipped from the United States.

O'Conor said some of the oil that Bonawitz reported as on the Flying Cloud was removed at Yokohama.

Following the testimony he said evidence showed "a very lax situation that could have been of tremendous value to the enemy."

Quincy Adams, testifying for the Office of Occupied Areas, said a ban on shipment of oils has been in effect since March. A considerable portion of a more than one million gallon supply had been trans-shipped from Japan to Red ports as recently as August, he said.

Questioned by O'Conor, Adams said the oil was then in transit and had been shipped before the embargo. It then was stored temporarily in Japan because of a delay in payment, he said, and there might have been a legal question whether the embargo applied to it.

The Subcommittee inquiry into export controls prevented Communist China getting a shipment of petroleum, steel and tin, O'Conor said Nov. 11.

O'Conor said those materials were left behind by a China-bound vessel that sailed from New York earlier that week. He did not name the ship.

Commerce Head's Comment

Secretary of Commerce Charles Sawyer, whose department was criticized at the Subcommittee's hearings, Nov. 11 said "no items the military regards of strategic value are going to China and they haven't been for months." He said he was opposed to a complete embargo on exports to Communist China or anywhere else.

Hearings were briefly recessed, and then resumed Nov. 21, when O'Conor said testimony showed that "unquestionably there was an evasion of the regulations of Japan" in the shipment of nearly four million pounds of Japanese copper to China early in 1950.

Timothy F. Carberry, president of Metal Traders, Inc., New York City, told the Subcommittee that misdated bills of lading were made out for copper shipments on forms of the Isbrandtsen line after his firm had sold the copper. Purchased in Japan, the copper was sold to the Kane Import Co., New York, and was shipped from New York to the North China Import Corporation.

The Commerce Department advised the Subcommittee Nov. 22 that "certain scrap and reject steel items" were not included in its general re-control of steel shipments because they were not of strategic value and were in surplus supply.

After hearing testimony by a Boston shipper Nov. 22, O'Conor charged that steel he said was "highly strategic" had been sent from Britain, France and Belgium to New York and trans-shipped to the Chinese Reds, some of it since the outbreak of the Korean war. The Commerce Department disclosed it had prepared a proposal to extend export controls to cargoes of all ships that are docked in the United States on their way to China.

Findings Summarized

The Subcommittee Nov. 24 summarized its findings on shipments of copper, steel, scrap rubber and other materials to the Chinese and said the details would be laid before Secretary of Defense George C. Marshall.

O'Conor said Nov. 24 the group's task would be a continuing one "so Communists will not be given any aid from this country." On Nov. 29 he and Magnusson introduced the resolution for a continuing study of exports control legislation.

The full Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee approved the resolution Dec. 13, and the Senate itself followed suit on Dec. 21.

Excess Profits Tax Act

HR 9827—P.L. 909

SUMMARY

The 81st Congress had alreaoy passed into history when, on Jan. 3, 1951, President Truman approved the $3.3 billion excess profits tax bill (HR 9827), imposing a stiff levy on "windfall" defense earnings, with the warning that "more and much heavier taxes" were yet to come. It became Public Law 909.

Passed by the Congress during its late-1950 "lame duck" session, the measure was sent to the White House on Jan. 1, the day before the 81st Congress finally wound up its business.

The law brought new taxes imposed by the end of 1950 to approximately $8 billion, including an increase of $2.8 billion in individual and a $1.5 billion hike in corporation income levies. These higher taxes were embodied in the Revenue Act of 1950, passed in September. (See Almanac, p. 573)

With the new levies, federal tax revenues were estimated to total approximately $44.5 billion, about the peak of World War II tax income. The largest collection in previous years was reported to have been the $44 billion tax yield in 1945.

In a statement issued at the time he signed the new tax bill into law, the President said the "task ahead of us will require more and much heavier taxes. . .I shall in due course submit to the Congress recommendations for substantial tax increases." He promised that every revenue possibility would be canvassed, including even the new excess profits levy.

Acknowledging that the 1950 tax measures had "increased federal revenue very substantially", the President nevertheless made it clear he was not fully pleased with the new bill. He stated:

"In developing this tax in the few weeks at its disposal, the Congress may have been overly liberal in its concern over some corporations. . This bill probably will give undue advantage to some corporations, especially in relation to the tax burdens necessarily borne by others. Excessive exemptions and relief provisions create inequities and reduce the government's revenues needlessly."

Provisions

The corporate surtax — Increased two percentage points, from 45 to 47 per cent, with respect to income above $25,000 in taxable years beginning on or after July 1, 1950.

The excess profits tax — An additional 77 per cent rate imposed on all income adjudged to be excess profits or "windfalls" from the war effort.

Profits tax base — Two alternative bases provided for determining the excess profits "credit" or amount of income free of the new levy — , the first: 85 per cent of average income for best three out of four years, 1946 through 1949; the second: based on rates of return on equity and borrowed capital and retained earnings (12 per cent on $5 million or under; 10 per cent on $5 million to $10 million; and 8 per cent on all over $10 million.)

Effective date — Retroactive to July 1, 1950.

Termination date — As of June 30, 1953.

Minimum credit — The first $25,000 of income.

Tax ceiling — The combined take of a corporation's income — income plus excess profits taxes — was limited to a total of 62 per cent of the firm's net income.

Net capital changes — Taxpayers using either the average earnings credit or the invested capital credit were allowed to increase their credit by a flat 12 per cent of the additions to their investments after 1949, but the percentage rate was made applicable to only 75 per cent of borrowed capital additions.

Exploration subsidies — Amounts received as incentive payments to encourage exploration, development and mining for defense purposes excluded from all profits taxes.

Installment basis taxpayers — Taxpayers in the business of installment sales or purchasing of installment sales, obligations were allowed to report their income on an accrual basis for the excess profits tax.

Base period abnormalities — Existence of an abnormality (fire, strike, flood, etc.) in the taxpayer's lowest year of earnings during the base period automatically eliminated the year in the computation of average base period net income. Presence of an abnormality in more than one of three years in the base period entitled a taxpayer to use as his base period rate of return the average return enjoyed by his industry.

Increase in capacity during base period — Corporations commencing business before, and making substantial changes in its capacity during, the last 36 months of the base period were permitted to substitute in the computation of their base period net income the base period rate of return enjoyed by the entire industry classification.

Depressed industries — Industries having an average rate of return on total assets during the years 1946 through 1949 of less than 63 per cent of their average rate of return over the period 1938 through 1948 were allowed to compute their average base period net income by multiplying their average total assets during the base period by 80 per cent of the depressed industry's average return in the 1938-48 period.

Alternative base for new corporations — Firms beginning business at any time after the beginning of the base period were to use the average rate of return for their industry in computing their profits base.

Growing corporations — Corporations which experienced an unusually rapid growth during their base period got the alternative of computing their base period income on the basis of income in 1948 and 1949, income in the year 1949, or one -half its income in 1949 and 40 per cent of its income in 1950. Corporations were qualified for this alternative if (1) their payroll for the last half of the base period was 130 per cent or more of its total payroll for the first half of the base period and if its total assets at the beginning of the base period was not more than $20 million, or if (2) 40 per cent or more of their net sales for 1950 were attributable to a product or class of products "not generally available to the general public" prior to Jan. 1, 1946.

Carry-overs — Net operating loss carry-back and carry-forward were made applicable in calculations of excess profits net income, with the carry-back limited to one year and the carry-forward to five years.

Minimum credit for regulated industries — Besides the average earnings and invested capital credits, the following regulated public utilities and industries were granted a third alternative credit, consisting of regular income taxes plus a six per cent return on their investments before excess profits taxes could be sewage disposal, city transit systems and bus and truck transportation; as well as oil and gas pipelines, railroads and water transportation.

Other minimum credits — The same alternative credit, but with an additional seven per cent rate of return, was granted telephone and telegraph services and airlines.

Airmail subsidies — If an airline would otherwise have no adjusted excess profits tax net income, it was allowed to exclude air mail subsidy payments.

Exemption of strategic minerals — Income attributable to the following minerals was exempted from excess profits taxation: antimony, chromite, maganese, nickel, platinum, quicksilver, sheet mica, tantalum, tin, tungsten, vanadium, fluorspar, flake graphite, vermiculite, perlite, long - fiber asbestos in the form of amosite, chrysolite or crocidolite, beryl, cobalt, columbite, corundum, diamonds, kyanite, molybdenum, monazite, quartz crystals and uranium.

Exempt mining income — Certain portions of the income from mining of the following minerals was exempted: Ores of metals, coal, abrasives, asbestos, asphaltum, barytes, borax, building stone, cement rock, clay, crushed stone, feldspar, fluorspar, fuller's earth, graphic, gravel, gypsum, limestone, magnesite, marl, mica, mineral pigments, peat, potash, precious stones, refractories, rock phosphate, salt, sand, shell, silica, slate soapstone, soda, sulphur and talc.

Mine, timber and natural gas properties — In these cases, the exempt portion of income was specified as one half of the current excess production. For properties not in operation during the base period, one third of the net income in the current taxable year was exempted from the excess profits tax.

Foreign corporations and income from aboard — The excess profits tax was imposed on foreign corporations only if they engaged in trade or business within the United States and only on income derived from sources within the United States.

Merchant Marine Act contracts — Amounts paid by shipbuilding contractors into the Maritime Board's revolving construction fund as provided under the Merchant Marine Act of 1936, were excluded from excess profits.

Special excess profits tax credit for railroad corporations — Invested capital credit of a railroad which was formerly a lessor was permitted to include the fair value of betterments and additions made by a lessee railroad to property of the lessor railroad if the lease had been canceled.

The House Dec. 5 passed HR 9827 by the overwhelmingly favorable vote of 378 to 20, after rejecting a substitute measure offered under sponsorship of the House Republican Policy Committee, by the narrower vote of 145 to 252.

On Dec. 20, the Senate passed the tax measure on a voice vote. At no time during the debate did the bill evoke a roll-call ballot.

Dec. 22 the Senate passed the conference version of HR 9827 by voice vote. The House passed it, likewise on a voice vote, Jan. 1.

BACKGROUND

Under terms of the Revenue Act of 1950 (the general tax revision measure; see page 573), the House Ways and Means and the Senate Finance Committees were directed to prepare legislation taxing excess profits of corporations while the 81st Congress was holding its pre-election recess. This legislation, the Act directed, was to be acted upon when—and if—the 81st Congress resumed its work at a post-election session. When it recessed in September, the Congress did so under a resolution calling for its return in November.

Accordingly, the question of an excess profits levy drew considerable Congressional attention even while most lawmakers were away from the capital making their campaigns.

Truman Views

On Nov. 14, President Truman formally made known his views on excess profits taxation. In a letter to Chairman Robert L. Doughton (D N.C.) of the Ways & Means group, the President sketched them out.

Truman did not recommend specific tax rates, but he did say he wanted the levy made retroactive to July 1, 1950. He said he realized the tax might take many variations in form and that Treasury Secretary John Snyder would discuss these with the Committee.

Commending Doughton and the Committee for supporting the pay-as-you-go principle in financing defense costs, Truman wrote:

"This will not be easy. It will require both wisdom and determination. It is never pleasant to increase taxes, but in such times as these it is absolutely necessary. . .

"When the 1950 tax program has been completed with the enactment of this (profits) tax, we shall be in a position, early next year, to assess our needs for further tax legislation. To preserve the integrity of the government's finances, our revenue system must keep pace with our defense expenditures."

The President's letter was received on the eve of a formal convocation of the Ways & Means Committee to study the problem.

HOUSE

Hearings

With the plea from President Truman before it for prompt approval of a $4 billion-a-year excess profits tax on corporations, the House Ways and Means Committee Nov. 15 began public hearings preliminary to drafting a new revenue bill to help finance defense rearmament costs.

Secretary of the Treasury Snyder, the Committee's first witness, backed up the President's request for an excess profits levy and said it should be patterned on the World War II law, with sharp modifications to make it less burdensome, more equitable and easier to administer.

Specifically, the Secretary in his Nov. 15 testimony suggested a 75 per cent tax rate on what he called "defense profits", to be computed under either of two alternative methods, both similar to the earlier wartime law. The maximum rate in that law, however, was 85 per cent of profits above the specified level.

Snyder discussed at some length the two alternatives.

Two Alternatives

Under the first, he said, corporations would take the years 1946 through 1949 as a base period. Each concern would compute its average annual earnings during the most profitable three years of that four-year period. Future earnings in excess of 75 per cent of the three-year average would be subject to the 75 per cent excess profits rate. The existing rate of 25 per cent on the first $25,000 of income and 45 per cent on the rest would apply to all other earnings.

The second alternative provided for computation of excess profits on the basis of a corporation's return on invested capital. Under the World War II law's similar option, the excess profits rate applied to returns exceeding 8 per cent on the first $5 million of invested capital, 6 per cent on the next $5 million and 5 per cent on the invested capital above $10 million. Snyder suggested those allowances be increased by about one-fourth to one-third.

Snyder read to the Committee a 20-page single-spaced typewritten statement, accompanied by charts and tables. Later questioned at length, he remained a full day on the stand.

"One conclusion which stands out clearly," he asserted, "is the inadvisability of placing the burden of the President's revenue objective on the regular corporation income tax. The basic issue is whether the additional tax should be distributed on all corporations irrespective of whether they share in the present prosperity or whether taxation should be more selective."

Secretary Snyder, in his all-day stint on the witness stand, emphasized he was making no recommendations or proposals but merely suggesting methods whereby Congress could meet its self-imposed "mandate" to write a "defense profits" tax bill this session. But he declined to say whether he thought the levy should be retroactive to July 1, as proposed by the President.

Committee Fireworks

No sooner had Snyder offered the Treasury tax plan than it started to provoke a series of party clashes in the Committee sessions. The reason was that many business groups had indicated that, while they thought corporate taxes should be increased because of the Korean war, they did not want it to be a tax on excess profits. Most of them evidenced support for a flat increase in corporate rates.

The Republicans on the Committee made it plain they wanted to hear what these business groups had to suggest. But the Democratic majority, favoring more closely the Treasury suggestions, decided to rule out the substitute proposals.

Limit on Testimony

After Snyder had completed his testimony, the Committee immediately adopted a resolution, imposing on the proceedings a rule limiting testimony to pros and cons of an excess profits tax only, and limiting each witness to 15 minutes on the stand. The vote on the resolution was solidly along party lines, with the Committee's 15 Democrats for it and the 10 GOP members against.

Chairman Robert L. Doughton (D N.C.) declared that his Committee had a mandate from Congress to draft an excess profits tax bill and just hadn't the time to go into the entire field of taxation. Republicans retorted with the charge that the Democratic majority had used the "rankest form of steamroller tactics and gag rule."

Three Votes on Nov. 16

On Nov. 16, GOP members forced the Committee to vote three times on the question of admitting non-excess profits tax testimony, but each time the result was the same — 15 to 10 against it.

The three sharp clashes had been touched off when Rep. Richard M. Simpson (R Pa.) asked Thomas N. Tarleau, vice chairman of the Commerce and Industry Association of New York, if he had an alternative for the excess profits tax plan. Tarlau, in a written statement, had indicated he advocated increased corporate tax rates and excise (sales) taxes.

Tarleau was told the Committee rule barred him from answering Simpson's question with any details. Simpson then asked that the prepared statement be put into the record but Doughton said that would be "a waste of time and space in the record." Simpson asked for a Committee vote on his request and lost, 15 to 10. Two subsequent votes produced the same result.

Prepared statements in opposition to an excess profits tax also were given the Committee Nov. 16 by the newly organized Business Committee on Emergency Corporate Taxation and Arthur Smithies, professor of economics at Harvard University. M. L. Seidman, of the New York Board of Trade, urged that any excess profits tax plan entitle corporations to take an alternative of a flat tax of 50 per cent on net income.

AFL, CIO Officials Heard

Hearings continued. On Nov. 17, officials of the Congress of Industrial Organizations and the American Federation of Labor took the stand to ask for higher profits taxes than those proposed.

Research Director Stanley H. Ruttenberg of the CIO declared: "It is the considered judgement of the CIO that an excess profits tax should be designed to raise at least $6 billion to $7 billion over and above that raised from corporations through the normal and surtax rates."

The CIO spokesman declared such a levy would be anti-inflationary and would play "an important role in an over-all stabilization program." He also argued that an excess profits tax would raise "more revenue more fairly and equitably" than a straight corporate increase, which, he said, would hit smaller corporations much harder than large ones.

Ruttenberg said the profits tax rate should be 85 per cent as it was in World War II rather than the 75 per cent proposed by the administration. He suggested that companies be allowed to compute their tax on either an invested capital or a 1946-49 base period earnings method.

The views of the AFL were presented by Arthur Elder, special consultant to the organization's tax committee. While he endorsed the details of the administration's plan, he did not make clear where the AFL would get the additional $1 billion to $2 billion it felt should be raised.

Eric Johnston, president, Motion Picture Association of America, the same day said he thought an excess profits levy was inflationary and would retard production. However, he proposed numerous means by which he thought the proposed plan could better be put into operation.

Royal Little, president, Textron, Inc., warned the Committee it must be sure to include in any excess profits tax some provision to encourage new business and business expansion. Merrill Griswold, chairman of the Board of the American Research and Development Corp., urged the Committee in a similar vein.

GOP Substitute

In an extraordinary Saturday session Nov. 18, the Committee continued its hearings. However, presentation outside the hearing of the Republican substitute for the profits levy took the limelight. It was presented in a prepared statement issued by Rep. Daniel A. Reed (R N.Y.) who outlined it as follows:

"1. The corporate taxpayer would have an election of either paying under an excess profits tax or at a corporate rate of 55 per cent, whichever results in a lower tax.

"2. If the taxpayer elected to pay under the excess profits tax, the amount of tax paid would have to at least be equal to a tax of 50 per cent of the current year's earnings."

Chairman Doughton analyzed the Reed proposal as an increase in the regular corporations rates instead of an excess profits tax.

Meanwhile, Ralph W. Button, spokesman for the National Retail Dry Goods Association, told the Committee public pressure for an excess profits tax to help finance the country's rearmament program "stems from a misunderstanding of the application of such a tax." Button tried to offer another proposal for raising defense revenue from business, but was blocked by the Committee's rule against such testimony. His prepared statement showed he favored increased corporate income rates.

Reed offered his substitute for consideration Nov. 20 but was voted down, 15 to 10.

Final Testimony

The National Association of Manufacturers, through Charles Sligh, Jr., chairman of its taxation committee the same day urged a "corporation defense tax" in place of an excess profits tax.

Robert C. Sprague, president, the Radio-Television Manufacturers Association, cited the television industry as outstandingly subject to inequities under the Administration program. He said the proposed base period was a time of television pioneering and was unfair for excess profits credits purposes. Dr. Allen B. Dumont, president, Dumont Television Laboratories, labelled the tax a "masquerade" for what he called a "success tax." He said if the levy was adopted, it should have no retroactive features.

J. Cameron Thomson, representing the Committee for Economic Development, urged the Committee not to put Congress in the position of choosing "between an excess profits tax of the World War II type and no taxes." Thomson recommended adoption of the CED's own proposals to raise six billions in defense dollars, half from increased corporation taxes and half from individuals. (See Lobby Stands, p. 678)

Ellsworth C. Alvord, chairman of the federal finance committee of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, called for a six-billion-a-year cut in nonmilitary expenditures, as "the first step" in financing the nation's rearmament program. Alvord said there was "no necessity for, and no justification of, an excess proffits tax applicable to any portion of 1950 and 1951." He said every possible source, including excises, must be explored and tapped "if and when" additional revenues are needed for defense.

Clarence D. Laylin, representing the Council of State Chambers of Commerce, testified that the excess profits tax was both administratively and economically unsound "even as a war measure."

On Nov. 22, the last day of the hearings, scores of witnesses representing major utility groups urged special consideration of utility companies whose profits are regulated by state and federal agencies to a "fair return" — usually six per cent — on capital investment. In general they urged that they be given 100 per cent tax credit for "normal" earnings computed over the proposed base period of 1946-1949. Among utility groups represented were the Association of American Railroads, the Independent Natural Gas Association of America, the National Association of Electric Companies, American Gas Association, Edison Electric Institute, the Bell Telephone System, Air Transport Association of America, American Transit Association, Federation of Railway Progress, American Trucking Association and the National Federation of American Shipping.

Compromise Hinted

The House Ways and Means Committee, after winding up its hearings Nov. 22 on the Administration's proposed excess profits tax, immediately went into executive session to tackle the task of drafting a bill embodying the levy in some form.

As the hearings came to a close, a compromise was reported being privately considered by majority members that would partially meet business criticism by tying a moderate increase in regular corporation rates to a considerably softened excess profits tax. Various estimates on the so-called "combinations plan" were that it would raise between $3 and $5 billion, while the administration's own 75 per cent proposal was designed to produce about $4 billion.

The Republicans, in the meantime, had been in sympathy with business' efforts to bring before the Committee their alternative tax plans. After they had unsuccessfully sought to break through the Committee's rule against presentation of these alternatives, they produced a substitute plan of their own designed to give corporations the choice of either paying an excess profits tax or taking an increase of 10 per cent in the present 45 per cent corporate tax rate, which they said they would try to write into the new bill.

Committee

The Committee, behind closed doors, worked for more than a week before it produced a bill. At one point the members were deadlocked for two days over the twin issues of the size of the profits tax and the amount of credit to be allowed corporations computing the tax by the "average earnings" method, but a compromise was finally evolved.

The events leading up to the compromise began Nov. 28 when the Committee took up the Treasury recommendations for a 75 per cent tax on profits in excess of 75 per cent of the 1946-49 average. Brought to a vote, these proposals were rejected by a 12-12 tie-vote, with two Democrats joining 10 Republicans in voting against them. The voting lineup was not revealed.

The next day, the Committee decided, first, to allow corporations a full 100 per cent credit on their 1946-49 average pre-Korea earnings. In another decision, it agreed to tax the excess at 80 per cent. This was seen as a victory for Republicans.

But the two decisions, when coupled into a single motion, were turned down by the Committee. None of these votes were officially disclosed but they were said to have been thin-edged.

Supporters of the combination proposal estimated it would have yielded, in conjunction with the invested capital alternative, $2.8 billion. Another substitute, to impose an 85 per cent tax on earnings that exceeded 90 per cent of the base period average, also lost. It was estimated capable of raising $4.1 billion.

Tentative Agreement

Within another 24 hours, however, tentative agreement was reached on a compromise excess profits tax plan designed to produce an estimated $3 billion to $4.6 billion a year in government revenue from war-swollen business earnings. The tax was made retroactive to July 1, but the plan tentatively worked out differed in considerable detail from the even $4 billion levy requested by President Truman and the Treasury Department. The estimate was that the new bill would produce $3 billion with profits at the 1950 level and $4.6 billion at the anticipated 1951 level.

As it stood Nov. 30, the bill's shortened 1950 revenue gain resulted from the Committee's adoption of a more liberal tax base than the Administration had wanted. It provided:

1. A credit allowance of 85 per cent of "normal" profits, such profits being established as the average of the best three years out of the four-year 1946-1949 base period.

2. A tax of 75 per cent on all earnings in excess of the 85 per cent allowance.

3. A "ceiling" of 67 per cent on the total tax liability of business, limiting the amount the government can tax — either by federal income, surtax, and/or excess profits taxes — from a corporation's earnings.

4. Retroactivity to July 1, 1950.

Other Revenue Reductions

While this change cut the revenue take considerably, the Committee also inserted other gain-reducing provisions, such as special treatment for excess profits purposes, of public utilities, railroads and the aircraft industry. More opportunity was provided for corporations to obtain relief if they think they are unfairly affected by the tax.

As the measure stood on the eve of the Committee's final action, all corporations earning in excess of $25,000 a year were subjected to an excess profits tax of 75 per cent on all over 85 per cent of their average earnings — provided their overall taxes did not exceed 67 per cent. An alternative plan for computing the tax, based on invested capital return, also was provided.

"Mandate" Row

Meanwhile, in a related development as Congress reconvened Nov. 27, Rep. Daniel A. Reed (R N.Y.), ranking minority member of the Ways and Means Committee, offered in the House a resolution (H J Res 547) broadening and redefining the "mandate" adopted by Congress in September to permit approval of either an excess profits tax or an increase in corporation taxes, or both. The "mandate" referred to was Congress' directive to the House Ways and Means and Senate Finance Committees instructing them to produce an excess profits tax before the end of the year.

Reed had announced Nov. 22, shortly after the Committee closed a week of hearings on the proposed levy, that he would offer such a resolution. He contended Democratic Committeemen, who repeatedly had refused to allow GOPers to bring in testimony on any alternative to the excess-profits tax plan, had "misconstrued" the Congressional instructions.

When Reed tossed his measure in the hopper at the outset of the "lame duck" session, he asked for immediate consideration by the House. He said refusal of the Committee to study alternatives to a straight excess profits tax posed "an impossible task" for House tax framers. It was clear, he averred, that a revenue bill siphoning off excess war profits was necessary, but, he added, "it is (also) clear beyond doubt that enactment of the President's recommendations would be highly inflationary and detrimental to our national economy."

Chairman Doughton of the Committee, hit Reed's proposal as confirmation of "what we have suspected all along — that the Republican members. . .are only interested in doing everything possible to avoid and delay the taxation of excess profits derived from the war effort."

Reed's motion for immediate consideration was ruled out of order and the bill was referred to the Ways and Means Committee. The next day, the Committee, as expected, tabled the measure.

Report

Although the Ways & Means Committee had reached tentative agreement on terms of the new bill on Nov. 30, it made a few more changes in the measure Dec. 1 before formally reporting it. (Provisions, and last minute changes in them, are given below.)

The 10 Republicans on the 25-man Committee were dissatisfied with the approved legislation and set forth their views in a strong dissent. Nine of them attacked the bill as "inherently inflationary." The other Committee Republican, Rep. Hal Holmes (Wash.), in a separate dissent, declared that it would be more logical to make the tax retroactive to Oct. 1 rather than July 1, 1950.

The main minority opinion asserted that a "basic fallacy and defect" in the bill stemmed from the fact that the 75 per cent levy would apply to normal as well as to excess profits. They contended the bill tended to "freeze" the economy.

The Democratic majority stated that a proposal to increase the ordinary corporate income tax in lieu of imposing an excess profits tax, as business witnesses at the Committee hearing had urged, "would create a hardship for those corporations whose profits are declining and which have realized no benefits from the defense boom." The majority said they thought additional taxes should first be collected from "corporations whose incomes have actually been increased or sustained by the defense program."

Then, on Dec. 1, the Committee set the legislation before the lower chamber for action. It was formally reported as HR 9827 and specified the following:

The tax rate on excess profits would be 75 per cent.

No firm with earnings before regular taxes of $25,000 or less would be subject to the tax.

Firms were allowed to compute their excess profits by taking 85 per cent of the average earnings of the best three of the four years 1946-1949, and taxing at 75 per cent all over that amount.

Or, they might figure out the tax on the basis of invested capital: they would be allowed a return of 12 per cent on all under $5 million of equity capital and retained earnings, 10 per cent on from $5 to $10 million, and 8 per cent on all over $10 million. (The Committee had first decided to allow 12 per cent on the first $5 million, 10 per cent on the second $5 million, 8 per cent on capital up to $125 million and 7 per cent on all over $125 million.)

Deduction from income of interest on borrowed capital was allowed in full. In addition, the invested capital credit was increased by one third of the interest on 100 per cent of the borrowed capital for the taxable year, provided the one-third "margin" by which the invested capital was increased did not exceed one per cent of the total borrowed. (This had first been set at three per cent).

"Relief" Provisions

Specific "relief" provisions were established, dealing with additions or reductions in capital during or after the base years, and business enterprises selling extensively on the installment-payment basis.

New corporations, opened for business as early as 1946, were given an alternative tax credit: a rate of return on assets equal to the average rate of return by the entire industry of which it is a part. (The provision was originally confined to firms beginning business after 1946.)

"Growth" companies — those expanding during the base period — were given an alternative "average earnings" base permitting them to choose between the last year of their base period or the average of the last two years, whichever was higher.

Exempted from income subject to the profits levy were returns from these strategic minerals: antimony, chromite, manganese, nickel, platinum, quicksilver, sheet mica, tantalum, tin, tungsten, floorspar, flake graphite, vermiculite and vanadium. Also exempted from taxable income were half the excess returns from certain mining, timber and natural gas operations: one-sixth of the net returns from such properties not in operation in the base period was exempted.

Special treatment for electric, gas and similar public utilities allowed them a third alternative to the average earnings and invested capital basis for computing the profits tax: before the levying of the excess profits tax they could take whatever income was needed to pay regular income taxes plus such rate of return on equity and borrowed capital and retained earnings as was allowed them by the state or federal regulatory commission controlling their industries, up to a six per cent maximum.

This same special alternative was given railroads and airlines, with a maximum five per cent return specified. Airlines were required to add airmail subsidy payments in computing income.

Railroads were allowed to include in their borrowed capital conditional sales contracts for purchase of equipment.

Apportionment of excess profits tax credit was permitted between lessor and lessee in cases where the lessee takes over and operates a road and gets all the income.

Floor Action

The legislation was brought up in the House on Dec. 4 under a "closed rule", which provided: 1. two days of debate; 2. one motion to recommit the bill; and 3. a ban on amendments, requiring adoption or rejection of the measure, en toto.

Concern over the international crisis set the tone of the debate. Much of it from the Republican side was critical of the Truman administration.

Opening the talk, Chairman Robert L. Doughton (D N.C.), of the Ways and Means Committee said he would oppose excess profits taxation in normal times. "But these are not normal times," he added. "This may, in fact, be the greatest emergency this nation has ever faced." He denied the profits levy would injure business, adding, "I do think it significant that there was no testimony before our Committee that a single business had failed as a result of the excess profits tax enacted in World War I and World War II".

Rep. Daniel A. Reed (R N.Y.), ranking minority member of the Committee, called the bill "the CIO tax program." He declared: "This arrogant labor organization has been propagandizing for years for a permanent excess profits tax despite the fact that such a tax is highly inflationary and harmful to the nation. The CIO bosses believe that the wastefulness and extravagance engendered by the excess profits tax would be to their distinct selfish advantage".

Rep. Hale Boggs (D La.) denied the Reed charges. He said they were "not only untrue, but slanderous and libelous as well". Other Democrats described the bill as a "modest" one in view of the heavy defense spending and warned that additional higher taxes will have to be voted in 1951.

Rep. Carl T. Curtis (R Neb.) insisted that the bill was inflationary and a wrong approach at that time. Rep. Wilbur D. Mills (D Ark.) replied that the Ways and Means Committee had been directed by Congress itself earlier in the year to prepare a measure taxing excess profits. Rep. Ben F. Jensen (R Iowa) bitterly attacked administration fiscal policies and referred to the American military reverses in Korea when he declared that Congress need not follow administration leadership in "this mess." He continued: "There's a lot of things Congress can do — if need be, we can impeach the President." Jensen was joined by Rep. Leo E. Allen (R Ill.) in calling upon Congress to warn the United Nations that if it did not contribute more than "token" forces to Korea the United States would pull out.

Substitute Defeated

During the debate, Republicans submitted to the House a substitute. Framed and presented under aegis of the House Republican Policy Committee, the measure would have levied a 75 per cent tax on corporate profits in excess of the total average for the 1946-1949 period and increased the maximum corporate income tax rate from 45 to 50 per cent. Republicans said their substitute would yield up to $4 billion in new revenue.

Rep. Reed, for his party, on Dec. 5 moved to return HR 9827 to the Ways and Means Committee and instruct the Committee to replace it with the substitute. This motion lost, 145 to 252, with the voting closely following party lines. Only one Democrat, John F. Kennedy (Mass.) cast his ballot for it. Ten Republicans voted against the substitute.

The ballot on final passage of the bill was then taken. The House approved it 378-20.

As sent across the Capitol to the Senate, HR 9827 contained the same provisions as those reported by the Committee. The "closed rule" under which it was considered had allowed no changes.

SENATE

Hearings

Opening hearings on HR 9827 even before the measure had gotten the green light in the House, the Senate Finance Committee Dec. 4 heard a gloomy forecast of far heavier taxation and a call for early passage of the excess profits bill from Treasury Secretary Snyder.

The stepped-up revenue demands were necessary in view of the "rising defense costs ahead of us" and the 1950 federal deficit, Snyder testified. While he praised the bill as "a major achievement in the short time that was available for its preparation," the cabinet official asked the Senate taxmakers to increase the provisions of HR 9827 to produce another billion dollars.

Predicting that the level of government expenditures in 1951 might be "half again as large as this year," Snyder declared; "Very substantial tax increases will be required to carry out the essential policy of financing the greatest possible amount of these costs by taxation."

Millikin Statement

Eugene D. Millikin (R Colo.), the Committee's ranking minority member, disclosed Dec. 5 that "several of us (on the Committee) are giving increased thought to whether excess profits should be defined as (those above) 100 per cent of the 1946-49 average, instead of the 85 per cent in the House bill." Millikin also got from the Treasury Department a requested estimate of the revenue that would be lost if excess profits tax exemptions for public utilities were written into HR 9827 — the Treasury said would cost $92,500,000. (The House bill had a special clause granting publicly regulated utilities a miximum six per cent return on their capital before excess profits taxes.)

Beardsley Ruml Dec. 5 led off the opposition witnesses. Ruml denounced the profits tax as "an evil brew of inequity, exception, exemption and privilege." He demanded substitution of an across-the-board corporate tax increase. He was joined in this by Royal Little, president, Textron, Inc., and Dr. Allen B. Dumont, president, Dumont Laboratories Inc. Harold V. Bozell, representing the U. S. Independent Telephone Association and Hal S. Dumas, president, Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Co., testified the House's tax would endanger the telephone companies' ability to meet vital demands for defense. Mrs. Jessie R. Muni, representing the Investors League Inc., of New York City, and Willford I. King, economics professor emeritus of New York University, opposed the excess profits tax idea.

ADA Witness

Miles Pennybacker a manufacturer representing the Americans for Democratic Action, endorsed the levy as a way to take the profits out of war.

Dec. 6, Gerhard Mayer, tax expert for the Commerce and Industry Association of New York, was joined by Clarence Laylin, representing the Council of State Chambers of Commerce, and Clarence L. Turner, of the Pennsylvania State Chamber of Commerce, in urging a "defense super tax" on top of present corporate income taxes. Liberalization of the "average earnings" formula for computing the tax was urged by James W. Haley, of the National Coal Association, Mitchell B. Carroll, for the National Foreign Trade Council Inc., Horace Ford of the American Research and Development Corp., and Robert Kerr, Jr., president, Kerr Manufacturing Co.

A 6 per cent allowance was granted electric power, gas, water, oil and gas pipelines, intrastate and interurban transportation, railroads and trucking and bus companies.

The same 6 per cent allowance was granted companies deriving 80 per cent or more of their income from a regulated utility business.

Corporations eligible for the special "growth" provision in the bill were provided with a new alternative credit in addition to those granted by the House: they were permitted to substitute for ordinary average earnings credit the company's average earnings in one - half of 1949 and 10 per cent of 1950.

Borrowed capital was given the same treatment as equity capital, but the House-approved deduction of interest payments on borrowed capital was disallowed.

After two days of opposition testimony Millikin delivered a blunt warning to the witnesses: "You can start with the assumption that you will have an excess profits tax — I take the liberty of assuring you that you'll get one this year or early next year." No Committee member raised objection when Millikin made his assertion.

Dec. 7, Arthur A. Elder, tax consultant for the American Federation of Labor, endorsed the tax in principle but said the House bill was too mild and the Senate should strengthen it. John Hessey, chairman of the National Association of Railroad and Utilities Commissioners, predicted the measure would hurt utility companies and the public by forcing "tremendously high" increases in the nation's utility bills. Robert Ramspeck, of Atlanta, Ga., executive vice-president of the Air Transport Association, said the bill would discriminate against airlines in favor of railroads and thus endanger national defense planning. Likewise, George L. Buland for the Association of American Railroads, complained that the bill would hurt railway expansions necessary for the defense effort. He said the bill was more generous to utilities than railroads.

NAM Officials Heard

Charles R. Sligh, Jr., chairman of the National Association of Manufacturers' tax committee, contended Dec. 8 that the excess profits tax was "a bad law, inflationary and unsound." He urged a flat increase in "ordinary income tax." Thomas Green, tax specialist for the American Institute of Accountants, complained the House bill was too complicated — he said even accountants "can't understand" some of the bill's language.

Elsworth C. Alvord, representing the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, called the bill one "to make success and progress a crime and to impose penalties therefor."

J. T. Sanders, legislative counsel for the National Grange, testified that his group favored an excess profits tax "as an emergency measure only." Nathaniel Goldfinger, economic policy chairman of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, lent the labor group's support to the tax bill.

Eric Johnston, president of the Motion Picture Association of America, appealed for special relief for the film industry. H. C. Fernald, chairman of the American Mining Congress' tax committee, testified that mining companies, under the proposed law, might be required to include in their taxable income payments they receive under the government's mine defense subsidy program.

The Committee wound up its public hearings on Dec. 8, amid statements from Chairman Walter George (D Ga.) that he would recommend that the overall permissible tax load on corporations be limited to 65 per cent of the firm's income, compared with the 67 per cent maximum proposed by the House in HR 9827. George said also he hoped to devise a formula to give young and growing businesses a better break.

Committee

The Finance Committee buckled down to drafting its version of the legislation on Dec. 11 in a closed session. The group made numerous and far - reaching changes in the House-endorsed provisions of HR 9827. While the House version was designed to produce an estimated $3 billion to $4.6 billion yield, the Senate Committee revamped the measure to raise an estimated $3.2 billion annually from 70,000 corporations with profits at the 1950 level, and from $4-5 billion if profits reached the level anticipated for 1951.

Chief Revisions

Chief of the revisions made by the Finance Committee was the addition of a section boosting the maximum tax rate on corporations making in excess of $25,000 yearly from 45 to 47 per cent for years beginning after July 1, 1950. An income tax increase instead of the profits levy had been one of the chief aims of business groups attempting to influence framing of the excess - profits tax.

Nevertheless, the profits tax was retained, though some key changes were made in it. These:

1. Lowered the over-all ceiling on the amount of a corporation's income that might be demanded in taxes to 60 per cent.

2. Lifted the tax on excess profits from 75 to 77 per cent.

3. Retained the House formula giving taxpayers who use the "average earnings" method of computing excess profits a credit of 85 per cent of their average income in the years 1946 through 1949, along with the alternative method of basing credit on invested capital, with the added proviso that borrowed capital may be counted the same as equity.

Other Revisions

Additional major revisions were as follows:

Airlines, telephone and telegraph services were allowed a return before taxes of at least 7 per cent on their total assets. Airlines were permitted to exclude air mail subsidy payments from taxable income if the airline otherwise would have no adjusted excess-profits net income.

The general relief provision was expanded to permit firms having abnormalities in the base period to take for the year of abnormality the rate of return of their industry class in computing the profits tax.

Molybdenum was added to the strategic minerals exempted from the excess profits tax; the House provision for exemption of one-sixth of the net income of new iron, coal or timber properties was changed to exempt one-third of the net income.

Fifty per cent of an insurance company's reserves was eligible as equity capital.

Fair value of betterments and additions by a railroad lessee to the property of the lessor was added for purposes of computing invested capital, where the lease was cancelled.

The House treatment of property sold on the installment basis was extended to installment sale obligations.

Banks' net reserves for bad debts were treated as equity capital.

The termination date was fixed for Dec. 31, 1952.

On Dec. 18, the Finance Committee reported the bill as outlined above.

Floor Action

The Senate acted on HR 9827 on Dec. 20. There was no Republican opposition. A roll-call vote was not demanded at any time.

Debate, which lasted four hours, was hardly more than perfunctory, though key lawmakers predicted during the talk that HR 9827 was only the beginning, that new and stiffer tax boosts were yet to come.

Chairman Walter F. George (D Ga.) of the Finance Committee told the Senate the House presumably would begin work on a new tax bill at an early date.

Sen. Eugene D. Millikin (R Colo.), the Committee's ranking GOP member, said there would be an increase in all kinds of taxes by the next Congress. He said he approached the matter "not with joy, but through necessity."

Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.), a leading advocate of an excess profits tax, said there were many discriminations in HR 9827 but he hoped a better measure would be written in the next Congress. He said stock market reaction indicated the corporate community did not feel the bill to be a heavy one.

Ralph E. Flanders (R Vt.) said the Senate bill "is commonly considered by sensible people to be better than the House bill." He added, "it is merely less bad than the House bill." Flanders advocated later establishments of a general corporation tax of 60 per cent and elimination of the "misbegotten excess profits tax."

Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) said the profits levy had not gone far enough, that the tax revenue the government was getting would not raise more than one fourth the proposed volume of defense spending. He offered an amendment to raise the corporate tax ceiling from 60 to 70 per cent. He was defeated on voice vote.

The Senate also killed an effort by Sen. Brien McMahon (D Conn.) to renew a suspension of the copper import tariff. Both McMahon and Rep. James T. Patterson (R Conn.) had written Sen. George earlier in the week urging that a House-passed bill (HJ Res 494) continuing the tax suspension, be inserted in HR 9827. When McMahon sought to do this on the floor, George persuaded the Senate to table McMahon's motion. (For details of action on HJ Res 494, see page 637)

Final Action

After adopting a number of other amendments, described as minor technical changes to remove the possibility of the bill's working undue hardships upon some firms, the Senate passed HR 9827 on a voice vote.

ADMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Robert S. Kerr (D Okla.) — Apply the growth formula to companies beginning business 30 days after start of base period. Voice.

Edwin C. Johnson (D Colo.) — Nullify Treasury Department ruling that amount of defense facility subject to amortization under 1950 Revenue Act should be reduced by the amount representing its economic usefulness after five years.

McMahon (D Conn.) — Provide alternative credit based on 1936-39 income in case of depressed industries. Voice.

George (D Ga.) — Expressly remove utility companies from liability of computing value of intangible assets in income. Voice.

Millikin (R Colo.) — Remove from liability of excess profits tax any subsidies paid by government for encouragement, exploration and development of strategic minerals. Voice.

O'Mahoney (D Wyo.)—Add trona to list of strategic minerals granted exemptions. Voice.

George (D Ga.) — Make growth formula available to corporations which have had stepped-up sales of a new product in base period, such as television manufacturers. Voice.

Homer E. Capehart (R Ind.) — Make special allowances for corporations consolidated in base period. Voice.

Francis J. Myers (D Pa.) — Permit growth companies having strikes or fires in 1949 to substitute in their special formula 50 per cent of their 1948 income in lieu of low 1949 earnings. Voice.

Henry C. Dworshak (R Idaho) — Add beryllium to list of strategic minerals. Voice.

CONFERENCE

A joint conference of the House and Senate was appointed and met at once to iron out differences between the differing versions of HR 9827 passed by the two chambers. Their aim was to reach a compromise in time for it to be passed and sent to the White House before the then-approaching Christmas holidays.

The conferees were: Reps. Robert L. Doughton (D N.C.), Jere Cooper (D Tenn.), John D. Dingell (D Mich.), Wilbur D. Mills (D Ark.), Daniel A. Reed (R N. Y.), Roy O. Woodruff (R Mich.) and Richard M. Simpson (R Pa.);

Sens. Walter F. George (D Ga.), Tom Connally (D Tex.), Harry Flood Byrd (D Va.), Eugene D. Millikin (R Colo.) and Robert A. Taft (R Ohio).

By Dec. 22, this group had compromised the differences in the bill. Most Senate changes were accepted, but the following adjustments were made:

1. The ceiling on the amount of a corporation's income that might be taken in taxes — regular income and excess profits — was set at 62 per cent.

2. The amount of borrowed capital that might be used as a basis for computing a corporation's net capital acquisitions after the excess profits tax base period was limited to 75 per cent.

Senate Agrees

The conference report was submitted to the Senate Dec. 22, the same day the report was completed. The Senate agreed without debate and by voice vote. Chairman George (D Ga.), of the Finance Committee, pointed out that the conference had accepted "practically all the Senate amendments."

House Accedes

The House failed to act immediately, as expected, but instead decided to hold over the tax bill until after the Congressional recess for Christmas.

On Jan. 1, in the closing hours of the 81st Congress, the measure won final House approval. The vote, as in the Senate, was by voice. The House action came less than a minute after Chairman Doughton (D N. C), of the Ways and Means Committee, asked for consideration of the conference report.

LAW ENACTED

President Truman signed HR 9827 into law Jan. 3, 1951, at 10:13 a. m. It became Public Law 909. The following is the statement he issued after signing the measure:

"The Excess Profits Tax Act of 1950 . . . is the second step the Congress has taken since the start of aggression in Korea to help meet the rapidly rising costs of national defense. The Congress and its committees have acted with commendable speed in completing this complex piece of legislation and thereby have provided evidence for all to see that we are determined to finance the defense program without jeopardy to the stability of our economic system or the soundness of the government's finances.

"The 1950 tax legislation has increased federal revenues very substantially. However, the task ahead of us will require more and much heavier taxes. I shall, in due course, submit to the Congress recommendations for substantial tax increases.

"We shall have to canvass and recanvass every revenue possibility, including the new excess profits tax. In developing this tax in the few weeks at its disposal, the Congress may have been overly liberal in its concern over some corporations in special circumstances.

"Some of the provisions in this bill will probably give an undue advantage to some corporations, especially in relation to the tax burdens necessarily borne by others. Excessive exemptions and relief provisions create inequities and reduce the government's revenue needlessly.

"For this reason, I am requesting the Secretary of the Treasury to keep excess profits tax under continuous review so that if it develops that some of its provisions need revision, the facts can be placed before the Congressional committees without delay."

LOBBY STANDS

The excess profits tax issue evoked some big-scale activity from pressure groups and throughout the month and a half the bill was before Congress the effects of this activity was seen in the many changes made in the measure as it coursed its way through the legislative processes.

At the outset, two business groups came out against the profits tax and promised to fight its adoption.

The first was a group especially formed — on a temporary basis — to fight the tax. It was known as the Business Committee on Emergency Corporate Taxation. It announced its organization Nov. 10 for the express purpose of opposing the tax.

Comprised of 100 principal officers of industrial, financial and other business organizations, the committee said in its opening announcement that its platform would favor a "defense profits tax" — an increase above present rates — but would oppose a tax at high marginal rates on profits earned in excess of those of any defined previous base.

An excess profits tax, it said, was "inflationary and destructive", breeding waste and extravagance.

Beardsley Ruml, New York economist and tax authority, was active in formation of the committee. He issued a prepared statement in connection with the organization announcement, denouncing the excess profits tax as "harmful and dangerous. . .in spite of its superficial plausibility. . ."

Wilson Wyatt, former federal housing expediter, was to serve as the committee's general counsel, while William M. Hickey, president of the United Corporation, New York, was to be executive chairman. Leon Henderson, former OPA chief, and O. B. Jesness, of the University of Minnesota, were to be the committee's consulting economists.

In a related subsequent development, the Committee for Economic Development, a business policy group whose members included many listed in connection with the newly organized BCECT, Nov. 14 issued a call for a $7 billion tax boost in 1951, without an excess profits levy.

The CED's research and planning subcommittee set forth this substitute for the excess profits tax plan:

A $3 billion jump in individual income taxes, starting Jan. 1.

Another $3 billion boost in corporation income tax rates, also effective Jan. 1.

And perhaps $1 billion, or as much as is needed, from revised excise taxes, effective July 1, 1951.

Registered Lobbyists

Registrations of lobbyists reflected the widespread preoccupation of business with the pending excess profits tax legislation.

As the first big post-election legislative battle started, the Truman Administration and labor unions lined up in favor of carrying through on the proposals for an excess profits tax, while business firms and organizations lined up, either against such a tax or for special modifications to suit their problems.

Such organizations as the National Association of Manufacturers, Committee for Economic Development, Machinery & Allied Products Institute, National City Bank of New York, the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, and newly formed BCECT put out statements or literature opposing excess profits taxation and generally favoring temporary increases in the corporate tax level, instead. The Tax Foundation, Inc., circulated a statement pointing to the difficulties in drafting suitable excess profits legislation.

Eight of the fourteen sets of registrants after Oct. 25 were preoccupied with excess profits tax problems, Congressional Quarterly News Features' study of the Clerk of the House of Representatives' files revealed. These were in addition to those who filed earlier in October, as well.

The Louisville law firm of ex-Housing Expediter Wilson W. Wyatt (once a top man in the Truman Administration) filed for the BCECT to fight against the Administration measure. H. Cecil Kilpatrick, a Washington attorney and former American Bar Association tax chief, filed for the Murphy Corporation, of El Dorado, Arkansas, also to oppose the excess profits levy, or to seek other provisions than those of the World War II law. The Washington law firm of Miller & Chevalier, including a former chief counsel of Bureau of Internal Revenue, Robert N. Miller, filed for Pacific Lighting Co. and subsidiaries, also on the same tax issue. Miller's firm said in its registration that another Washington law firm which included Gerald D. Morgan, who stated he was an author of the Taft-Hartley law, also was to work on the matter.

The television industries which sought special allowances because they were growing during the proposed 1946-49 base period, were represented in the new registrations by Morton Poe Fisher, Baltimore attorney and former Justice Department tax lawyer who filed for the TV Excess Profits Tax Committee, N.Y.C., and for WAAM, Inc., Baltimore, by the law firm of Pierson and Ball, of Washington, which filed for Radio Television Manufacturers Association, Washington, and by Andrew G. Haley, of the Washington law firm of Haley, McKenna and Wilkinson, which filed for three television station operators.

House Votes: FDIC, Taxes

1. Federal Deposit Insurance Act Amendment (S 2822). Increase insurance protection from $5,000 to $10,000; revise assessment formula; redefine certain terms; and delete obsolete provisions. Committee amendment to permit FDIC to spend $15 million for a new building in the District of Columbia. Rejected, 91-226, July 20, 1950. (See p. 572)
2. Revenue Act of 1950 (HR 8920). Reduce certain excise taxes; close tax loopholes; increase corporate income taxes in upper brackets. Reed (R N.Y.) motion to recommit. Rejected, 147-239, June 29, 1950. (See p. 573)
3. Revenue Act of 1950 (HR 8920). Passage of bill. Passed, 375-14, June 29, 1950.
4. Revenue Act of 1950 (HR 8920). Resolution (H Res 842) disagreeing to Senate amendments and sending bill to conference. Sabath (D Ill.) motion to order the previous question (close debate). Rejected, 106-226, Sept. 14, 1950.
5. Revenue Act of 1950 (HR 8920). Eberharter (D Pa.) amendment in nature of a substitute for H Res 842, providing for disagreement to Senate amendments and sending bill to conference with an amendment directing proper committees to report excess-profits bill during second session of 81st Congress. (Resolution, as amended, was subsequently adopted by voice vote). Agreed to, 331-2, Sept. 14, 1950.
6. Revenue Act of 1950 (HR 8920). Conference report. Agreed to, 328-7, Sept. 22, 1950.
7. Excess-Profits Tax Act of 1950 (HR 9827). Impose 75% excess-profits tax on all earnings exceeding 85% of 1946-49 average. Reed (R N.Y.) motion to recommit and instruct committee to report with amendment to impose excess-profits tax only on earnings exceeding 100% of 1946-49 average, and increase present corporate income surtax rate by 5%. Rejected, 145-252, Dec. 5, 1950. (See p. 689)
8. Excess-Profits Tax Act of 1950 (HR 9827). Passage of bill. Passed, 378-20, Dec. 5, 1950.

House Votes: Defense Production, Imports, Copper

1. Defense Production Act of 1950 (HR 9176). Establish system of priorities and allocations; provide for expansion of productive capacity and requisitioning of scarce materials and facilities; strengthen credit controls and regulate commodity speculation. Spence (D Ky.) amendment to give President stand-by authority to stabilize prices and wages by voluntary controls or the establishment of ceilings. Agreed to, 393-3, Aug. 10, 1950. (See p. 624)
2. Defense Production Act of 1950 (HR 9176). Wolcott (R Mich.) amendment to exempt from credit controls construction started before 12 noon, Aug. 3, 1950. Agreed to, 202-188, Aug. 10, 1950.
3. Defense Production Act of 1950 (HR 9176). Wolcott (R Mich.) amendment to confine credit controls to consumer and real-estate credit. Rejected, 173-224, Aug. 10, 1950.
4. Defense Production Act of 1950 (HR 9176). Cooley (D N.C.) amendment to delete provisions for control of commodity speculation. Agreed to, 198-194, Aug. 10, 1950.
5. Defense Production Act of 1950 (HR 9176). Passage of bill. Passed, 383-12, Aug. 10, 1950.
6. Import Control Extension (S 3550). Extend import controls over fats and oils, rice and rice products to June 30, 1951. Murray (R Wis.) motion to recommit. Rejected, 72-264, June 29, 1950. (See p. 645)
7. Copper Import Tax Suspension (H J Res 502). Continue to June 30, 1951, the suspension of import taxes on copper. Passage under suspension of the rules (two-thirds majority, or 228 yeas, required). Passed 283-58, July 17, 1950. (See p. 637)
8. Freight Forwarders Status (HR 5967). Clarify status of freight forwarders with respect to motor carriers. Ford (R Mich.) motion to recommit. Rejected, 145-233, Aug. 9, 1950. (See p. 640)

Senate Votes: Defense Production

1. Defense Production Act of 1950 (S 3936). Wherry (R Neb.) motion to table motion to reconsider above vote. (Success of Wherry action would prevent reconsideration.) Agreed to, 47-42, Aug. 21, 1950. (See p. 624)
2. Defense Production Act of 1950 (S 3936). Fulbright (D Ark.) amendment to extend same real estate credit controls to government-insured mortgages as would be applied to privately-financed mortgages. Rejected, 34-54, Aug. 21, 1950.
3. Defense Production Act of 1950 (S 3936). Bricker (R Ohio) amendment to eliminate selective controls and provide that if and when price controls are put into effect, wage controls will also be applied. Agreed to, 50-36, Aug. 21, 1950.
4. Defense Production Act of 1950 (S 3936). Williams (R Del.) amendment to require simultaneous imposition of wage and price controls as of the same base period, to be selected from a 30-day period prior to June 24, 1950. Rejected, 11-74, Aug. 21, 1950.
5. Defense Production Act of 1950 (S 3936). Capehart (R Ind.) amendment to strike out Title IV (dealing with price and wage stabilization). Rejected, 6-75, Aug. 21, 1950.
6. Defense Production Act of 1950 (S 3936). Byrd (D Va.) amendment to limit life of the Act to period ending Aug. 31, 1951. Rejected, 38-48, Aug. 21, 1950.
7. Defense Production Act of 1950 (S 3936). Taft (R Ohio) amendment to strike out Title V (authorizing President to establish means for settlement of labor disputes). Rejected, 29-57, Aug. 21, 1950.
8. Defense Production Act of 1950 (HR 9176). Passage of HR 9176, embodying text of S 3936, as amended. Passed, 85-3, Aug. 21, 1950.

Senate Votes: Taxes, Nominations

1. Revenue Act of 1950 (HR 8920). George (D Ga.), Millikin (R Colo.) substitute for O'Mahoney (D Wyo.), Connally (D Tex.), excess-profits tax amendment, directing House Ways and Means Committee and Senate Finance Committee to report, as early as possible during the 82nd Congress, a bill providing for excess-profits tax retroactive to October 1, or July 1, 1950. Agreed to, 42-36, Sept. 1, 1950. (See p. 573)
2. Revenue Act of 1950 (HR 8920). McFarland (D Ariz.) motion to table McMahon (D Conn.), Benton (D Conn.) amendment continuing suspension of copper import taxes from July 1, 1950, to June 30, 1951. (Adoption of this motion killed the amendment.) Agreed to, 52-22, Sept. 1, 1950.
3. Revenue Act of 1950 (HR 8920). Thye (R Minn.) amendment to provide that proceeds from sale of cattle used for breeding or dairy purposes, if owned by taxpayer for more than 3 months, shall be considered capital gains. Agreed to, 52-13, Sept. 1, 1950.
4. Revenue Act of 1950 (HR 8920). Douglas (D Ill.), Humphrey (D Minn.), Lehman (D N.Y.), Langer (R N.D.) amendment to strike out portions of committee bill validating use of family partnerships for income-tax purposes. Rejected, 18-42, Sept. 1, 1950.
5. Revenue Act of 1950 (HR 8920). Humphrey (D Minn.), Douglas (D Ill.), Langer (R N.D.) amendment to strike out language in committee bill reducing holding period for "long term" capital gains to 3 months. (Effect of this amendment is to retain the present holding period of 6 months.) Agreed to, 37-24, Sept. 1, 1950.
6. Revenue Act of 1950 (HR 8920). House amendment to Senate amendment, directing House Ways and Means Committee and Senate Finance Committee to report an excess-profits tax bill during the second session of 81st Congress, instead of 1st session of 82nd Congress. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.) motion to reconsider action by which Senate disagreed to the House amendment. Rejected, 34-36, Sept. 14, 1950.
7. Pike Nomination. Nomination of Sumner T. Pike to be member of Atomic Energy Commission. Confirmed, 55-24, July 10, 1950.
8. Hutchinson Nomination. Nomination of Martin A. Hutchinson to be a member of the Federal Trade Commission (reported unfavorably by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce). Rejected, 14-59, Aug. 9, 1950.

82nd CONGRESS
FACTS AND FIGURES

Democrats Retain Control, But GOP Gains

5 In Senate, 27 In House

Based on complete returns, the Republicans gained five Senate seats and 27 in the House in the Nov. 7 election. Summaries, as of Jan. 18, 1951, follow:

SENATE

	Holdovers	Re-elected	New	Totals for 82nd Congress	Net Gain or Loss
Democrats	31	12	6	49	-5
Republicans	29	10	8	47	5

HOUSE

	81st House	82nd Congress	Net gain or loss
Democrats	259	235	-27*
Republicans	169	199	27*
ALP	1
Vacancies	6	0

* Of the six vacancies in the House of the 81st Congress, three were of seats formerly held by Democrats, three of seats held by Republicans.

Excludes Frazier Reams (Independent-Ohio), former Democrat, who says he will "sit in the middle of the aisle."

RECORD TURNOUT

American voters shuffled the legislative pack Tuesday, Nov. 7, when they went to the polls in record numbers -- for an off-term election -- to name 36 Senators and 435 Representatives.

Some 41,000,000 ballots were cast. This compared with a vote of 48,833,680 for 1948, the last Presidential election, and 34,410,324 for 1946, last off-term vote.

The Democratic party retained control of both houses of Congress but its margin in the Senate will be only 49-47, the smallest since the 72nd Congress of 1931-33.

In the House, complete results gave the Democrats 235 seats to 199 for the Republicans. One seat was won by an Independent, Frazier Reams of Ohio, a former Democrat, who says he will "sit in the middle of the aisle."

The GOP gained in both houses -- a net total of five additional seats will be held by Republicans in the Senate, and of 27 in the House.

Although the Democrats retained numerical control, the Republican gains strengthened the GOP-Southern Democrat coalition that in the past often has seized the reins, particularly on domestic issues. In the Senate, particularly, party defection or absence of only a few Democrats may swing control to the minority party.

In 33 gubernatorial contests, the Republicans reversed the trend of 1948 and elected seven nominees to replace Democratic governors. The Democrats went into the election with a 29-to-19 majority but the GOP emerged with 26 governorships to the Democrats' 22.

Actually only six Members of the "new" Senate and only 59 of the Representatives of the 82nd Congress made their Congressional debuts. The others either were incumbents or served at previous sessions.

Ranking Democrats found the going tough. The list of distinguished Democrat election victims included Sen. Scott W. Lucas (Ill.), the party's Senate floor leader; Sen. Francis J. Myers (Pa.), Senate whip; Sen. Millard E. Tydings (Md.), chairman of the Armed Services Committee, Sen. Elbert D. Thomas (Utah), chairman of the Labor and Public Welfare Committee.

Lucas lost to a former Representative, Everett M. Dirksen. Myers went down before Republican Governor James H. Duff. For Tydings, the defeat was his first at the polls since his election to the Maryland general assembly in 1920. He had served four terms in the Senate, but was beaten by a political novice, John M. Butler. Thomas lost to Wallace F. Bennett, the Republican former president of the National Association of Manufacturers.

Charges of a Senator who wasn't on any 1950 ballot figured in some of the Democratic defeats, analysts generally were agreed. Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy criticized administration handling of his charge that Communists had infiltrated the State Department. Tydings was chairman of the subcommittee which handled the probe. However, a member of the subcommittee, Sen. Brien McMahon (D Conn.), retained his seat by scoring one of his party's most impressive victories.

In California, Rep. Helen Gahagan Douglas was defeated by Rep. Richard M. Nixon, with the same issues dominant. Sen. Robert A. Taft (R Ohio) beat Joseph T. Ferguson, backed strongly by labor. Ohio gave Taft a victory margin of 425,000, larger than that he received in his two previous Senate bids.

Senate Membership For 1951

Following is a list of the Senate membership for the 82nd Congress. Newly elected Senators are marked with an asterisk. The listing includes the 49 Democrats, by states, first and then the 47 Republicans, by states.

NINE WOMEN MEMBERS

Feminine representation in the 82nd Congress consists of Sen. Margaret Chase Smith (R Maine) and eight Representatives, two Democrats and six Republicans. There are two new House GOP members, Ruth Thompson (Mich.) and Marguerite S. Church (Ill.). The 79th Congress had ten women, all others in the last 15 years had nine.

Three Democrats who served in the 81st Congress are missing -- Mary Norton (N.J.) who retired, Helen Gahagan Douglas (Calif.), who was defeated for the Senate, and Chase Going Woodhouse (Conn.) who lost her seat.

The first woman ever to be elected to Congress was Jeanette Rankin (R Mont.) in 1916. She voted against the declaration of the first World War, was defeated, but came back again for one term in 1940.

Ruth Thompson of Michigan replaced veteran Albert J. Engel (R) who retired after twenty years of service. She was a county probate judge, served in the state legislature and as legal counsel to the Social Security Board. During World War II she was an aide in the office of the Adjutant General and later an adviser to the European Army of Occupation.

Marguerite S. Church of Illinois succeeded to the seat vacated by the death of her husband, Rep. Ralph Church. She had been top political aide to her husband in his 14 years in the Illinois legislature and 14 years in the House. She campaigned for children's homes, maternal health and highway safety.

The women retaining seats include: Mrs. Edith Nourse Rogers (R Mass.), Mrs. Edna F. Kelly (D N.Y.), Mrs. Cecil Harden (R Ind.), Mrs. Frances Bolton (R Ohio), Mrs. Katharine St. George (R N.Y.), Mrs. Reva Beck Bosone (D Utah).

RANKING MEMBERS

Ranking Republicans, in period of service, in the 82nd Congress, are Arthur H. Vandenberg (R Mich.) in the Senate and Daniel A. Reed (N.Y.) in the House.

The ranking Democrats are Kenneth McKellar (Tenn.) in the Senate and Adolph J. Sabath (Ill.) in the House.

Sabath, with service dating from March 4, 1907, has the longest service record of any member of the 82nd Congress -- the 23rd consecutive term.

SENATE AGES, PROFESSIONS

When sworn in for the 82nd Congress, the Senate was younger than it was in the 81st. The average Senator was 56.6 years old at the beginning of the new Congress in January, as compared with an average age of 58.5 for the Senate at the beginning of the 81st Congress. The 14 new Senators pulled down the figure; their average age was only 50.7 years.

The oldest Senator was Theodore Francis Green (D R.I.), who was 83. Sen. Kenneth McKellar (D Tenn.) at 81 was the only other Senator over 80 years of age. The oldest freshman Senator was James H. Duff (R Pa.), 67. Willis Smith (D N.C.) was the second oldest freshman -- he was 63.

Russell B. Long (D La.) was still the "baby" of the Senate at the age of 32. He has been a Senator for two years. Three other Senators are in their 30's: George A. Smathers (D Fla.), 37, Richard M. Nixon (R Calif.), 37, and Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.), 39.

All but five Senators served in some government capacity or were engaged in some type of civic service (other than the armed forces) or politics before they came to the Senate. Clinton P. Anderson (D N.M.) was Secretary of Agriculture; William Benton (D Conn.) was assistant secretary of state, Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.) was first assistant postmaster general, and Brien McMahon (D Conn.) was assistant attorney general.

Twenty-seven previously served as governors of their states, 30 are former Representatives and 11 served as judges. While Senator, Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) served as chairman of Americans for Democratic Action, a liberal political group.

Those Senators without previous political or civic service when they came to the Senate were Eugene D. Millikin (R Colo.), who was a practicing attorney in Denver, John J. Williams (R Del.), a grain dealer in Millsboro, Del., Homer E. Capehart (R Ind.), Washington, Ind., farmer and manufacturer of electrical appliances, and Wallace F. Bennett (R Utah), president of a Salt Lake City glass and paint company.

Fifty-nine Senators are veterans, all but five serving in either the first or the second world wars. Forty-seven served in the first world war, 16 in the second, and five -- Guy M. Gillette (D Iowa), Edward Martin (R Pa.), Theodore F. Green (D R.I.), Tom Connally (D Tex.), and Matthew M. Neely (D W.Va.) -- served in the Spanish-American war.

Martin served in all three wars and retired from the armed services as a major general. Gillette and Connally served in the first world war as well as the Spanish-American war, and Sen. Robert C. Hendrickson (R N.J.) served in both world wars. Fifteen hold commissions in the reserves, including the two Washington Senators, Harry P. Cain (R) and Warren Magnuson (D).

Professionally the new Senate is heavily weighted with lawyers. Sixty-one, two thirds of the Senate membership, are attorneys. They hold both Senate seats in 20 state delegations. Sen. Pat McCarran (D Nev.) is former chief justice of the Nevada Supreme Court, and Sen. Walter F. George (D Ga.) was associate justice of the Georgia Supreme Court before he came to the Senate in 1922.

Willis Smith, North Carolina freshman, is a former president of the American Bar association.

Many Senators served in judicial capacities and as district attorneys before coming to the Senate.

Twenty-eight Senators have a business or banking background. Sen. Herbert H. Lehman (D-Lib N.Y.) is a former partner in the international banking firm of Lehman Brothers of New York.

Among those who built up successful business organizations before coming to the Senate were William Benton (D Conn.), advertising; Homer E. Capehart (R Ind.), manufacturer of electrical appliances; Hugh Butler (R Neb.), grain and flour mills; Robert S. Kerr (D Okla.), oil; Wallace F. Bennett (R Utah), paint and glass, and Ralph E. Flanders (R Vt.), machine tools manufacturer. Bennett is former president of the National Association of Manufacturers and Flanders was chairman of research for the Committee for Economic Development.

Twenty Senators are farmers or have agricultural financial interests. Sen. Clinton P. Anderson (D N.M.) is not only former secretary of agriculture but also owns and operates large farms in New Mexico and South Dakota. Both Senators from Delaware, North Dakota and South Dakota have been engaged in agricultural undertakings, and most still are.

Sen. George D. Aiken (R Vt.), ranking minority member of the Senate Agriculture Committee, maintains a nursery in which he grows wild flowers commercially at Putnam, Vt. Sen. Harry F. Byrd (D Va.) is a highly successful apple grower with orchards in Virginia and West Virginia.

Five members of the Senate Agriculture Committee have farming interests--Guy M. Gillette (D Iowa), Anderson (D N.M.), Aiken (R Vt.), Milton R. Young (R N.D.), and Edward J. Thye (R Minn.).

Twelve members of the Senate have been or are members of the newspaper profession. Both South Dakota Senators have been editors, Karl E. Mundt (R S.D.) of two publications and Francis Case (R S.D.) of his own paper. Sen. William F. Knowland (R Calif.) is assistant publisher of the Oakland Tribune. Sen. Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr. (R Mass.) and Sen. A.S. Mike Monroney (D Okla.) were political writers for the New York Herald Tribune and the Oklahoma News respectively before they went into politics themselves.

The teaching profession has 12 "graduates" in the Senate, including the following: J. William Fulbright (D Ark.), former president of the University of Arkansas;

Wayne Morse (R Ore.), former dean of the University of Oregon School of Law; Irving M. Ives (R N.Y.), founder and former dean of the New York State School of Industrial and Labor Relations at Cornell University; Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.), former economics professor at the University of Chicago; H. Alexander Smith (R N.J.), former secretary of Princeton University.

Sen. Lester C. Hunt (D Wyo.) is the only representative of the medical or dental profession in the Senate. He is a dentist.

HOUSE AGES, PROFESSIONS

As sworn for the 82nd Congress, House members were somewhat older, as a group, than the members of the 80th and 81st Congresses. The 81st House was the same age the 80th had been--51. The average age of the House as sworn in Jan. 3, 1951 was 52 years. The 59 new members of the House were five years younger than the hold-overs, their average age being 47 years.

The oldest member of the House was Rep. Robert L. Doughton (D N.C.), who was 87. Other House members over 80 were: Adolph J. Sabath (D Ill.), 84, Charles A. Eaton (R N.J.), 82, and Merlin Hull (R Wis.), 80.

The youngest member of the new House was a freshman, Patrick J. Hillings (R Calif.), who was 27. Other youngsters in the House were: Lloyd M. Bentsen, Jr. (D Tex.), 29, and John Bell Williams (D Miss.), 32, Frank E. Smith (D Miss.), 32, and William H. Bates (R Mass.), 32. Sixteen members of the House were 35 years old or younger.

Rep. Benjamin James (R Pa.) refuses to divulge his age, so it is not listed. He told CQ that he never gives his age to anyone.

Three fourths of the members of the House--369--were previously engaged in civic service or politics before coming to the House. Hugh Mitchell (D Wash.) is an ex-Senator and Fred G. Aandahl (R N.D.), a new member, is former governor of North Dakota. B. Carroll Reece (R Tenn.) and Hugh Scott, Jr. (R Pa.) are former chairmen of the Republican National Committee. Fourteen new members of the 82nd Congress are former Representatives who won their old House seats back in the November election.

They are J. Edgar Chenoweth (R Colo.), Horace Seely-Brown (R Conn.), Richard B. Vail (R Ill.), Fred E. Busbey (R Ill.), Howard H. Buffett (R Neb.), John J. Dempsey (D N.M.), John C. Butler (R N.Y.), William E. Hess (R Ohio), George A. Bender (R Ohio), George B. Schwabe (R Okla.), John P. Riley (D S.C.), W. J. Bryan Dorn (D S.C.), B. Carroll Reece (R Tenn.) and Charles J. Kersten (R Wis.).

There are 224 veterans in the House, many of whom are veterans of World War II, and some were veterans of both World War I and II. A number of war heroes are serving in the House, including Brig. Gen. (ret.) James P.S. Devereux (R Md.), who commanded the Marines on Wake Island early in World War II; Charles E. Potter (R Mich.), who lost his legs in the past war; Hugh J. Addonizio (D N.J.) in eight World War II campaigns; Peter W. Rodino, Jr. (D N.J.), knighted by King Umberto of Italy for his military service in Italy during and after the war; John A. Blatnik (D Minn.), parachuted behind enemy lines into Yugoslavia during the war; and Alfred D. Sieminski (D N.J.), who learned of his election to Congress while fighting in Korea.

Others with outstanding military records include James E. Van Zandt (R Pa.), who has served in both wars, has three times been national commander of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, and twice commander of the VFW Department of Pennsylvania, and Kenneth B. Keating (R N.Y.), also a veteran of both wars and presently the holder of a reserve commission as a brigadier general.

Like the Senate, the House has a large membership of lawyers. There are 243 lawyers in the House, many of whom also served in judicial capacities before they came to Congress. Two of the eight women members of the House have been judges and practicing attorneys. Reva Beck Bosone (D Utah) was a municipal court judge in Salt Lake City before coming to the 81st Congress, and Ruth Thompson (R Mich.) was a county probate judge prior to taking her House seat in the 82nd.

There are 143 members of the House who were in business or banking before coming to the House. Both members of the Montana delegation have a business background; Mike J. Mansfield (D Mont.) is by profession a mining engineer and Wesley A. D'Ewart (R Mont.), a livestockman. The delegations with most representatives having business or banking backgrounds are Virginia (seven out of nine Congressmen) and Colorado (three out of four). Leslie C. Arends (R Ill.) is a banker, Alfred D. Sieminski (D N.J.), the owner of a large laundry, and Thurmond Chatham (D N.C.), is the nationally known blanket manufacturer.

The former teachers and educators in the House total 70. Four members have been college deans, Chester E. Merrow (R N.H.), Hal Holmes (R Wash.), John R. Murdock (D Ariz.) and Alvin E. O'Konski (R Wis.). Among the former professors in the House are M. G. Burnside (D W.Va.), Eugene J. McCarthy (Minn.) and Clarence Cannon (D Mo.), who taught political science, economics and history, respectively.

The 66 members of the House who have been farmers or have farming interests include eight members of the House Agriculture Committee. The richest agricultural state in the nation--Iowa--does not have a single farmer in its delegation. And there is only one farmer--Rep. Edward H. Rees (R Kan.)--in the delegation of the wheat state of Kansas. The Minnesota delegation has five farmers, North Carolina five, Virginia five and Ohio five. Walter K. Granger (D Utah), Wesley A. D'Ewart (R Mont.) and Hal Holmes (R Wash.) are ranchers; Lowell Stockman (R Ore.) farms wheat, Jack Z. Anderson (R Calif.) grows pears, Wayne N. Aspinall (D Colo.), peaches and A.S. Herlong, Jr. (D Fla.), oranges.

The newspaper business has contributed 49 men to the House. They include publishers Joseph W. Martin, Jr. (R Mass.), Richard W. Hoffman (R Ill.), and Clarence Brown (R Ohio), and former publisher Clinton D. McKinnon (D Calif.).

Only eight Congressmen have a background in medicine or dentistry. John T. Wood (R Idaho), A. L. Miller (R Neb.), Ivor E. Fenton (R Pa.), Thomas E. Morgan (D Pa.), and E. H. Hedrick (D W.Va.), are doctors; Roy O. Woodruff (R Mich.) and Walter E. Brehm (R Ohio) are dentists, and Walter H. Judd (R Minn.) has been a medical missionary.

Representatives who have been active in the labor movement are John F. Shelley (D Calif.), former president of the California American Federation of Labor; Leonard Irving (D Mo.), president and business agent of the Construction and General Laborers Union Local 264 (AFL); John C. Butler (R N.Y.), who has held many offices in the longshoremen's and grain elevators' union; Roy W. Wier (D Minn.), active in the Minneapolis trade union movement; George M. Rhodes (D Pa.), president and business agent of the Central Labor Union (AFL); John E. Fogarty (D R.I.), president of Bricklayers Union No. One of Rhode Island; Gardner R. Withrow (R Wis.), state representative for the railroad brotherhoods.

65 NOVICE CONGRESSMEN

Two women and 63 men who never before had served in Congress were among those elected Nov. 7 to the Senate and House of Representatives.

Six of the newcomers are Senators. Fifty-nine, including both the women Members, were elected to the House.

There were 60 Senate holdovers, whose terms expire in 1953 and 1955. Of the 36 Senators elected Nov. 7, 22 were incumbents. Eight others elected to the Senate for the first time had served in the House of Representatives, and four of the eight were in the House of the 81st Congress.

Republicans predominated among the six Senate "novices", four to two. The newcomers were Herman Welker (R Idaho), John M. Butler (R Md.), Willis Smith (D N.C.), James H. Duff (R Pa.), John O. Pastore (D R.I.), and Wallace F. Bennett (R Utah).

The eight new Senators with House experience included Reps. Francis Case (R S.D.), A. S. Mike Monroney (D Okla.), Richard M. Nixon (R Calif.) and George A. Smathers (D Fla.); and former Reps. Frank Carlson (R Kan.), Earle C. Clements (D Ky.), Everett M. Dirksen (R Ill.), and Thomas C. Hennings, Jr. (D Mo.).

59 NOVICE REPRESENTATIVES

Of the 435 Representatives, approximately 87 per cent served in some previous session. Of the 435 Members, 362 were incumbents successful in bids for re-election, while 14 were ex-Representatives who successfully campaigned again. Of the incumbents, 217 were Democrats and 145 Republicans. There were three Democrats and 11 Republicans among the returning ex-Representatives. All told, these were 59 novice Representatives:

Comparisons

The Congress convening January 3, 1951, was:

1. -- the 82nd. The U.S. first Congress served 1789-91 during the first administration of George Washington and had 25 Senators, and 65 Representatives.

2. -- the 11th Democratic-controlled Congress elected this century, the eighth elected out of the last nine Congresses in the past 18 years. Since 1900 the Republicans have controlled 13 Congresses and two have been split, with opposing parties in control of the Senate and House.

3. -- the same size, in both House (435 members) and the Senate (96 members) as all Congresses since March, 1913.

Other Facts

The 82nd Congress has the smallest Democratic majority in the House of any Congress since the 78th (1943-45), and the smallest in the Senate since 1913, when the total membership was fixed at 96. There will be 235 Democrats, 199 Republicans and one Independent in the House and 49 Democrats and 47 Republicans in the Senate.

Largest Democratic House majority in any Congress was in the Roosevelt era, the 75th (1937-39), when there were 333 Democrats in the House. Smallest Democratic House membership in any Congress since the start of the Civil War was in the 37th (1861-63) when there were 42 Democrats in the House.

Largest Republican House majority in history was in the 67th Congress (1921-23), when 300 Republicans sat in the House. Smallest GOP House minority since the Civil War was in the 52nd Congress (1891-93), when it was 88. Smallest GOP House minority since the Roosevelt landslide of the '30s was 102 in the 75th Congress (1937-39).

TRUMAN'S GIGANTIC "DEFENSE" BUDGET

Calls For $71.5 Billion To Meet National Security Needs

President Truman Jan. 15, 1951, gave the new Congress a gigantic "defense" budget requesting $71,594,295,676 for the fiscal year starting July 1, 1951, to meet what he called "the compelling demands" of national security.

Moreover, actual appropriations to be requested of Congress for fiscal 1952, including programs for which spending will spread over several years, will amount to $94,429,199,960 in new cash and obligational authority, said the President.

He told the legislators that his budget, by far the largest in peacetime history, reflected this country's determination to achieve a two-fold goal:

First, to strengthen itself and its allies sufficiently to deter further Communist aggression;

Second, to create reserves of trained manpower and industrial capacity to permit immediate mobilization of "all out power" if that should become necessary.

COVERS FUTURE PAYMENTS

The difference between the actual expenditures outlined in the budget and the new obligational authority to be asked of Congress, the President explained, was accounted for by the fact that obligational authority may be granted in one fiscal year while spending in part, may occur in subsequent fiscal years. He estimated that about three-fifths of the new $94.4 billions to be requested would not be spent until fiscal 1953 and would, therefore, show up in the expenditures budget of that year.

Appropriations and expenditures falling in the "national security" category formed the backbone of the budget. In this category were included not only direct military costs, but also costs of financing America's allies, controls on and encouragement of defense production, civil defense, merchant marine expansion, defense housing and dispersal of key government offices from congested downtown Washington.

But by far the largest chunk of the big total set aside for all these purposes was for military services and international security. Ninety per cent more was to be spent for these two programs in fiscal 1952 than in the current year, he pointed out, and even these spiraling costs might be dwarfed in turn by 1953 and 1954 outlays if mobilization needs required it.

DEFENSE FUNDS

Here is how the budget figured the defense funds that would actually be spent in fiscal 1952 and the new money authorizations Congress would be asked to make for security. (Totals in millions).

	Expenditures		New obligational authority
	1951	1952	1951	1952
Military	$20,994	$41,421	$54,181	$60,971
Internat'l security	4,726	7,461	8,985	10,956
Total	$25,720	$48,882	$63,166	$71,927

The President calculated that about 69 per cent of the actual expenditures to be made in 1952 would go for these defense purposes, while nearly 75 per cent of the new authority would be earmarked for them.

This would leave spending for all other government projects, including non-defense items, permanent and indefinite appropriations (mostly interest on the national debt, and public assistance grants), veterans' services and other "fixed and continuing" charges, at $19,084 million, compared with the $20,166 million for the 1951 fiscal year. The new appropriations to be asked of Congress will include $19,445 million for these same projects, he said. An estimated $11,800 million was earmarked for non-defense purposes, or about 14.5 per cent of the expenditures budget.

Where Defense Money Goes

Though the President provided no analysis of proposed defense spending, officials at the Pentagon estimated, when questioned, that more than half the new billions to be requested for them would go for arms in fiscal 1952.

Biggest emphasis was to be placed on buying heavy equipment, with over $30 billion to go for such items as planes, tanks, electronic equipment, recoilless weapons and rockets. Another $3 billion to $5 billion was to go for the expanded military public works program, particularly that for the Air Force. And still another $25 billion was to be spent on overhead, half of which to be earmarked for pay and allowances and the other half for oil, gasoline, food, clothing and transportation.

Military officials said the figures would be detailed before the appropriations committees of Congress but they added they thought it would be mid-March before they could present a specific 1952 budget request. Meanwhile, they emphasized, with the President, that the $60 billion request in the budget was just a "guesstimate" and the most likely thing about it was that if would change by the time it was taken out of the public pocketbook.

COMPARES BUDGETS TOTALS

The President laid most stress on the budget's actual spending program, which he said was 78 per cent above expenditures for all purposes for the fiscal year which ended June 30, 1950. Here is his outline of budget totals: (in billions)

	1950 (actual)	1951 (est'd)	1952 (est'd)
Receipts	$37.0	$44.5	$55.1(x)
Expenditures	40.1	47.2	71.6
Deficit	$ 3.1	$ 2.7	$16.5

(x) Without new taxes.

NO DEFENSE DETAILS

Details of the amounts requested for defense spending were cloaked in some mystery. They were purposely omitted from the budget, said the President, "because of the extensive planning involved." He stressed, also, that the estimated grand totals were tentative and "subject to substantial adjustment as the defense program progresses."

Aside from purely defense matters, however, the President was more specific.

He devoted much space in his official message to renewed calls for many long-standing Fair Deal proposals which he left unmentioned in his previous State of the Union and Economic Report messages.

For instance, among his major recommendations were a proposed $300 million program of federal aid to education, the controversial Fair Employment Practices Commission, the St. Lawrence seaway and power project and six other public power projects, expanded unemployment compensation, federal health insurance and the Brannan plan of direct production payments to farmers.

PLAN SUPPLEMENTAL REQUEST

In addition, the President said he would ask Congress for a supplemental appropriation of $10,924,081,848 for the fiscal year of 1951. If granted, that would boost the total fiscal year appropriations voted by Congress to $87,459,449,977, as against actual expenditures of $47,210,485,596.

Truman said the existing public debt of $257,400,000,000, most of which accumulated in World War II, would rise to about $260 billion by June 30, 1951, as a reflection of the financing of the budget deficit for the current year.

And he warned: "The amount of the increase in debt beyond June 30, 1951 depends upon the extent to which the projected deficit for the fiscal year 1952 is reduced through the enactment of additional tax legislation."

SOME CUTS PROPOSED

Despite the mighty upswing in government spending outlined in the 1952 budget, the President's requests for 130 different appropriation items were cut $5.7 billion below amounts approved by Congress for the same purposes in fiscal 1951, a Bureau of the Budget analysis showed.

Numerically, most of the items -- 110 -- were in non-defense categories, but the total reduction on them, moneywise, amounted to only $723 million, according to the Bureau.

On the other hand, it said, 15 defense items were cut $3.6 billion below the 1951 Congressional grants, while estimates for veterans' benefits, one of the government's so-called "fixed and continuing" costs, were reduced $1.3 billion under what was made available previously.

DEFINITION OF TERMS USED IN BUDGET, TABLES

APPROPRIATIONS: Authorizations to spend money from the Treasury. Most are not only authority to spend but also authority to incur obligations requiring future payment of money. They include money to pay such previous obligations. They usually are available for obligation for one year and for making payments on obligations an additional two years.

CONTRACT AUTHORIZATIONS: Legal authorization empowering an agency to enter into contracts and incur obligations prior to enactment of an appropriation. They must be followed by an appropriation to liquidate costs incurred under authorization.

GENERAL AND SPECIAL FUNDS: The general fund consists of all money in the Treasury which is not earmarked for specific purposes by law, such as interest on the public debt. The special fund is made up of money which federal law says must be spent for specific purposes.

BUSINESS ENTERPRISE AND REVOLVING FUNDS: The business enterprise funds are those which finance operations of government-owned corporations, while revolving funds finance intragovernment operations such as supplies.

NEW OBLIGATIONAL AUTHORITY: Sum of authorizations, less that portion which is to liquidate contract authorizations. This figure is the best measure of all authorizations (granted or recommended) for the government to make commitments in a given year.

ACTUAL EXPENDITURES: Sum of all authorizations except contract authorizations, the actual cash to be paid out in a given year. Cash outgo authorized in any given year will not all occur within that year.

For the 130 items upon which slashes were recommended, Congress in fiscal 1951 granted $10,703,076,621. President Truman asked $4,949,522,015 for the same purposes in fiscal 1952, said the Budget Bureau, making ultimate budget cuts in these categories of $5,753,554,606.

ADVANCE FINANCING

The big cut in defense items, however, was only an apparent one, for the reductions were recommended largely in the atomic energy and strategic materials stockpiling programs and maritime ship construction -- programs for which large advance financing was provided in 1951 appropriation measures.

The non-defense cuts were confined in the biggest instances to rural electrification, reclamation and flood control and the federal-aid hospital construction program. Personnel costs, for the most part, bore the biggest slashes.

The reduction in the fixed costs of government came about largely, it was shown, by the gradual tapering off in veterans adjustment and miscellaneous benefits provided under the GI Bill of Rights.

Foreshadows Tax Increase

The President's budget showed a prospective deficit of $16,456,000,000 between estimated 1952 government income of $55,138,000,000 and outgo of $71,594,000,000. "At this time," he told Congress, "sound public finance and fiscal policy require that we balance the budget. I shall shortly submit to the Congress recommendations for new revenue legislation." He gave no proposed figure.

But at his annual budget seminar, held 48 hours before the official document was released, he explained that the size of the deficit did not necessarily reflect the size of the tax increase impending. He held out no hope that it would be smaller than $16 billion -- on the contrary, he said it might go as high as $20 billion under his "pay-as-we-go" policy of defense financing. He said, furthermore, he wanted it made retroactive to Jan. 1.

He hoped, also, he said, to have his proposals in final shape when the House Ways and Means Committee started hearings on new revenue legislation.

NEW, "REPEAT" PROPOSALS

Here is the legislative program the President outlined in his budget message. It fell into three categories -- programs he said Congress ought to consider (in CQ survey below marked with one asterisk), new programs he previously had sought to expand (two asterisks), and new programs he sought for the first time (three asterisks).

MANAGEMENT OF GOVERNMENT'S PROGRAM

 Increase in tax revenues to attain a balanced budget to provide "sound financial basis for what may be an extended period of very high defense expenditures."

 Emergency reorganization powers.

 Reorganization and improvement in civil service system and in administration of postal service.

MILITARY SERVICES

 Drafting of another one million men for the active military services, bringing total to 3.5 million; and increase strength and degree of readiness of all reserves.

INTERNATIONAL SECURITY, FOREIGN RELATIONS

 Further new and augmented appropriations for foreign military and economic aid, with the latter program redirected to support European military build-up rather than promote general economic expansion.

 Increase of $1 billion in lending authority of Export-Import Bank.

 Extension of Reciprocal Trade Act.

 Additional (expansion) appropriation of $100 million for Voice of America broadcasts.

FINANCE, COMMERCE AND INDUSTRY

 Extension of Defense Production Act.

 Government authority to construct plants and facilities, with initial appropriation of $700 million.

 More comprehensive allocation controls over production and distribution, with initial appropriation of $273 million.

 Extension and re-expansion of rent control, costing initially $23 million.

 Extension of export control program.

LABOR

 Establishment of a Fair Employment Practices Commission.

 Raise unemployment insurance benefits and coverage.

 Repeal Knowland amendment to 1950 Social Security Act which, he said, "puts a premium on court litigation as a means of determining claims for unemployment benefits."

TRANSPORTATION AND COMMUNICATION

 Increase postal rates by $361 million.

 Authorize construction of St. Lawrence River seaway and power project.

 Authorize three other new river and harbor developments with power potentialities, at a cost of $28 million: Hells Canyon, The Dalles and Ice Harbor in the Columbia Basin, and Gavins Point on the Missouri River.

 Separation of the airline subsidy element from payments to airlines for costs of handling and transportation of mail.

NATURAL RESOURCES

 Three new defense-required power developments along with transmission facilities, costing in all $1.5 billion: Old Hickory on the Cumberland River, a steam plant in the Tennessee Valley and St. Lawrence project.

 Increase of electric power capacity by 20 million kilowatts, to be provided by above projects and those in river and harbor category.

 Extension of credit facilities and loan fund authorized for Indians.

AGRICULTURE AND AGRICULTURAL RESOURCES

 Direct payments to producers in lieu of market price supports (Brannan Farm Plan).

 Authorize Commodity Credit Corporation to pay transportation and repackaging costs on surplus commodities distributed to public and private welfare organizations.

 Enable CCC to control speculative trading and strengthen its regulation of commodity exchanges.

 Authorize additional $3 billion in FHA mortgage funds to insure loans for private defense housing, military housing loans and to finance rental housing near atomic energy developments, as well as authorize $150 million for federal construction of defense housing where private means cannot finance them.

EDUCATION AND GENERAL RESEARCH

 Federal aid to states for operating expenses of elementary and secondary schools, with initial appropriation of $290 million.

SOCIAL SECURITY, WELFARE AND HEALTH

 Bring all employed persons under social security.

 Pension and insurance plans for special groups to supplement social security system as industry pensions already do for several million workers.

 Prepaid medical insurance on national basis, with provision for extra payroll tax of one fourth of one per cent for period preparatory to initiation of program.

 Authorize transfer of railroad workers' retirement fund taxes to government trust fund as quickly as collected, rather than in advance of collection.

 Aid to medical and related schools to help them meet costs of instruction and construction of new facilities to accommodate increased enrollments, costing initial $25 million.

 More adequate federal grants to states for strengthening local health services, costing initially $5 million.

VETERANS SERVICES AND BENEFITS

* "Material changes" in GI Bill of Rights (to be determined after "careful study" of the matter) if this legislation is extended to cover veterans of Korean war.

 Provision for a free and automatic $10,000 life insurance policy for servicemen in Korea and establishment of a special new system of voluntary insurance open only to veterans whose insurability at standard rates has been impaired by military service.

GENERAL GOVERNMENT

 Authorize dispersal of government offices outside of central area of District of Columbia, costing initially $164 million.

 Customs simplification.

 Reduce effects of federal real estate acquisitions on state and local governments by special payments program.

LOBBY ROUNDUP

Lobby Investigation

SUMMARY

Both private and governmental activities intended to influence legislation were investigated in 1950 by the House Select Committee on Lobbying Activities. Rep. Frank Buchanan (D Pa.) headed the group, which was created by the House of Representatives in 1949 and originally financed by a $40,000 grant. (See CQ Almanac, Vol. V, Page 69.) By the time the so-called Buchanan Committee wound up its controversy-marked work in 1950, however, a total of $95,000 had been appropriated for it.

Buchanan stated the primary purpose of the lobby investigations by his group was to determine how to make the Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act clear and effective. In connection with this goal, the Committee held numerous hearings — many of them marked by party-line conflicts within the group itself.

Republicans on the Committee and other GOP Congressmen charged that Buchanan attempted to smear legislative pressure groups on the business or private side, but to whitewash what they termed the "government lobby." Buchanan, however, maintained that he was doing everything possible to be fair in the selection of the groups he questioned during the course of the investigations.

Before start of public hearings March 27, 1950, the Committee did extensive preparatory work, consisting of studies of reports filed under the lobby act; a field investigation of various organizations and their files; and a brief study of the reporting procedure used in compliance with the lobby law. The Committee then put through a consolidation of lobby report forms, in a move intended to improve the workings of the law.

Hearings Open

First phase of the hearings dealt with the "role of lobbying in representative self-government" and brought testimony by authorities in the fields of political science and public opinion. On this subject the Committee's premise was that lobbying is essential to the democratic process.

The "housing lobby" was the subject of the second phase of the hearings and the Committee heard from both opponents and proponents of public housing. Groups testifying included the National Association of Real Estate Boards, the National Association of Home Builders, the National Housing Conference, and the CIO's National Housing Committee.

After a brief study of contingency fee payment of lobbyists working for removal of excise taxes, the Committee launched the major phase of its investigation — a study of the techniques and financial sources of organizations lobbying indirectly by trying to influence public opinion.

Groups appearing at these hearings included the Committee for Constitutional Government, the National Economic Council, the Foundation for Economic Education, the Americans for Democratic Action, and the Public Affairs Institute.

Row Over Subpoenas

Prior to the start of these hearings June 6, Buchanan subpoenaed three organizations. They were the Committee for Constitutional Government, the National Economic Council and the Constitutional Educational League. Buchanan summoned them after they refused to turn over some of the information his field investigators requested.

The Committee's authority was immediately challenged by CCG, which sought an injunction against the Committee. The injunction was not granted, but the issue was kept in Federal courts after an appeal by CCG.

All three groups subpoenaed appeared at the June 6 hearings but only NEC furnished the information Buchanan requested. Leaders of the other two — Edward Rumely of CCG, and Joseph Kamp of CEL — were later cited for contempt of Congress.

Hearings on indirect lobbying continued through the summer and brought out such information as the franking by some lawmakers of CCG literature in the form of reprints from the Congressional Record, and donations of large corporations to National Economic Council.

Meanwhile, in June, the Committee had made one of its most controversial moves when it mailed detailed questionnaires to 173 corporations, requesting information on their spending relating to lobbying. Buchanan specifically asked for their contributions to eight groups, including CCG and two of its affiliates, as well as to all other tax-exempt organizations.

Immediate criticism of the Committee chairman came from some Congressmen and a few of the corporations, but most of the firms responded by answering the questionnaire.

The Committee also looked into federal lobbying, both because of a study of that phase of legislative influence was part of the group's mandate from the House, and because of charges by Republicans that various Administration leaders were illegally using appropriated funds for lobbying.

Principal recipients of charges of federal lobbying were Agriculture Secretary Charles F. Brannan and Federal Security Administrator Oscar Ewing. Both were cleared by reports made at Buchanan's request by the General Accounting Office. The Committee also heard several other officials describe their activities on behalf of Administration programs.

Some Conclusions Drawn

The Committee's summary of its findings on lobby techniques and financing appeared Oct. 24 as an Interim Report. It was signed by the majority members only. The Republicans protested the report, said its timing was political, and stated they would later draft a minority report.

The report brought into the lobbying picture many activities previously considered "educational" in nature. The indirect lobbying described in the report included advertising, "educational" work of foundations, and campaigns to stir grass roots pressure in the form of letters to Congressmen. The majority report said lobbying in all its aspects is a billion dollar industry.

Minority Views

Republicans also contested the part of the majority report clearing federal officials of charges that they had unduly attempted to influence legislation. In this, Republicans said, the Democrats approved illegal use of appropriated funds.

The Committee report on corporations, summing up their answers to its questionnaire, stated that corporations spent $32 million during the last three years on activities related to lobbying. This included money spent for advertising and pamphleteering on legislative topics. Buchanan said those activities were "good and proper", but should be "carried on in a goldfish bowl".

SIX MORE REPORTS

In the last week of December, the Democratic members of the Committee issued six more reports. They were: A final statement on the Committee's work, with legislative recommendations, studies of the Conference of American Small Business Organizations, American Enterprise Association, spending by farm and labor groups, and two indexes of individuals and organizations reporting under the lobby act.

With one exception, this group of reports was not signed by Republican Committee members. Charles Halleck (R Ind.) approved the report consisting of one of the two indexes.

Following issuance of the majority's final report, Republicans on the Committee accused their opposite numbers of "a lack of objectivity and a political bias."

In its majority report on the Conference of American Small Business Organizations, the Committee warned Congress to be "wary" of any figures which CASBO "offers as a measure of small business opinion."

The report challenged CASBO's claim that it voiced the "deliberated opinion" of small business, and said the Conference sometimes used "loaded questionnaires, prepared resolutions" and other devices in "ascertaining and formulating such opinion."

According to the Committee, the Conference sought and obtained contributions from "interests that do not fit into any reasonable concept of small business."

"The positions advocated by the conference . . . are not readily distinguishable from the conventional views of large business," the Committee asserted.

It studied the activities of CASBO as a "typical" small business group. CASBO had about 2,875 individual and company memberships, and operated on an annual budget of approximately $50,000, according to the Buchanan study.

Sixty per cent of CASBO's funds came from dues ranging from $10 to $100, said the report. Other funds came from contributions.

The Buchanan Committee's report on the American Enterprise Association said AEA's finances and techniques should be "fully disclosed under the lobbying act." The group had not registered or filed reports under that law, Buchanan's group pointed out.

The majority report said the New York City organization received substantial support from large business groups, including General Motors and Bethlehem Steel and presented "only the viewpoint of big business."

"Impartiality" Challenged

"There is no reason to accept its claims of objectivity and impartiality when every material circumstance points to a contrary conclusion," asserted the Committee.

The report said AEA was incorporated in 1943 as a non-partisan, nonprofit educational organization and was tax exempt as a corporation operated exclusively for educational purposes. AEA's primary activity, said the Committee, was the preparation and distribution of printed materials bearing on public issues.

"AEA can render a useful service by its intelligent presentation of industry's point of view," advised the Committee, but its viewpoint should not "be hidden behind a self-serving facade of objectivity."

The Committee report cited correspondence among AEA officials to indicate it promoted a Republican-Southern Democrat coalition favorable to large corporations. The group's president was Sinclair Weeks, identified in the report as Republican National Committeeman from Massachusetts and chairman of the Finance Committee.

Recommendations

The final report recommended that Congress keep a constant check on the operation of laws governing both lobbying and the conduct of elections. It proposed setting up a permanent Joint Committee for those purposes because of the "close relationship between the influencing of legislation and the influencing of elections."

The report concluded that "existing safeguards on lobbying by government agencies are adequate" and that more information should be obtained about "pressure group operations."

"There should not be regulation of attempts to influence legislation," the Committee advised, "but only identification of pressure groups and the sources of their support."

The Democratic members' report said most of the money spent to influence legislation went for advertising and pamphleteering.

The report recommended:

1. Exemption of radio and television broadcasting from the Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act, which already excepts newspapers and other periodicals.

2. Deletion of the word "lobbying" from the title of the Act (the word does not appear in the law's text) because the word has an "evil connotation to many people."

3. Repeal of the section which prohibits lobbyists convicted of violating the Act from attempting to influence legislation for a three year period after conviction.

4. Simplification of reporting requirements to require less detailed reports of expenditures.

5. Exempting from provisions of the Act all persons spending or receiving less than $1,000 yearly to influence legislation.

6. Prohibition of contingent fee lobbying agreements.

Comment on Law

Concerning the meaning of the law, Buchanan said that after a study of the legislative history of the Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act, his Committee concluded the "principal purpose" clause of the measure does not limit its coverage. Many groups have contended that the Act applies only to those whose "principal purpose" is influencing legislation.

Buchanan also said the Act applies to both direct lobbying and indirect lobbying, which includes advertising and pamphleteering.

Republicans on the Committee, however, chided the majority members for failing to recommend changes in the lobby registration law. The primary purpose of the Committee was to find ways of improving the Act, they contended.

"We must insist, along with almost every witness who appeared before the Committee, that the present act is uncertain, indefinite, ambiguous and contradictory," the Republicans said. "Certainly every person is entitled to know what can and cannot be done under terms of the Act." They pointed out that the statute carries criminal penalties for failure to comply properly.

BACKGROUND

President Truman's attack on lobbies during his 1948 campaign for reelection was followed by a demand from the International Association of Machinists for an investigation of lobbies. American Federation of Labor, Congress of Industrial Organizations, and other groups backing the Truman program joined in the call for a lobby probe.

The new 81st Congress in its first month heard resolutions for a lobbying investigation. Sen. Harley M. Kilgore (D W.Va.) introduced such a proposal (S Res 23) calling for a Senate Judiciary Committee probe.

Buchanan's Resolutions

In March, 1949, Rep. Frank Buchanan (D Pa.) introduced two resolutions, one calling for a joint House-Senate investigation. A deluge of more than 9,000 letters condemning rent control largely motivated his proposal of one of the plans, Buchanan said.

Subsequently other resolutions, including two more by Buchanan, were introduced and had committee consideration. (See 1949 CQ Almanac, Vol. V, p. 69.) The House approved a joint investigation in May. After failure of the Senate to approve the resolution, the House Aug. 12 approved H Res 298 calling for an investigation by a House committee alone.

Proposal Passed Over

An altered form of the resolution providing for a joint investigation was reported Aug. 10 by the Senate Rules Committee, but three times before Congress adjourned, the proposal was passed over on a call of the calendar.

The involved maneuvering necessary to get the House investigation approved indicated important elements in both houses were not completely behind the idea. Several legislators said that the provision for probing governmental lobbying as well as that of private groups had to be added in the House Rules Committee to get Republican support necessary to send the measure to the floor.

Group Named, Financed

On Oct. 6, 1949, Speaker Sam Rayburn (D Tex.) created a House Select Committee, on Lobbying Activities, a seven-man Committee with Buchanan as chairman. A week later the House approved a $40,000 appropriation for the Committee.

Members named to serve with Buchanan were Henderson L. Lanham (D Ga.), Carl Albert (D Okla.), Clyde Doyle (D Calif.), Clarence J. Brown (R Ohio), Charles A. Halleck (R Ind.), and Joseph P. O'Hara (R Minn.).

Although the probe originally was called for by trade unions, four of the appointed Committee members had voted for Taft-Hartley enactment, which labor groups considered a touchstone of whether a lawmaker was a "friend" or "enemy" of unions. The four were: Albert, Brown, Halleck and O'Hara.

After their appointment, the Committee members reviewed the lobby control statute. This law was the Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act which went into effect Aug. 2, 1946. It was part of the Congressional reorganization law which was enacted at that time.

Law Reviewed

Here are some of its principal provisions:

1. Registration by any person "who shall engage himself for pay or for any consideration" to attempt to influence legislation and applies also to any person or organization who solicits or receives money in connection with legislation, or whose "principal purpose" is to attempt to influence legislation.

2. Filing of quarterly financial reports from registrants and from organizations raising funds used in connection with legislation.

3. Maximum penalty under the act is a $5,000 fine, not more than 12 months imprisonment, or both, plus the additional proviso that anyone convicted of the misdemeanor shall be suspended from lobbying for three years from the date of conviction. Penalty for violation of this provision is a maximum of $10,000, five years or both.

The lobby law did not set up what forms groups or individuals should use in registering or filing reports. So the Senate Secretary and the House Clerk, charged by the law with responsibility for receiving reports, devised three forms on which to record the information.

Those reports filled out by lobbying groups were simply received and filed by the Senate and House officials, who made no attempt to check discrepancies. In connection with the report forms, some organizations registered differences of opinion on how they should be filled out — if at all. Some confusion prevailed as to what the original Lobbying Act meant, and just what groups were supposed to do to comply with it.

Preparation For Hearings

Although the Buchanan group was established in October, 1949, it deferred the opening of hearings until it had made months-long preparations for them. The extensive Committee preparations for the hearings were divided into three phases:

1. The preliminary studies, using financial reports and registrations, of a large number of groups;

2. The surveys, of smaller numbers of groups; and

3. The field investigations, in which the Committee investigators visited the offices of organizations and examined the files. These investigators were armed with warrants, which they usually did not use, and with the memoranda based on gleanings gathered from the report forms.

Buchanan attributed delay in the Committee's opening hearing date partly to difficulties in gleaning information from the three report forms used by organizations and individuals filing under the lobbying law.

Accordingly, it studied the triple form system during March and recommended a consolidation of the three forms into one. The Senate and House officials promptly complied with Buchanan's formal recommendation, issued March 31.

The report forms which had been used since the enactment of the lobbying law in 1946 were: (1) "Form A", for quarterly financial reporting, usually by organizations; (2) "Form B", for registration under the lobbying law; and (3) "Form C", for quarterly financial reporting, usually by individuals working for client organizations.

The new form called for the same information, but had the advantage of confining it to one piece of paper. It was intended to simplify both the reporting and study of lobby data.

HEARINGS

The long-awaited investigation into lobbying and pressure activities got under way March 27, for three days of what Chairman Frank Buchanan (D Pa.) called "fact finding".

Buchanan called Dr. Hadley Cantril, professor and director of public opinion research at Princeton University, as the first witness. Cantril told the Committee Congressional mail was "notoriously unreliable" as an indicator of public opinion. He said that during debate on wartime draft legislation, mail to five Senators had been analyzed, showing 90 per cent of the writers opposed to the action. But a public opinion survey at the same time, he went on, showed 70 per cent of the people were for it.

Asked by Buchanan what he thought of a political campaign based on the slogan, "Liberty versus Socialism" — the then current Republican battle cry — Cantril said it might "boomerang."

Dr. Stephen Kemp Bailey, assistant professor of government at Wesleyan University, Middletown, Conn., the second witness, risked congressional wrath by suggesting an amendment to the present lobbying law prohibiting the government from paying the salaries of persons earning $11,000 a year or more, unless those persons filed an annual public statement of amounts and specific origins of all income from sources other than the federal government.

This provision would apply to Senators, Representatives, and top government executives, many of whom Bailey said played ball with lobbying groups to push adoption of measures.

"If you are implying that all members of Congress are receiving outside pay, I resent that," snapped Charles A Halleck (R Ind.). "Would you criticize a Congressman because he had acquired a little General Motors or General Electric stock?" queried Clarence Brown (R Ohio).

"No," Bailey replied, "but I would get it in the record." Most of his testimony was a resume of his recent book, "Congress Makes A Law," in which he traced the "unbelievably complex" course of the law from germination of the idea to enactment by Congress.

Round-table Discussion

The Committee March 28 held a round-table discussion of the faults of the lobbying law. There were four participants whose general complaint was that the law does not give a clear definition of lobbying, leaving many persons who deal with government uncertain whether they must register as lobbyists. Dr. Edgar Lane, Princeton University instructor in politics, predicted that "without effective regulation we can look forward to . . . conflict between (pressure) groups which may ultimately tear our society apart."

George B. Galloway, who was staff director for the House-Senate panel that framed the law, said: "There are three or four lobbyists for every Congressman and, representing large, powerful and well-financed national organizations, they constitute a kind of third chamber of the national legislature."

Dr. Belle Zeller, professor of political science at Brooklyn, N. Y., College, cautioned the Committee to remember "there are good and bad lobbies" and that some have "a legitimate and indispensable part to play in influencing legislation." Dr. W. Brooke Graves, specialist in American government and Public Administration for the Legislative Reference Service, said administration of the lobbying law has been disappointing.

Federal "Lobbying"

Pressure tactics and "propagandizing" by government agencies in behalf of executive programs drew attention March 30 from the lobbying investigators. Spokesmen for the two principal policy agencies of the White House and Congress agreed a "fine line" divided what could be termed proper and improper agency methods of influencing Congress.

Roger W. Jones, assistant director of the Bureau of the Budget, defended the right of the President to assign officials from executive departments and the cabinet to make his views available to the people. He added, however, he knew "there are instances in which the Chief Executive indicated he thought individuals went too far." He said he thought anyone registered in the Congressional Directory as an official of a government agency could be construed as a person assigned to influence legislation.

Frank H. Weitzel, assistant to the U. S. Comptroller General, an agent of the legislative branch, said concrete evidence of improper or illegal efforts to influence congressional action "is quite elusive". He pointed out some agencies, like the Agriculture Dept., have special funds for "disseminating and publicizing" programs.

Halleck termed pressure by executive agencies so great "as to really amount to a usurpation of legislative authority."

(Alleged Federal "lobbying" drew separate study from the Buchanan Committee in the spring.

Real Estate Lobby

The National Association of Real Estate Boards came up for scrutiny April 19. Chairman Buchanan said "the real estate lobby" was chosen as the first field of direct investigation because it was "typical," "efficient" and "effective."

Herbert U. Nelson, executive vice-president of the NAREB, was the first witness. His appearance was punctuated by a series of verbal exchanges between Republicans and Democrats on the Committee, but in between the fireworks he disclosed that NAREB spends about $130,000 a year on legislative activity.

Rep. Halleck (R Ind.) started the fireworks by demanding the Committee look into the activity of Agriculture Secretary Charles Brannan in behalf of the so-called Brannan farm plan. Rep. Clarence Brown (R Ohio) supported Halleck. Henderson Lanham (D GA.) accused the two of "seeking to inject political matters" into the lobby investigation. Then Chairman Buchanan interrupted Nelson's testimony to read a copy of a letter Nelson wrote on May 31, 1949, to T. H. Maenner of Omaha, Neb., then NAREB president. In it, Nelson said:

"I do not believe in democracy. I think it stinks. I don't think anybody except direct taxpayers should be allowed to vote. I don't believe women should be allowed to vote at all. Ever since they started, our public affairs have been in a worse mess than ever."

Joseph B. Fleming, counsel for the NAREB, sprang to his feet. The Committee, he contended, had taken from files a private communication that was not germane to lobbying. Republican members joined Fleming in contending that the Nelson - Maenner letter constituted private correspondence and had only faint, if any, resemblance to lobbying.

Nelson's Explanation

Nelson, after the letter had been read, added: "We do not have a democracy in this country. We have a republican form of government. My distrust of democracy, the uncontrolled rule of a numerical majority or the dictatorship of the proletariat, was shared by the founders of the Republic, as can be shown from many quotations from their writings."

In a prepared statement, Nelson previously had told the Committee that NAREB constituted real estate boards in 1,115 communities and had some 44,000 members certified to conduct business as "realtors." He said the association had six registered lobbyists in Washington, including himself. He said that during the last four years, the Realtors' Washington Committee and the Association had expended in the neighborhood of $90,000 a year through contributions. In addition, certain salaries and expenses equalling approximately $40,000 a year had been charged to the budget of the association. RWC is the NAREB legislative arm.

Questioning of Nelson, mostly by Buchanan, also elicited the information that NAREB had conferred with the Foundation for Economic Education on the matter of getting an anti-rent control pamphlet reprinted in Reader's Digest. NAREB, Nelson acknowledged, then purchased and circulated copies of the reprint.

Pressure by "Non-Lobbyists"

The picture of an organization exerting pressure on Congress through "non lobbyist" real estate men, their friends and political figures scattered throughout the country was drawn April 21.

The witness was Calvin K. Snyder, secretary of the Realtors Washington Committee of the NAREB. He related how Congressional "contact men" were appointed in the majority of the nation's Congressional districts and how members of local boards were encouraged to write, wire and phone their representatives in Washington to express views on key issues.

He said in 1945 and 1946 "we created what is known as our enlarged Realtors Washington Committee. Local real estate boards were asked to suggest someone in their board who was familiar with members if Congress within their jurisdiction. It was suggested that this 'someone' should know his Congressman well enough to offer the industry's side of the story to him."

In reply to a question, Snyder said that when the local man could get nowhere with a Congressman he (Snyder) sometimes tried to call on the Congressman himself.

Rep. Halleck said he had heard a lot of talk about how "the sinister real estate lobby gets in the way of the national interest through utterly selfish motives," and asked Snyder what sort of persons make up the local boards. Snyder described the average NAREB member as "a little fellow" with an income of about $5,000 a year, a man who frequently has an office in his own home and who is interested in community problems.

Snyder said the work of the RWC includes helping members of Congress write speeches when they make requests and organizing dinners at which members of the association entertain Congressmen, but at the expense of the individual member.

He closed his testimony by presenting the Committee a list of 17 organizations which he said have taken stands on public housing issues similar to that held by NAREB. He gave the Committee a list of another 64 organizations he said support public housing and oppose NAREB's position on such issues.

"Other Side of Street"

The Committee April 25 turned to what Buchanan called "the other side of the (lobbying) street" and called as its witness Leo Goodman, director of the CIO National Housing Committee. Goodman held the stand more than two days. April 25 he accused "members of Congress" of having abused their franking (free mailing) privileges to help the "real estate lobby" fight Administration rent control and public housing. He did not name any names.

But April 27 he returned to the stand to name Republicans Noah M. Mason (Ill.) and Ralph W. Gwinn (N. Y.), as the two who, he said, mailed out under their frank 4,000,000 copies of House speeches, all opposing rent control, public housing and federal aid to education. Mason immediately denied the charge but Gwinn said he sent "not over 2,000,000" and he wished he had enough money to send 6,000,000.

Lobbying techniques employed by his committee, Goodman testified, included writing speeches for members of Congress and exerting pressure on Congress from members of local unions at the home state or district level.

Halleck commented that it appeared to him the lobbying tactics "on both sides" of the "street" bore a striking similarity.

On April 26, Halleck sought to show that the CIO carried its lobbying activities directly to the polls. He read a copy of the CIO News listing "right" and "wrong" votes of members of Congress and asked Goodman, "Isn't there a definite implication that this list is to be used in political action in 1950?" Goodman replied there was, but he added "political action" was not the function of his committee but of the CIO Political Action Committee.

Realty-Medical Talks

The National Association of Home Builders reported April 28 an unsuccessful attempt in January, 1949, to form a lobbying alliance with representatives of the American Medical Association.

The story was related to the Committee by Frank W. Cortright, executive vice-president of the Home Builders. He said he had had several conferences with the firm of Whitaker and Baxter, AMA public relations representatives, in an effort to work out a plan of cooperation, but nothing came of the meetings. Cortright's plan was to have the two groups work together in campaigns against "socialized medicine" and "socialized housing."

As the Buchanan group continued hearings on realty and housing activities, Lee F. Johnson, executive vice-president of National Housing Conference, told the Committee on May 3 that his group had "never lobbied on Capitol Hill in the accepted sense of that term", since it had never "flooded Members of Congress with letters or propaganda" or called from office to office attempting to influence individual Members. On the other hand, Johnson said, his organization had "worked closely with Members of Congress of both political parties . . . in the development of a national housing policy."

Rep. Brown questioned Johnson on the financial support of his 4,000-member organization, which advocates public housing. Chairman Buchanan said documents of the Conference showed "both sides of the housing lobby street" employ the same techniques in attempts to influence legislation. Correspondence and literature of NHC urged an "avalanche of letters" as part of its "Congressional contact technique", Buchanan commented. (NHC was formerly the National Public Housing Conference.)

The lobby investigators then turned to another aspect of housing and real estate: Lumber and construction. Joseph T. King, legislative counsel for the National Retail Lumber Dealers Association, told the Committee May 17 how association members were assigned to contact Representatives and Senators on pending bills.

The lobbyist also asknowledged he was once "indiscreet" enough to write to an Ohio lumberman suggesting the "purge" of Rep. Frances P. Bolton (R Ohio) because she had been the "only Republican that deserted the Ohio delegation" on a public housing vote. King commented on the letter when Buchanan produced it during the hearings.

"The primary function of the lobbyist," King told the Committee at another point, "is to inform his client on the technical aspects of legislation, evaluate its chances of passage or defeat, and advise his client when to express his advocacy of or opposition to legislation."

Contingency Fee Lobbying

The question of whether contingency fee payment of lobbyists should be outlawed was studied by the Committee May 18, when Samuel P. Haines, who had a contingent fee contract with the 20 Per Cent Cabaret Tax Committee, testified. The agreement called for a $10,000 retainer, $15,000 for expenses and $25,000 additional if a change in the cabaret excise tax was proposed in any legislation.

Haines was to get $35,000 more if the tax actually was cut from 20 per cent to 10 per cent, or $50,000 if the excise was lowered to 5 per cent.

The Congressmen also studied contingent fee arrangements reported in lobby registrations of the National Fur Industry Tax Committee, the Committee to Remove Discriminatory Automotive Excise Tax, and several claimants seeking passage of private bills.

Harold T. Halfpenny, employed by the automotive group, was to get 10 per cent of the tax paid during 1947, in the event the automotive used parts excise was removed. The Lobby Committee staff estimated the fee "could conceivably reach $500,000".

Indirect Lobbying Groups

Two anti-"New Deal" lobby organizations were the targets May 26 of subpoenas issued by the House Lobbying Investigation Committee. Chairman Frank Buchanan said his Committee wanted to find who financed the Committee for Constitutional Government and the National Economic Council.

(The Committee for Constitutional Government keeps a steady stream of pamphlets, newsletters and telegrams aimed at Congressmen. In 1949 it reported spending the second largest amount of money of all organizations reporting under the Lobby Act — $620,-632. Total income reported was $379,-231, but the identity of individual contributors was not revealed. The CCG asks supporters to limit their contributions to $495. Under the Lobby Act, contributors giving less than $500 need not be named.

(The National Economic Council was another large spender in 1949. It listed an income of $139,818 and expenditures of $41,967. The report filed with Congress said that not all of the outgo was for lobbying. "We haven't had time to separate them out," the report explained. Among contributors of more than $500 were listed Empire State, Inc., N.Y.C.; Charles S. Payson, N.Y.C.; Ralph P. Mershon, Miami; Crompton and Knowles Loom Works, J. F. Tinsley, Worcester, Mass.; E. G. Howes, Boston; W. H. Regnery, Joanna Western Mills Co., Chicago.)

Both organizations had pressured Congress in opposition to Fair Deal legislation, the "drift toward socialism", United World Federalists, foreign aid programs, etc.

Third Subpoena Issued

A third subpoena was sent to the Constitutional Educational League — a group not registered under the Lobby Act, but, according to Buchanan, associated with the other two organizations.

The subpoenas went to Edward A. Rumely of the CCG, Merwin K. Hart of the NEC and Joseph Kamp of the CEL. Buchanan said they "have consistently refused to tell Congress who is behind them." They were directed to appear before the Lobby Committee June 6 "to answer why they have refused to give our investigators information concerning their financial angels," Buchanan said.

Both Rumely and Kamp had tangled with Congressional committees before for not revealing their sources of support.

In 1938 Rumely was ordered by a special Senate committee investigating lobbying to produce CCG records. He refused to show them, but was not cited for contempt. In 1944, a special House committee investigating campaign expenditures subpoenaed Rumely in order to obtain CCG records. Rumely refused and was cited for contempt. A hung jury caused a mistrial on the case in 1945, and in 1946 he was acquitted in a retrial.

After World War I, Rumely was convicted of violating the Trading With the Enemy Act, and he served a 30-day prison term. The conviction followed Rumely's purchase of the New York Evening Mail with more than $1 million of money coming from the German Government. Rumely subsequently was pardoned by President Calvin Coolidge.

Kamp was cited for contempt by the 1944 House committee investigating campaign expenditures for failure to produce records. He was tried and convicted.

Witnesses Appear

At the June 6 hearing Hart handed the Committee what he said was all the information requested, along with an appeal to keep the data "out of the hands of the enemies of American liberty".

But Rumely refused to divulge names of purchasers of his organization's publications. And Kamp said he had not had time to prepare the data sought. Kamp also added he would not give the material to investigators until the Committee had "established" that his group's activities come within the Committee's jurisdiction.

In connection with his refusal to supply the information requested, Rumely declared that it was a trade secret and disclosure would do "irreparable injury to the business and good will" of CCG.

Injunction Sought

Meanwhile, the Committee for Constitutional Government had filed in U. S. District Court in Washington a request for an injunction to stop the lobby investigators from "compelling disclosure" of the data sought, or from "further interfering with, molesting, or harassing the plaintiff". The CCG contended in its court brief that the House Committee's action violated the first and fourth amendments to the Constitution. The first guarantees freedom of the press and of speech and the fourth protects from "unreasonable seizure."

A court hearing on this request was scheduled for June 7, but was postponed until June 19, upon request of the House Committee probers, who filed an answer to the injunction motion.

In this answer, the probers contended that previous court decisions established the right of Congress to find out the "source of an individual's or a corporation's receipt of funds". Other cases, they said, upheld the "validity of a subpoena requiring a publisher to disclose the source and receipt of advertisements" and a Congressional committee's right to "compel the disclosure of one's political beliefs and associations".

On June 19, CCG's injunction request was dismissed, and Rumely's organization filed an appeal to the U. S. Court of Appeals in Washington. The Buchanan staff then filed a motion to dismiss the appeal.

Buchanan's action in subpoenaing the three witnesses was challenged by Republicans in his Committee, who asserted he had exceeded his authority, because members of the Committee had not passed on the action.

Voting to confirm his authority in this respect were Buchanan and Reps. Henderson Lanham (D Ga.), Carl Albert (D Okla.), and Clyde Doyle (D Calif.). Voting against were Charles Halleck (R. Ind.), Brown and Joseph P. O'Hara (R Minn.).

Spotlight On NEC

Activities of the National Economic Council, self-described foe of "a socialized welfare state", came up June 20 for study by the Lobby Committee.

Merwin K. Hart, president of the NEC, appeared before the Committee to explain the aims and activities of his organization. At times during Hart's testimony, Committee members engaged in hot procedural wrangles, with Rep. Halleck contending Hart's views were his own business.

Buchanan had given Hart a list of legislative goals supported by the NEC and asked if he wished to comment on them. Hart noted that one called for removal of the present Supreme Court.

"It is our opinion that the present Supreme Court is dedicated to socialism," he said. "The only way to remedy this is to abolish the court by constitutional amendment and set up a new court." He refused further comment after Halleck objected to Buchanan's technique.

Turning June 21 to fund - raising techniques of the NEC, the Committee heard how Lammot and Irenee du Pont assisted the organization in distributing opinion - forming literature. Extensive correspondence between Hart and the Du Ponts was read showing that:

1. Large amounts of money were raised through tax - deductible purchase of literature for donation to charitable, college and other tax-exempt organizations.

2. Irenee du Pont gave the NEC $11,000 in 1948 — all of it for purchase of $10 individual subscriptions for distribution to these tax - exempt organizations.

3. Letters were issued over the name of Lammot du Pont soliciting contributions to the NEC which was described as "doing outstanding work toward stemming the tide of communism and socialism in this country".

Focus on CCG

After looking at the NEC, the Buchanan group turned to a study of the Committee for Constitutional Government. The study soon produced a difference of opinion between some Congressmen and CCG head Dr. Edward A. Rumely.

Rumely argued the First Amendment (freedom of speech and press) protected him from the Committee order. The Buchanan staff said court decisions gave Congressional committees the right to compel disclosure of one's political beliefs and associations and the right to find out an individual's or corporation's source of funds.

The hearings also brought Rumely's statement June 28 that eight to ten million pieces of literature were mailed by CCG under Congressional frank in less than four years. CCG paid for the printing, but got the mailing for nothing, said Rumely, saving what he estimated at $240,000 to $300,000 in first class postage.

A breakdown of Buchanan's figures on CCG mailings gave these amounts for the first four months of 1950: Under frank of Sen. Harry F. Byrd (D Va.) 70,000 mailings; Sen. James O. Eastland (D Miss.), 40,000; Rep. Wint Smith (R Kan.) 100,000; and Clare E. Hoffman (R Mich.), lots of 100,000 and 165,000.

Testimony also brought out that CCG maintained mailing lists including a "millionaire group", one labeled "$500,000 - $1,000,000" and others including clergy, Catholic and Protestant, legislative, judicial, press, radio and publications, and labor leaders.

The House Committee counsel said CCG received contributions designated as payments for the purchase of books. He asserted CCG had refused to accept outright contributions of more than $490 since passage of the lobby law which requires reporting of donations of $500 or more.

ADA Testimony

Francis Biddle, national chairman of the Americans for Democratic Action, told the Lobby Committee July 11 that his organization was "proud to be a part of what might be called the liberal lobby." As such, he said, the ADA joined with others of like views to "influence legislation in the public interest, rather than on behalf of private or commercial interests."

The former Attorney General asserted there was a "growing spontaneous cohesion" among these groups although they were in no sense a united movement. It had come about of necessity, he said, to "withstand the powerful efforts of reactionaries" who seek to "turn the clock back."

Biddle said the ADA does not confine its political support to Democrats alone. Estimating the ADA supported Republicans about 10 per cent of the time, Biddle said he could see no future for the organization if it were "a mere tail" of the Democrat party.

James Loeb, Jr., executive secretary of ADA, testified July 12 that the group carried its anti - communism to the point of refusing to work with other groups which admit Reds and fellow travelers to membership. As examples he cited the Civil Rights Congress and the National Committee to defeat the Mundt Bill. He pointed out ADA opposes the Mundt bill, however.

Another witness, Dewey Anderson, two days later represented the Public Affairs Institute. The Committee questioned Anderson, July 14, to determine if his and similar groups should be required to report under the lobbying act. Anderson compared PAI to the Brookings Institute, both research organizations. PAI was organized by the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, which is still its main sponsor. Dewey said his group does not lobby, under the meaning of the present wording of the law.

Foundation For Economic Education

The Committee heard the Foundation for Economic Education July 18 "in an attempt to throw some light" on whether it should be covered by the lobby registration law. Leonard E. Read of Irvington-on-Hudson, N. Y., the group's president, said the Foundation is interested in education, not lobbying. Its object is "an investigation into the design of society that will best defend free inquiry and free expression", he explained.

Buchanan said the Foundation had distributed almost four million pamphlets and booklets in four years, and its articles had appeared in 389 newspapers and magazines. He put the organization's income at $350,000 yearly. The group is tax exempt and donations to it are deductible by the donor for income tax purposes, said Buchanan.

Some of the pamphlets issued by the Foundation "point up the arguments on one side of specific legislative issues", according to Buchanan. "Roofs or Ceilings", an anti-rent control pamphlet, was "so effective that one real estate lobbying group bought and distributed 500,000 copies", he said.

A Committee exhibit showed some of the nation's biggest corporations were among the Foundation's contributors. Some of them were:

Armour & Company, $20,000; Chrysler Corporation, $40,000; Consolidated Edison Company, $40,000; E. I. du Pont de Nemours $40,000 and Irene du Pont individually, $19,832; General Motors, $50,000; B. F. Goodrich Company $35,000; Gulf Oil Company, $40,000; International Nickel Company, Inc., $20,000; Libby-Owens-Ford Glass Company, $20,000; Marshall Field & Company, $40,000; Montgomery Ward Company, $40,000; National Steel Corp., $22,500; Sun Oil Company, $40,000; U. S. Steel Corp. $40,000; William Volker Fund, $170,000.

Civil Rights Congress

On Aug. 3, the Committee called for the financial records of the Civil Rights Congress, listed by the Attorney General as a subversive organization, but the organization's witness, William L. Patterson, of New York, failed to produce the requested data, even in response to a Committee subpoena.

Patterson said most of what the Committee wanted — records of meetings of the board of directors, a list of officers and members, and all organization reports was not available. He also refused to say whether he is or ever was a Communist.

The next day, when Patterson again testified, a stormy Committee session was climaxed when acting chairman Henderson Lanham (D Ga.) called Patterson a "black s.o.b." and went toward him with doubled fists until police intervened to prevent a clash.

The Committee quickly ended its session, and its counsel, Benedict F. Fitzgerald, Jr., proposed that Patterson be cited for contempt of Congress for refusing to answer questions and produce subpoenaed records of his organization. Patterson said he would not divulge the data, including membership rolls, because the persons would be "hunted and terrorized".

The incident with Lanham occurred after Patterson remarked that he was busy trying to save Negro defendants from "legal lynching" in Georgia and other Southern states when he was subpoenaed to testify before the Committee. When he declared, "Georgia State tried to lynch the Scottsboro boys when I was — ," Lanham interrupted with:

"That statement is absolutely false. The State of Georgia has never tried to lynch a Negro . . . When you say (it) has . . . you simply lie . . . If there is any state where a Negro gets a fair deal when he gets into court, it's in the State of Georgia." The Scottsboro case occurred in Alabama.

When Patterson resumed, he declared the Negro has no rights in Georgia and was again interrupted by Lanham with "That's another lie."

"And yours is a lie too," the witness shot back. Lanham then ran around the Committee table, toward Patterson, cursing him and referring to his race. He broke through the first pair of attendants trying to restrain him but was finally held back by two Capitol policemen.

Federal Agency 'Lobbying'

Charges by Republicans that government officials were unduly attempting to influence legislation resulted in the Buchanan Committee's investigation of activities of two agency chiefs. At issue were Agriculture Secretary Brannan's April 4 talk before a farm meeting in St. Paul, and Federal Security Administrator Oscar Ewing's trip to Europe to study medical plans there.

Also, pursuant to the second part of its two-fold mandate from the House, the Committee studied the problem of legislative activities of executive agencies, and held hearings at which Budget Bureau, General Accounting Office, Housing and Home Finance Agency, State Depratment, and Agriculture and FSA officials testified.

The lobbying law prohibits agency use of approropriated funds to influence legislation.

Brannan's Case

A charge by Sen. George D. Aiken (R Vt.) April 11 that the Agriculture Department used public funds to "hire" an audience for a "political" speech by Secretary Charles F. Brannan was investigaed by the Lobby Committee after two of its Republican members — Halleck and Brown — said the Brannan speech amounted to using Federal funds for lobbying.

Aiken had said that department funds had been used to provide pay and travel allowances for Minnesota farm committeemen to attend a St. Paul Production and Marketing Administration meeting April 4. Sen. Homer Ferguson (R Mich.) called it an example of government officials and employees using appropriated funds to influence legislation.

Sen. Hubert Humphrey (D Minn.) had also addressed the session. Aiken said both Brannan's and Humphrey's speeches "were political from start to finish".

Aiken said sponsors of the St. Paul conference sent notices to all 5,000 PMA committeemen in the state "directing" them to be present. The notice announced a travel allowance and "a regular day's pay" were authorized, according to Aiken.

Subsequently, Sen. Humphrey asserted there was "no basis" for the accusations by Aiken and Ferguson. Humphrey contended the St. Paul meeting was nonpartisan and that Sen. Edward J. Thye (R Minn.) also had been invited to speak but was unable to attend.

Rep. Buchanan entered the picture when he asked U. S. Comptroller General Lindsay C. Warren for an investigation by the General Accounting Office of Aiken's charges. The

G. A. O. report exonerating Brannan reached the Buchanan Committee June 30. Warren's letter to Buchanan said "the salary and travel expenses appear to constitute administrative expenses incurred in carrying out the production and marketing program."

The Committee, however, still wanted to call up Brannan for questioning on the St. Paul episode, but later reversed its decision after hearing from Minnesota's Production and Marketing Committee Chairman, Charles W. Stickney of Spear Lake, Minn., on July 26.

Stickney appeared before the Committee to answer their questions about the Brannan talk, which he termed "magnificent". He also said members of local PMA committees attending the session were paid salaries and expenses while in St. Paul. The 2,344 committeemen present received a total of approximately $42,000, reported Stickney.

After questioning of Stickney was finished. Committee members said they saw no need for Brannan's personal appearance before the Committee.

Ewing's Case

The activities of Oscar R. Ewing, Federal Security Administrator, on behalf of President Truman's compulsory health insurance program came under scrutiny of the Buchanan group July 28. Ewing defended his activities as his right — and also his duty, but he denied flatly he ever had advocated socialized medicine.

Questioned about his trip to Europe the previous winter, Ewing said that it was a "fact-finding mission". In England he said he talked with authorities in favor of compulsory health insurance and those opposed to it. As a result of his visit, he testified, he came away with a number of ideas calling for revisions in the Administration's compulsory health insurance plan. He denied he made political speeches at Federal expense. He said if a speech had "one sentence" of politics in it, he paid his own expenses.

In response to a second request by Buchanan for a GAO report on Ewing, Comptroller General Warren wrote that the FSA appropriation permitted funds for travel expenses "and in view of the showing made as to the official character of the travel, the General Accounting Office is in no position legally to question the allowance of expenses in connection with Mr. Ewing's travel".

CORPORATION QUESTIONNAIRES

One of the major — and most controversial — actions the House Select Committee on Lobbying Activities took in 1950 was sending questionnaires to some of the biggest and best-known corporations in the nation, asking them for certain data. All in all, 173 firms were queried.

The Buchanan Committee called upon the firms to submit detailed information on their expenditures for influencing public opinion or public policy on national issues since Jan. 1, 1947. Although many of the organizations queried had already filed some of this information under the regular lobbying law, some had not. In any event, Buchanan indicated that certain information not reported under the regular lobbying law report procedure would show up on his Committee's questionnaires, if the latter were filled out.

The first batch of Buchanan's questionnaires went to 166 corporations on May 31. In accompanying explanatory letters to each of the 166 firms, Buchanan asked for cost breakdowns on such items as Washington offices, trip to and from Washington, printed matter and advertising on public issues, spending in connection with national organizations which may promote federal legislative programs, and other payments for attempts directly or indirectly to influence lawmaking.

Buchanan specifically asked for "all expenditures in connection with the following organizations:

1. American Enterprise Assn.
2. America's Future, Inc.
3. Committee for Constitutional Government, Inc.
4. Constitutional Educational League
5. Constitution and Free Enterprise Foundation
6. Economists National Committee for Monetary Policy
7. Foundation for Economic Education
8. Public Affairs Institute."

The groups were chosen as examples of organizations engaged in lobbying indirectly, by influencing public opinion. The query concerning them was part of Buchanan's search for information on how the "indirect lobbies" worked and who financed them.

Buchanan said he believed that all of the eight groups had received funds from various firms. His Committee had already studied the files of some of them. Two of the eight — Committee for Constitutional Government and Constitutional Educational League — were targets of subpoenas of the Buchanan Committee after they refused to give some of the information it wanted.

He also requested the following data on newspaper and other periodical advertising by the firms on federal policy issues, in tabulated form: Date, cost of insertion, brief description of the matter, and where published. Copies of the ads were solicited.

His message then asked for detailed data in all contributions to organizations which publish or distribute literature on public issues, which contributions were either to tax-exempt organizations or which were deducted by the donating corporations from its own gross income as either charitable or business expenses under Section 23 (a) or (q) of the Internal Revenue Code,

Buchanan followed up his first letter, of May 31, with a second letter, dated June 9, in which he clarified what the first letter asked for and extended the requested time-limit for receipt of the information from June 15 to June 30.

Immediate Reaction

Soon after it became known that the Buchanan group had undertaken to circularize 166 corporations with questionnaires, considerable protest reaction arose.

Reps. E. E. Cox (D Ga.) and Clare E. Hoffman (R Mich.) launched attacks on the Buchanan Committee because of the 166-firm quiz — Hoffman seeking an investigation of the Committee's staff. Also, Rep. Clarence J. Brown (R Ohio), a Committee member, dubbed the query "un-American" and "unfair."

One week after announcement of the fact that the letter of inquiry had gone out to the 166 firms, most of the firms had acknowledged receipt, and a handful had answered in full. A number of other firms replied with statements of no expenditures for the purposes cited.

However, W. C. Mullendore, president of Southern California Edison Company, in a telegram to Buchanan which was read into the "Congressional Record" by Hoffman of Michigan, denounced the questionnaire as follows:

"In an obvious attempt to use intimidation in limiting the exercise of the right of free speech by millions of citizens in opposing or supporting legislation, you have demanded an entirely unreasonable volume of information to be furnished to you within a 10-day period . . .

"Those who seek to extend power of Government try to close the mouths of citizens who dare to oppose or to inform public opinion . . . and one of the most effective means of accomplishing this subversive objective is to intimidate, through harassing investigations and smearing innuendos, the efforts of citizens to defend themselves . . ."

"Interlocking" Lobbying

Many of the 166 corporations in Buchanan's quiz list had either taken individual, independent action to influence public opinion and public policy-formation on various issues, or had contributed to or cooperated with other firms or associations which had done so.

An example of both pooling with other firms and of independent action was the activity of the General Electric Company which in lobby act statements, reported expenditures of $128,563 in the first nine months of 1949.

Of this sum, $5,000 had been given to Revere Copper and Brass, Inc., toward expenses for work for continued suspension of the copper import duty. The rest was for work on the Taft-Hartley Law: $43,419 for the services of three men, including ex-NLRB member Gerard D. Reilly, $17,965 was for distribution of GE's Taft-Hartley testimony, and $62,171 for distribution of a labor law questionnaire.

Revere Copper reported it collected $15,000 from GE in 1947 and 1949, and a total of $110,500 from 11 firms in those two years. Of these, three on Buchanan's list — GE, International Nickel ($7,500) and Westinghouse Electric Mfg. Co. ($7,500) — gave $30,000 according to Revere's reports.

The GE, General Motors Corp., Curtiss-Wright Corp., and Westinghouse of Buchanan's list were among contributors of $500 or over to the Aircraft Industries Association of America, Inc., in the first half year of 1949, in a typical trade association type of activity.

Corporation contributions to a special-problem kind of organization were shown in the last of 1949 contributors to Unemployment Benefit Advisors, Inc., of Milwaukee and Washington. This organization, operating in the social security field, received a reported $102,415 in 1949, of which Buchanan-list firms contributed, in amounts of $500 or more, as follows:

General Motors Corp., $3,500; Standard Oil Co. (N.J.), and Ford Motor Co., $1,500 each; $1,000 each from Allis-Chalmers Mfg. Co., Armco Steel Corp., Chrysler Corp., General Electric Co., Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co., Shell Oil Corp., Standard Oil Co. (Calif.) Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., and the Texas Co.; $500 each from The Borden Co., Firestone Tire & Rubber Co., B. F. Goodrich Co., Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., Gulf Oil Co., International Harvester Co., Johns-Manville Corp., S. H. Kresge Co., Libby-Owens-Ford Glass Co., Sun Oil Co., and U. S. Rubber Co.

Corporations give also to organizations carrying on opinion-molding activities over a broad field of issues and political-economic philosophy.

An analysis of the financial structure of the National Economic Council, as released by the Buchanan Committee, among other things showed that, according to NEC lobbying law reports, 40 corporations or business concerns, 24 individuals, a charities fund and a cancer and blood research foundation made a total of 104 contributions of $500 or more to NEC from Aug. 1, 1946 to Dec. 31, 1949. Amounts of the contributions are not given, but seem to have averaged about $1,000 each, said the House unit.

Firms on Buchanan's questionnaire list which were among NEC contributors, and number of contributions from each: Empire State, Inc., N.Y. (8); Gulf Oil Corp. (5); Lone Star Cement Corp., N. Y. (5); The Texas Co. (3); Union Carbide & Carbon Co. (2); Armco Steel Corp. (2); Monsanto Chemical Co. (1); Harnischfeger Corp. (1); Sears Roebuck & Co. (1); Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. (1); and Beech Aircraft (1).

More Firms Added

In response to Republican criticism, Buchanan added five firms to his original list of 166. GOP House members had asked why the list omitted the Latex firm (which had sponsored newspaper ads on public issues), the oil interests of Edwin Wendell Pauley (Fortuna), ex-fund raiser for the Democratic Party and friend of President Truman, Convair (of which then-Defense Secretary Louis A. Johnson was a director), and the two Kaiser enterprises.

Buchanan had replied in a House speech June 15 that these firms had not been listed as contributors to certain foundations and other organizations which carry on public opinion-building work, but that he would quiz them, too. The following day questionnaires were sent to: International Latex Corp., N.Y.C.; Fortuna Petroleum Co., c/o Ed Pauley, Los Angeles; Consolidated Vultee Aircraft Corp., San Diego; Kaiser-Frazer Corp., Willow Run, Michigan; and the Kaiser Steel Corp., at Fontana, Calif.

Later Buchanan queried two other Kaiser firms, the Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp. and Kaiser Industries, Inc., and on June 19, the questionnaire went to the American Federation of Labor, Congress of Industrial Organizations, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen and United Mine Workers of America, and to the American Farm Bureau Federation, National Grange, National Farmers Union and National Council of Farmer Cooperatives.

Report

A report on the Committee's findings produced by its questionnaires to corporations was released Oct. 22. More than $32 million had been spent by 152 of the corporations since Jan. 1, 1947, Chairman Buchanan stated.

Three firms, Consolidated Vultee Corp., Inland Steel Co., and Southern California Edison Co., "refused to furnish requested information", according to the Committee, and the rest just did not answer.

The report showed that 65 of the corporations reported spending over $2 million in printing and distributing books and pamphlets dealing with public issues.

An additional $2 million plus was spent by 31 firms for advertising on public issues. Of this amount a CQ analysis of the Committee's work revealed that 23 of the 31 firms were public utilities which said that they had spent sums which total $1,427,556 in a nationwide campaign against TVA, public power, Brannan Plan, national health insurance, etc., and for the Taft-Hartley Law, trimming Federal spending, and taxing presently untaxed organizations.

Most of the rest of the advertising money, CQ's study showed, was spent by Schenley Industries, Inc., against the Luckman Committee's food conservation work early in 1948 and against wartime liquor excise taxes in 1949 ($279,369.79 and $14,036.60 respectively); by the Southern Railway System, which reported $208,715.78 spent mostly against subsidies to transportation competing with the railroads; and by the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company, which spent $125,000 on a suggested way to cure freight car shortages; and $67,334.05 by Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. on unreported topics.

The total advertising funds spent (correcting for a typographical error in the Committee's printed release), was $2,138,224.72.

Contributions Largest Sum

The largest category in Buchanan's release was the close to $27 million reported spent by 125 corporations for contributions deducted as business expenses before taxes and made to groups and foundations which distribute literature dealing with public issues or made to tax exempt organizations.

Buchanan's comment: Each year hundreds of millions of dollars are spent to influence Congress. Most of this money is spent for pamphleteering and advertising. This is good and proper . . . But the Congress and the people have a right to know who is behind the gigantic campaigns to influence Congress either directly or indirectly."

The replies to our letter show very clearly that American business is spending millions of dollars to flood the country with pamphlets, leaflets, and books dealing with public issues like TVA, social security, labor legislation and the like. Millions of these pamphlets are distributed to school teachers, the clergy, and other local community-thought leaders with the intention of thereby indirectly influencing Congress. . .

"The biggest part of the money spent to influence Congress is spent by organizations which have many functions besides lobbying, that is, by business corporations such as the General Motors Corporation, and by trade associations. . ."

GM Data Analyzed

A CQ check into the voluminous GM raw data published by the Committee shows:

GM disbursed $4,867,051 in the years 1947-49 among 375 national, state, and local groups, in contributions which were made either to tax-exempt groups or deducted by GM from gross income before taxes as business expenses or as charitable and similar deductions, and which were made to groups which prepare or distribute literature on public issues.

Of this sum, $2,843,745 went to the Automobile Manufacturing Association, $229,610 to National Association of Manufacturers, $35,000 to Foundation for Economic Education, $30,000 to American Economic Foundation, and $346,200 to various chambers of commerce.

GM did not spend for advertising of a public issue nature, it said. But, according to its answers to another part of the questionnaire, GM spent an estimated $824,317 for printing, and $214,009 for distributing, a total of 22,097,191 copies of 45 publications. These sums would be higher except for those items for which GM reported printing, but not distribution, costs.

The totals given here include the cost of printing and distributing the 7,120,000 copies (averaging 30,000 weekly) of Henry J. Taylor's radio talks, but not the cost of the radio program, about which the Committee did not ask.

It was not clear from the raw data, which the Committee did not analyze, nor add, whether there was some overlapping or duplication, as between the contributions and literature items.

Only Fraction Reported

Buchanan emphasized that the report covered only 173 out of the more than 500,000 corporations in the U. S., and that he believed that the "business of influencing legislation is a billion dollar industry".

FLOOR ACTION

Although most of the activity in 1950 of the House Select Committee on Lobbying Activities took place in the group's own Committee chambers, some of it spilled over onto the House floor.

On March 23, for example, the House voted another $45,000 to finance the Lobby Committee's work. Some discussion — both pro and con of the Buchanan group's program — was held.

On June 8, 1950, the Buchanan group underwent formal attempts to censure it.

Rep. Clare E. Hoffman (R Mich.) introduced legislation proposing suspension of the Select Committee on Lobbying Activities until a new committee could itself investigate the lobby group.

In his resolution, Hoffman said it had been charged that activities of the Lobbying Committee tended "to create fear, to intimidate and prevent individuals, including Congressmen and business organizations, from exercising their constitutional right of free speech and their right to petition Congress." Hoffman denounced the Committee's activities as "an assault on all those who advocate constructional government."

Rep. Henderson Lanham (D Ga.), a Committee member, defended its work and said Chairman Frank Buchanan (D Pa.) "has leaned over backward to try to be fair."

Then, on June 15, Buchanan took the floor himself to defend his choice of organizations his group wished to investigate thoroughly.

Buchanan said his Committee was "not out to 'get' any groups," although he had been criticized by Rep. Clarence Brown (R Ohio) and other GOP committeemen of investigating only "right wing" organizations.

(The Buchanan group then was concerned with the Committee for Constitutional Government, the Constitutional Educational League, and the National Economic Council. In addition, Buchanan had sent his questionnaires to 166 leading corporations for data on their Washington activities. Also critical of Buchanan's operations was Rep. Eugene Cox (D Ga.) who publicly called for the corporations to ignore the questionnaires.)

Interrupting Buchanan's speech, Rep. Hoffman asked if his group were interested in organizations "opposed to the Taft-Hartley law." Buchanan replied that he was preparing to query labor unions on their activities, as well as the Americans for Democratic Action, the Public Affairs Institute, and the Foundation for Economic Education.

His Committee has "operated on both sides of the street," Buchanan said. He declared the 166 corporations sent questionnaires were "a representative group." The Committee was "interested only in the facts about lobbying" and "a reading of the hearings will show we have been most fair and impartial."

Contempt Citations

The major floor action growing from the Buchanan group's investigations concerned the House's decision that witnesses who had refused to testify before the group were contemptuous of Congress. The witnesses had refused to divulge records or data about their organizations, or had refused to answer questions to the satisfaction of the Buchanan Committeemen.

These witnesses were: Dr. Edward A. Rumely, executive secretary of the Committee for Constitutional Government, William A. Patterson, national executive secretary of the Civil Rights Congress, and Joseph P. Kamp, vice chairman of the Constitutional Educational League.

Rumely and Patterson were cited by the House on the recommendation of the Buchanan group, on Aug. 30. Kamp was cited on Aug. 31. (For details of these actions, including debate on the House floor, see page 423.)

Final floor action during 1950 with respect to the Committee came Sept. 21, when the House approved another $10,000 to enable the Committee to wind up its work. This last installment brought to $95,000 the amount appropriated for Buchanan's group.

COMMITTEE REPORT

Democratic members of the House Select Committee to investigate Lobbying Activities Oct. 24 issued a 67-page report on lobbyists and their influence on legislation. Republicans on the Committee did not sign the report.

The majority appraisal, based on extensive hearings earlier this year, said the "billion dollar lobbying industry" is rarely corrupt but offers very real dangers.

The investigators tried to find "whether the disclosures made pursuant to the act reveal the realities of pressure group operation". They concluded "we need more information on lobbying and lobbyists" and changes to make the act more effective.

Rep. Buchanan, chairman of the Committee, said he did not favor curbing lobbying activity but thinks it "should be carried on in a goldfish bowl."

The present system of pressure politics "has assumed extraordinary proportions", will continue to expand, and "may challenge the existence of representative government", the report warned.

No restriction should be imposed on legitimate lobbying, said the Committee. It recommended the following approaches:

(1) Changing the registration law to obtain more information on lobbyists. (2) Stronger political parties because if they "don't accept responsibility the pressure groups will move in by default". (3) Streamline government, "for pressures thrive on government when it becomes too complex for ordinary citizens to understand".

Two answers the Committee report considered but rejected were: (1) Government support for interests which "do not have adequate resources" to compete with better-financed lobbies. (2) Give organizations a formal place in policy making.

Lobbying Classified

The Committee report put the array of lobby techniques into two categories: (1) Direct contact with Congressmen, and (2) the "sharply focused attempt to capture public opinion", thus creating "grass roots" pressure on Congress.

Here were some of the Committee statements on lobbying in the United States:

"One of the central purposes of government is that people should be able to reach it; the central purpose of what we call 'lobbying' is that they should be able to reach it with maximum impact and possibility of success."

The scope of lobbying "is constantly expanding. (It) is not generally understood because it evolves too quickly for periodic Congressional investigations to keep fully apace of it."

" . . . modern pressure on legislative bodies is rarely corrupt . . . is increasingly indirect, and largely the product of group rather than individual effort."

The report termed "inaccurate and unrealistic" most definitions of present day lobbying.

The refrain "from group after group", commented the report, is "Millions for 'education' or 'public enlightenment,' but not one cent for lobbying—as we define it."

The "only two practical gauges of lobbying activity", said the report, are "intent and some substantial effort to influence legislation. The means employed are secondary..." Intent and effort are the "only criteria inclusive enough to span the entire present system of pressure politics".

Growth Of Lobbying

The "sheer weight of group pressures had increased enormously during and subsequent to the Second World War...the impact of war solidly established lobbying as a major industry," said the report.

Increased government powers and necessity of organizing for national emergency brought "a marked increase in the number of organized groups having an active and continuous interest in shaping public policy to their own ends."

Their effort was "more intense, more diversified, and more effectively financed than it had ever been before," according to the report. With a high currency flow it was "good business to spend freely to protect administrative rulings — particularly one's self from adverse legislation or when the costs were chargeable to 'operating expenses'." Companies using institutional or editorial advertising to keep their names before the public, could, at no added cost, present their views on legislation, said the report. "Contributions to 'educational' leagues and foundations of every imaginable political color mushroomed. The entire pattern of pressure politics took on new dimensions during the war, and it has retained them ever since."

Groups and individuals filing under the lobby registration act have in three and a half years reported spending over $75 million, said the Committee. But this represeints "a very incomplete picture of the realities of lobbying" asserted the report. "If the full truth were ever known... lobbying, in all its ramifications, would prove to be a billion-dollar industry."

On lobby spending, the Committee said:

"So far as reported expenditures for lobbying are concerned, organized business far outspends other interests ...We believe lobbying to be every man's right. But some men are more able to make their rights meaningful than others. In practical terms, this has meant that those interests with the most to spend for protection have proclaimed lobbying for all men as an almost sacred article of faith. It is not unlike the elephant shouting 'Everyone for himself,' as he stomps up and down among the chickens."

Sources of Funds

"Lobbying is an important and usually an honest business, and it is a business which runs on money," said the House Committee. Sources of funds are "orthodox" solicitation directly from members in the form of dues, and contributions which are the means of support for "leagues," "foundations" and "committees". In the latter system, "the role of the large contributor. . . is vital".

"Merwin K. Hart of the National Economic Council has devised a method whereby large contributors can sponsor hundreds of subscriptions to council publications and at the same time enjoy that deep satisfaction which can come only to those who have made a tax - deductible gift to a charitable or religious institution."

Other groups depending on tax-deductible contributions, the Committee said, are: Committee for Constitutional Government, and Foundation for Economic Education. CCG, the Congressmen reported, uses a variety of mailing lists for specific fund-raising campaigns. The list of lists comprises 12 typewritten pages, said the investigators.

Lobby Techniques

The art of influencing legislation is constantly expanding, with new methods being developed and old tactics being used in new ways, reported the Committee.

The National Association of Real Estate Boards "has systematized all means of direct contact between its members and legislators more completely than any other group appearing before this committee," stated the report. NAREB has carefully selected contact men "of substance within their communities" to phone or visit key Congressmen at crucial points in the legislative process, the Committee said.

Aiding in the job of getting their views to lawmakers is the use of the Congressional frank, extensively employed by Committee for Constitutional Government. "Close to 2.5 million pieces of franked material of one Member of Congress were obtained by this organization alone in a single year for distribution postage - free at the taxpayers' expense. This same organization publicly advocates government economy."

The new emphasis in pressure tactics is on "lobbying at the grass roots", said the Committee. In this, the pressure group "seeks to create an appearance of broad public support for its aims". Example of a group capitalizing on this technique, said the Congressional report, is the Committee for Constitutional Government, which it said has filed under the lobbying act under protest.

The group's three major activities, asserted the Committee, appear to be raising money, stimulating letter and telegram campaigns on pending legislation, and distributing books and pamphlets to Congressmen, state legislators, private institutions, and individual citizens.

Another group aiming at "grass roots" is the tax-free Foundation for Economic Education, the Committee said, although its literature "contains little of the specific exhortation to action which is so much a part" of CCG literature.

But both groups "have as their major function the distribution of printed matter bearing on public issues, and this is probably the most important component in what we have called lobbying at the grass roots."

Every group using this method, however, "has a different tone, a different clientele, a different technique of distributing its materials."

Government Lobbying

The Committee checked allegations of unlawful lobbying by such bureaus as the Federal Security Administration and Agriculture and State Departments. The law prohibits use of public money to influence Congressmen. It said the agencies took no part in the legislative process which wasn't in line with their "duties of leadership in matters of public policy".

Minority Statement

The three Republican members of the Committee blasted the group's majority report as "lopsided", "intolerant", and "questionable."

The joint statement by Reps. Charles A. Halleck (Ind.), Clarence J. Brown (Ohio), and Joseph P. O'Hara (Minn.), issued Oct. 29, said the report "clearly is designed to help the leftists who are running for office on Administration tickets."

Their criticism, they pointed out, was made after a "hasty examination" of the report "which we have not had time to read thoroughly".

The Committee did not meet to consider the majority Report or vote on it, and thus it is not a report "of the Committee itself", the Republicans charged. Chairman Buchanan, issued the report while Congressmen couldn't be in Washington, due to political campaigns, said Halleck, Brown, and O'Hara.

"The majority members of the Committee say all lobbying by business and conservative elements is bad; all lobbying by left-wingers, labor organizations and Fair Deal office holders is good," the Republicans charged.

The "socialist white paper" approved the St. Paul "political rally" of Secretary of Agriculture Charles F. Brannan and "lobbying activities" of Oscar Ewing, Federal Security Agency chief, said the minority statement. The Republicans asserted that federal funds were "diverted illegally" at the St. Paul meeting, and Ewing took a "tax - financed European junket . . . to advocate socialalized medicine on a world state".

The majority report condemns "lawful petition by business and professional men and trade associations" and "implies that further legal restrictions on the Constitutional rights of free speech and petition should be imposed," said the statement.

The report "approves all lobbying by Government agencies as in the public interest" but condemns "as vicious" the "privately - financed, dignified, factual, educational campaigns by citizens, professional and business groups, opposed to the socialization of America", the three Republicans charged.

Buchanan's Rebuttal

Following the minority statement of Halleck, Brown, and O'Hara, Buchanan wrote the Washington Post, objecting to statements that the minority members were not consulted on the report.

The letter, as published Nov 10, said a galley proof of the report was submitted to all Committeemen in mid-August and was "reviewed and discussed in executive session and changes were made at the suggestion of both minority and majority members."

Two later revised galleys also went to minority and majority members, Buchanan said. He quoted from letters of Oct. 8 and 9 from Brown and Halleck discussing the report. Both letters "indicate that the writer had read and was familiar with the earlier galleys", Buchanan commented.

Buchanan denied that the investigation was motivated by politics. "I have tried my best to steer a straight course through difficult seas, and feel that a reading of the report itself will show that we have been fair and honest in our approach and temperate in our language."

To charges that the report glossed over government lobbying and approved a "political rally" at which funds were "diverted illegally," Buchanan cited hearings at which officials testified and said the General Accounting Office investigated charges of illegal agency lobbying and found nothing improper.

Senate Echoes

Democratic Sens. Elbert D. Thomas (Utah), James E. Murray (Mont.) and Theodore Francis Green (R.I.) said the House Lobby Committee's report on corporation lobbying revealed "corporations are spending millions of dollars for political propaganda" and urged requirement of full disclosure of such expenditures.

They referred to the House Committee's report that 152 corporations had spent more than $32 million in three years on activities "relating" to attempts to influence legislation. They backed Committee Chairman Buchanan's contention that lobbying should not be curbed but "should be carried on in a goldfish bowl".

Supplemental Reports

On Nov. 4, the Buchanan Committee issued another document. It was a printed collection of hundreds of documents from the files of the United States Savings and Loan League, a foe of public housing, and was released by the Committee as "a good overall picture of positive lobbying operation."

Chairman Buchanan said the League "had positive ideas as to affirmative government action they desired to help their business and they set about obtaining legislation carefully and methodically."

The Committee report, which consisted of a two page introduction, followed by 739 pages of appendixes, included numerous pieces of correspondence between the League and various Congressmen, discussing pending legislation.

Bodfish Bulletin

One of the documents was a "confidential bulletin from Morton Bodfish" (chairman of the League executive committee) sent June 9, 1950, to League members. It said, "Our business is indebted to its long-time friends in both houses" for "keeping alive the interest of the drive toward insurance-premium reduction whenever legislation affecting our institutions or their instrumentalities in Washington is in the hopper." Listed as the "friends" were Reps. Brent Spence (D Ky.), Jesse Wolcott (R Mich.) and Sen. John Bricker (R Ohio).

Other correspondence, between "Morton" (Bodfish) and "Ev" (ex-Rep. Everett M. Dirksen, elected Nov. 7 as new Illinois Senator), referred to 1947 slum clearance legislation on which both men expressed similar views. The League exchanged letters with a number of other Congressmen in regard to housing legislation.

Still more reports were issued in December.

Farm, Labor Spending

The Buchanan study on spending by farm and labor organizations to influence legislation gave tables of expenditures by nine organizations questioned by letter.

Total for four farm groups — American Farm Bureau Federation, National Farmers Union, National Council of Farmer Cooperatives, and the National Grange — was $931,569.72.

The five labor groups — American Federation of Labor, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, Congress of Industrial Organizations, International Association of Machinists, and United Mine Workers of America — reported spending a total of $2,117,383.

The totals were based on amounts the groups reported spending on travel to and from Washington, maintenance of Washington offices, printing, advertising, contributions to other organizations, and for miscellaneous legislative activities.

Casbo's Methods

In its study of the Conference of American Small Business Organizations, the Buchanan group listed CASBO's methods as (1) Attempts to influence legislation directly through personal contact with Congressmen, formal Committee appearances, and by sending letters, telegrams, resolutions, analyses, and poll results to legislators, and (2) lobbying indirectly through various publications which "exhort" the reader to contact Congressmen on pending legislation.

CASBO also "participates actively in elections and reviews school textbooks for their conformity to CASBO standards", the Buchanan report stated.

"For good or ill, CASBO is doing essentially what many other groups are trying to do," said the Committee. These groups have recognized that "traditional" lobbying is not enough and "have entered upon a for reaching and infinitely ambitious struggle to control public opinion", according to the Buchanan study.

The Buchanan Committee said "it is proper and desirable that small business be represented before Congress" but if the representation is by groups "whose single-minded attachment to the special interest of small business is open to question, the Congress cannot rely on their expressions as to the true needs and interests of small business".

The Committee majority reports were followed Jan. 3 by a minority report of Charles Halleck (R Ind.), Clarence J. Brown (R Ohio), and Joseph P. Hara (R Minn.), who said the Committee had "fallen far short of the important and desirable purposes underlying" its creation. The Republicans also criticized the Democrats for failing to recommend "much needed amendments" to the lobby law.

Lobby Files Closure

During 1950, official files of reports filed under the lobby registration law were closed to the press and the public for extended periods, despite the provision of the law which provides for their availability to the public.

Inspection of all current lobby reports was prohibited for a period of four and a half months starting in early April. Following petitions to House leaders by Congressional Quarterly the files were put on a half-open basis at the end of August.

Under the half-available plan, registrations of new lobbyists could be scrutinized on request, but financial reports of lobbies were withheld until printed in the Congressional Record, weeks after the end of the three-month period they covered.

The reports are made under the 1946 Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act to both the Senate Secretary and House Clerk. Those officials closed the files after a new reporting form was introduced March 31 at the request of the House Select Committee on Lobbying Activities, headed by Rep. Frank Buchanan (D Pa.) (See page 752.) Under the new plan, one long registration form replaced the three forms used from the time the Act went into effect in 1946.

The officials said the new method, intended eventually to simplify the lobby registration process, had made so much more work for their staffs that they could not take time to comply with the provision that the reports be open for inspection.

All current lobby reports, therefore, were withheld between April 17 and July 14. On July 14, reports filed through May 5 were printed in the Congressional Record, and made available to public inspection. These covered registrations and financial statements for the first three months of 1950.

Action During 'Blackout'

After its analysis of legislation showed that in many cases bills then before Congress had been acted on while registrations of lobbyists concerned were withheld, Congressional Quarterly on Aug. 14 sent letters to House officials calling this to their attention.

The letters were addressed to Speaker Sam Rayburn (D Tex.), Minority Leader Joseph W. Martin, Jr., (R Mass.), and Ralph Roberts, Clerk of the House. Copies were sent to members of the Buchanan Committee.

The letters pointed out that the lobby data was withheld from scrutiny at a time when vital emergency legislation was being written. A formal request was made to the officials to take immediate action to open for public inspection the files containing information listed by lobbyists who had registered since May 5.

House Clerks Roberts and Buchanan said they expected an improvement in the situation soon. Other Congressmen petitioned replied that they would study the lobby files situation.

Improvement Expected

On Aug. 22, reports filed between May 5 and July 20 were published in the Record, and made accessible to the public. Soon afterwards, all registrations were made available on a current basis. Financial reports continued to be withheld until their publication in the Record.

Financial reports filed between July 20 and Oct. 20 appeared in the Record on Nov. 27.

LOBBY SPENDING BREAKING RECORDS

CCG, Farm Bureau, and AMA Led In First Six Months of 1950

324 GROUPS REPORT

Three-hundred twenty-four organizations -- associations, unions, firms -- reported to the Congress under the Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act that they spent $5,272,739.35 in the first half of 1950, an exclusive Congressional Quarterly News Features survey showed.

The Committee for Constitutional Government, a storm-center during the hearings of the Buchanan House Select Committee on Lobbying Activities, led all others in the amount reported spent, $517,580.19, but business groups as a whole -- 150 of them -- led all other categories with $1,808,997.15.

The reports, which covered income and spending, legislative interests and publications, reflected big and little fights of the second session, 81st Congress. Bulking large were issues like national health insurance; excise tax repeal; government spending and reorganization; social welfare programs; various foreign policy measures; federal regulation, subsidy or supplementing of various private industries, especially transportation; natural resources development; labor-management relationships; postal rate increases; and farm legislation.

The roundup, which does not include reported expenditures and receipts of any group if reported later than July 20, showed that the tempo of lobby spending -- or of lobby expenditures reporting -- continued to increase in 1950 just as it had done in previous years. In fact, each year since the lobbying law went into effect Aug. 2, 1946, has shown a swelling of reported disbursements. In some cases, this is a result of increased legislative activity by the nation's organizations; in other cases it merely reflects different expenditure reporting methods.

The 1950 first-half figures of $5.27 million was really an understatement, because it was composed, in an unusually large degree of reports which covered the first quarter only. This was because in 1950 the financial reports were withheld from public scrutiny until printed in the Congressional Record, and this roundup included only those reports which were turned in before the House clerks closed the books on the roundups which were printed in the Records of July 14 and August 22. It did not include reports which did not become available to the public until November 27, when the Record carried 102 pages of data.

The $5.27 million 1950 first-half figure compares as follows with those of former years (which are more nearly entirely on a six-month basis):

In 1949, $4,342,998 was spent by 273 groups, according to reports filed by late September ($4,347,026 from 279 reporting units if individuals are counted also);

In 1948, $3,764,538 was reported spent by 237 groups as of the end of September (counting a few individuals who used the organizational report forms);

In 1947, $2,692,869 was reported spent by 132 groups as of early August.

WHAT SURVEY INCLUDES

The 1950 figures, as well as those of previous years, are based chiefly on the reports by organizations and largely ignore those of individual lobbyists who work for these organizations or for other clients. Approximately 2,000 individuals, law and public relations firms, and other agents have filed under the lobbying law, though many claim they are not lobbyists or are not required to file under the lobbying law. About 1,000 lobbyists and legislative agents filed financial reports for the first quarter or first half of 1950.

In many cases, the reports by the organizations cover the receipts and expenditures of their agents as well. In a number of cases, organizational reports do not include data given by their agents.

In a very large number of cases, legislative represenatives of trade associations, unions, firms, and other groups have filed reports and their clients have not. This is largely because a multi-purpose organization may interpret the lobbying law's language to excuse them from making financial reports on grounds that their "principal purpose" is not seeking to influence legislation, but their legislative agents are less likely to feel that this language excuses them, too.

Counting both individual and organizational financial reports for the first two quarters where available, over 2,050 were checked and the organizational reports condensed for this roundup. Of the 2,050 documents, CQ examined about 1,700 of them in toto as filed by the organizations; the rest were prepared for this roundup on the basis of what was printed in the "Congressional Record".

THE BIG SPENDERS

Ten organizations reported spending more than $100,000 each.

Committee for Constitutional Government, Inc., New York City, led at the half-year mark with $517,580.19. CCG's rate of reported expenditures in the first half of 1950 was considerably higher than in 1949, when it spent $306,297 for the half-year, $620,632 for the year.

The $454,172.06 reported by American Farm Bureau Federation for the seven months ending June 30, 1949, which was the second highest organizational expenditure reported, is not at all comparable to AFBF's 1949 first-half figure of $29,314, which was for its Washington office only. The 1950 figure included costs of running "several departments" and other items not covered in the 1949 reports.

The third-highest entry, that of the American Medical Association with $347,575.48, is on a legislative allocation basis. If the $74,850.48 reported disbursed by AMA in Washington were to be added to the $700,000 which AMA's National Education Campaign said it got from AMA, AMA's disbursements would then stand at $774,850.48.

These figures compare with the $508,397 AMA reported spent by July of 1949, and the $1,522,683 full-year 1949 AMA figure. (AMA figures for 1949 and the $774,850 figure for 1950 should be cut in half, AMA feels, because only half is for legislative work on the theory that the Education Campaign is partly to defeat national health insurance and partly to sell people on voluntary prepaid medical plans.)

The ten biggest reported expenditures:

Committee for Constitutional Government	$517,580.19
American Farm Bureau Federation (7 months)	454,172.06
American Medical Association (allocation)	347,575.48
Transportation Association of America (total; six months)	200,511.67
United World Federalists (total; said less than 15% is allocable to lobbying)	191,473.47
National Association of Electric Companies (total)	184,308.23
Association of American Railroads (allocation)	158,844.21
Townsend Plan, Inc., and Townsend National Weekly, Inc. (first quarter only)	153,986.59
National Small Business Men's Association (total)	119,498.17
National Milk Producers Federation (total).	108,408.25

(Note: The Townsend groups' first-quarter figure is given although they have filed later reports; however, these reports are not available in time for this survey. If the Townsend expenditures continued at the same rate, they would rank fourth in this list.)

The above list does not necessarily include the organizations with the biggest total expenditures for all purposes, legislative and non-legislative, which have filed reports or whose agents have filed. Where an organization listed a total expenditure of over $100,000 for example, and an allocation of under $100,000, it was not added to this list and the lesser figure was used in arriving at the $5,272,739 spending total and other spending subtotals.

SPENDING BY CATEGORIES

Business associations and firms reported the biggest expenditures, with a total of $1,808,997.15 from 150 groups. In addition, tax groups -- most of whose receipts came from business donors -- reported a total of $227,153.19 spent by 30 organizations. The combined total for business and tax organizations thus was $2,036,150.34 spent by 180 groups.

The 46 citizens groups, their total swelled by the $517,580.19 spent by the high scoring Committee for Constitutional Government, expended $989,383.42 for the second-place figure.

Farm groups, 12-strong, were boosted by the American Farm Bureau Federation's second highest individual group's $454,172.06 figure into third place among categories, with a $648,888.99 figure. The AFBF figure, however, was a 7-month one, and included non-legislative costs, that organization said. In 1949, AFBF's first-half outlay was $29,314, for Washington office expenses, according to its reports.

The business groups' apparent 1950 decline of $62,080 from the first-place $1,871,077 sum it put out in 1949 may be explained by the fact that $45,793 spent by National Associated Businessmen and 10 of its affiliates in the 1949 period were counted by CQ under the business category, whereas the 1950 roundup classifies NAB groups under tax units, and also by the fact that this 1950 roundup has a greater proportion of "first-quarter only" data than the 1949 roundup had by Sept. 20, 1949.

However, it should also be noted that the 1950 business figure includes the $200,511.67 reported spent by Transportation Association of America, while the 1949 sum does not include any figure for TAA, which had filed reports without expenditures totals at that time.

The big boom in the 1950 tax group expenditure total, from $99,879 last year at the mid-point to $227,153, is accounted for not only by CQ's own shift of classification, but more importantly, by the terrific drive for excise and cooperative taxation early this year.

The drop this year in the first-half reported expenditures by professional groups, from $586,007 in 1949 to $549,393, is much more than accounted for by the big-spending American Medical Association figures. AMA's total in January-June of 1949 was counted as $508,397, although the medics thought only half of that figure was allocable to legislative work. But the 1950 first-half AMA reportable expenditure was chalked up as $347,575, though AMA's National Education Campaign arm reported simultaneously that it had been given $700,000 by AMA and AMA's own figures showed that, in addition to whatever it had given the Campaign, it had also spent $74,850.48, mostly in Washington.

METHODS OF ALLOCATION

The Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act does not spell out whether total budget or the portion of expenses judged allocable to legislative efforts shall be reported, nor has there been a decision on which is to be used. There is no clear and universally accepted method of determining how to allocate. The reported expenditure figures, therefore, vary widely as to what they cover.

Some groups which allocate simply report the expenses of their Washington office. Others, like the Chamber of Commerce of the U.S., report the whole expenses of various departments and allocate a percentage of publication expense of other departments. Others take a flat percentage of the total as lobbying expense. Some, like the CIO, report the salaries of their lobbyists on individual lobbyist expense forms and other legislative allocations on the organization expense sheet (in which case the figure does not include salaries).

Some organizations report that fraction of their publication costs which the legislative contents bear to the whole content (AFL and U.S. Savings and Loan League). Others, which have carried many legislative stands in their house organs which are sent to Congressmen and to their members, do not count their publication costs.

Still other organizations do not explain in detail their allocation formula, but give total expense, or total expense of most categories, and the amount allocated to lobbying. The National Association of Home Builders adopted this procedure.

Others give only the allocation figure. And still others set down a figure without indication of just what it means, presumably relying on the context to give it meaning.

Because of the great variation in the reporting, it is not desirable, therefore, to give too great weight to direct and unqualified comparisons between various organizations' or categories of organizations' expenditures as reported -- the dollar figures just do not always mean the same things.

COMPLAINTS ABOUT THE FORM

The new report form, put into effect on recommendation of a 4-0 vote of the Buchanan Committee investigating lobbying, has elicited information in many cases which the old forms did not -- analysis of receipts and expenditures, description of legislative measures of interest to the organizations, data on loans, quantities and description of literature issued, etc.

But it also appears to have rendered more difficult the problems of those filling out the form, to judge from the complaints and queries written on the forms or on accompanying letters. These queries were frequently addressed to the Clerk of the House or the Secretary of the Senate, as these officials are in charge of filing the documents. Others were addressed to the Buchanan committee of the House. However, these officials do not appear to have statutory authority to guarantee that, if their advice is followed in any given case, it will then be deemed by other authorities that full compliance has been had. Of course, much of the complaint fundamentally was addressed to the issue of whether it was necessary to file, and not to the particular form in use.

A common complaint arose from the fact that the language of the form's receipts section seems adapted to the situation of associations or other bodies which raise as well as disburse funds, rather than to the agent of such bodies or to commercial firms. Some association reports, however, complained that the form does not permit them to present properly the picture of their work and finances, and used appended statements to give the data.

Some of this discussion and accompanying data was not printed in the July 14 Congressional Record, which carried most of the first-quarter reports. Most of this discussion and much accompanying data was deleted in the editorial preparation of the August 22 Congressional Record, which carried some additional first-quarter reports and many second-quarter ones.

CONGRESSIONAL QUARTERLY LOBBY REGISTRATIONS

SUMMARY

"Congress shall make no law...abridging the freedom of speech or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the government for a redress of grievances." -- First Amendment, Constitution of the United States.

The hundreds of people and organizations engaged in, and the millions of dollars spent annually on influencing legislation, is, in part, the modern development of this Constitutional right of petition. However, since the First Congress in 1789, pressures also have been exerted on members that were concerned only with gaining special privileges for one segment of the population or another. Congress for years talked about the lobbyist, but not until 1946 did it attempt, through the Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act, to bring into the open and put on record this type of pressure.

Congressional Quarterly News Features believes that these influences, sometimes highly organized, create and are an essential part of any meaningful story of our Congress, which must consider and act on the often-conflicting stated needs, hopes, fears, and values of the various types of groups in the population. These desires are sometimes expressed as legislative proposals directly to Congress or its individual Members, sometimes via "grass-roots" stimulation of public opinion, and sometimes via contacts with the Executive Branch. They are the raw material out of which national public policy, as well as the satisfaction of the private claims, must be hewed.

Believing this, CQ has given extensive coverage to the developments that followed enactment of the Lobbying Act, as well as to other data on such groups seeking to motivate legislative action. It should be stressed, however, that in listing registrations, pressure programs, financial reports, etc., no distinction is made as to the validity of purpose of any organization or individual. All comment is left to the readers.

Since Title III of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 went into effect Congressional Quarterly has published lobby registrations as filed with the Clerk of the House of Representatives. CQ has recorded the pressures exerted on Congress, analyzed the lobby financial statements and reported on lobby legislative programs.

There have been about 2,000 individuals, law or public relations firms, or organizations registered since the law became effective. This is not the number of registrations or of clients represented because: (1) some individuals have registered more than once, either for several clients or because of change in status; (2) some have registered for more than one client at a time; and (3) some clients have more than one registered representative. In addition, a considerable number of registrants have withdrawn. The two thousand-odd registrants represent upwards of 1,000 client organizations, individuals, or firms.

In some cases, clients have filed registrations in their own names, and their agents, officers, or employees have filed also. The legal rationalization for organizational filing, besides what many of them call "an abundance of caution", appears to be the thought that an organization like a union or trade association is not only the principal for whom its agents act, but also the agent of its members. This, however, appears to be a minority view of possible interpretations of the law's requirements, and registrations in the group's own name number in the dozens, not hundreds. This roundup shows such registrations and includes the names of the persons signing the group filings, as well as the registrations by the agents.

Aside from the clients registered for and those for whom financial reports have been filed, there are others which may be considered as lobbies or which conduct some activities to influence legislation, but which do not consider themselves as lobbies -- or as covered by the lobbying law -- and therefore do not file registrations or financial reports nor do their agents. Of course, some who do file also deny that they are covered by the lobbying law, or dispute its constitutionality.

The following list contains registrations between Dec. 13, 1949, and Dec. 31, 1950, with the House Clerk and the Senate Secretary, for 385 clients. This represents approximately 400 registrants, since there is some duplication and overlapping.

(It should be noted also that registrations and financial reports are separate things, though now filed on the same form. They are required by separate parts of the lobbying law, and in many cases registrations are not required of those who must file reports.)

THE REGISTRATIONS

Following is the registration roundup for 1950, arranged by category, and within the category in alphabetical order, except that state, local or other affiliates follow the parent body immediately instead of being alphabetically listed.

BUSINESS

General

AMERICAN TRADE ASSN. OF MOROCCO, Casablanca.
Robert Emmet Rodes, Casablanca and Washington (Works in interest of ATAM and Morocco Post No. 1, American Legion; said question "by whom employed" was "not applicable". No arrangement for compensation; expected that expenses would be reimbursed by the two groups when feasible).

NATL. ASSN. OF LIFE UNDERWRITERS, INC., N.Y.C.

Herbert R. Hill, Richmond, Virginia, non-salaried trustee and committee chairman. (Does not believe that his activities bring him within application of lobbying law);

Gordon D. McKinney, N.Y.C., actuary (salary $10,000 yearly, but reports $602.80 "conceivably applicable" to Lobbying Act. This figure is 22 days at $27.40 each);

Morgan and Calhoun, attorneys-at-law, Washington (filed by Leonard J. Calhoun). (Employed until final action on pending revenue bill, HR 8920. To be paid "reasonable fee" to be determined solely on time basis);

Nathaniel H. Seefurth, chairman, Committee on Federal Law and Legislation, N.Y.C. (Stated president, vice president, secretary, treasurer, trustees, and committee chairmen of association serve without compensation).

NATL. ASSN. OF MUTUAL SAVINGS BANKS, N.Y.C.

George Hurley, lawyer, of Hurley, Moriarty & Moakler, Providence; also

George B. Lester, partner in law firm of Oliver and Donnally, N.Y.C. and Washington ($7,500 approximately is annual share of partnership income for services to NAMSB. Not more than 15% of this is for purposes mentioned in lobbying law. He is paid by the law firm, which is retained by the banking groups. Does not believe required to file).

NATL. ASSN. OF SECURITIES DEALERS, INC., Washington.

Wallace H. Fulton, executive director, combining functions ordinarily those of a president and secretary ($2,500 a year is estimated maximum portion of his salary, based on time to be spent); also,

John W. Lindsey, counsel ($1,500 a year of salary is maximum estimate).

M. H. SHERMAN COMPANY, management and investments, Los Angeles.

Charles D. Hamel, and

F. Weaver Myers, partners in law firm of Hamel, Park & Saunders, Washington (Law firm is employed re various matters, including legislative, $150 per day); also,

Food and Agricultural Products

AMERICAN PAPER & PULP ASSN., N.Y.C.

Filed in its own name (signed by Earl W. Tinker, executive secretary. Believes activities not covered by lobbying law and reserves right to challenge any and all provisions of that law and its application to the past, present, or future activities of the Association); also, by

Earl W. Tinker (Compensation of "such proportion of the registrant's annual salary of $25,000 as his time spent on legislative matters bears to his total working time");

Fred Morrell, Washington representative (Compensation will be such proportion of his $9,000 annual salary as his time spent on legislative matters bears to his total working time. Doubts lobbying law applies and reserves right to challenge the law).

AMERICAN PULPWOOD ASSN., N.Y.C.

Filed as organization in own name; also, by

E. H. Brinckerhoff, secretary (Legislative activities "will be such as to preclude any remote suggestion that their 'principal purpose' " is to influence lawmaking or to collect money for use "principally" to that end. Registration filed out of caution, and over protest of some Board of Directors members. Brinckerhoff's compensation, for registration purposes, is portion of his $13,000 annual salary proportional to time spent on legislative action).

THE AMERICAN TOBACCO COMPANY, N.Y.C.
Leo A. Diamond, employee of law firm of Chadbourne, Wallace, Parke & Whiteside, N.Y.C.

WEST VIRGINIA PULP AND PAPER COMPANY, Wood Department, N.Y.C.
M. H. Collet, forest engineer and assistant to a vice president. (Denies applicability of lobbying law to his work, reserves right to contest its applicability and its constitutionality if it should apply to his activities).

Oil, Gas and Mining

AMERICAN COAL SALES ASSN., Washington.
Filed in group name (by W. W. Bayfield, executive secretary; disclaimed that lobbying law requires it); also, by Amos H. Gall, assistant executive secretary. (Filed but disclaimed required to do so. Said no compensation other than reimbursement for expenses).

AMERICAN PETROLEUM INSTITUTE, N.Y.C.
Frank M. Porter, president. ($60,000 yearly, for all duties, including legislative; latter is anticipated to take a very small portion of his time. Believed not required to file, but Justice Department had expressed view that his predecessor was subject to lobbying law; his duties same as predecessor's);
Fayette B. Dow, senior partner of law firm of Dow, Lohnes, and Albertson, Washington. (Dow is special representative of API, with authority to act for it only re specific subjects. API opposes continuation of existing excise tax on lubricating oils. For that purpose, Dow was assisted by Donald C. O'Hara of his office, who appeared before Ways and Means Committee hearings. Substantially no other activity by either Dow or O'Hara on this matter, and $600 would be ample to cover services of both. $1,000 a year of Dow's total income "would amply cover all time which may be devoted to federal legislation..."); Donald C. O'Hara, Washington. (Employed and paid by Fayette B. Dow for "various legal work". Believes that $600 "can properly be assigned to the work I expect to do" re excise taxes).

AMERICAN TUNGSTEN ASSN., INC., Fresno, California.
H. A. Savage, Fresno and Washington. (To be paid "What Board of Directors may allow -- expenses and reasonably for time -- probably $500. per week").

INDIVIDUALS

HORACE CARTER, N.Y.C.

Filed reregistration (See CQ Almanac, 1949, p. 863; previous registrations said self-employed. 1950 form answered "to be filed accordingly" to questions on pay, expenses, and principal).

CARESSE CROSBY, Washington.

Filed in own name (self-employed in interest of "Women of the World Against War". Unpaid).

JOSEPH MOLNAR, Washington.

Filed in own name (Reregistration; filed in 1947 for "Taxpayers and the Unemployed").

HARRY MOPSICK, Linden, N.J.

Filed in his own name, as a self-employed lawyer. (Also as representing interests of three tenants' organizations, with no compensation and at own expense; see under Citizens Groups, the Natl. Tenants' Council and following items. Does not believe his activity covered by lobbying law).

JOSEPH H. YOUNG, Charlottesville, Va. (law student).

Sutherland, Tuttle & Brennan, law firm, Washington (filed April 29 by Mac Asbill, Jr., member. Retained until passage of accidental death private claims bill, which, as introduced, stated 10% maximum compensation for lawyers).

LOBBYIST WITHDRAWALS

There is no machinery explicitly provided in the Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act for the withdrawal by a lobbyist or organization from the registration lists, nor is there any official file of such withdrawals. Consequently, many of those who registered at one time may have dropped out of activity without notice. Also, those who have given notice of withdrawal have done so in various ways, and their terminations have been filed in various places.

Congressional Quarterly Almanac has gathered these withdrawals from various files, but the list which follows does not pretend to include all, because of the way they are kept and the way they are worded.

In addition to those listed, there were a considerable number who said in their reports that their legislative interests would continue until the end of the Congress, or through the year 1950. These are not listed here because it is not clear whether they meant that as a definite withdrawal, dated to coincide with the end of the 81st Congress, or merely that the specific bills of interest would die with the Congress unless passed by it, and that they would be active on the bills which would be considered by the new Congress.

In the case of a number who said that their legislative interests had terminated, and who did not indicate that subsequent, final reports would be filed in which final payments for services and final disbursements statements would be listed, they are listed here even though in some cases it is possible that they will make such statements.

Other cases not included in this list are those in which the individuals concerned said that their interests would last for a stated length of time, or until a specific date, then in the future, but without further explanation. In such cases additional, final, reports would probably be required, and CQ will list them as withdrawals after such reports are filed.

Also, excluded from this list are those who said that their interests would continue until passage of a specific bill or of specific bills, even though such bills were passed later, but who did not make final reports.

While there is no formal machinery for withdrawal provided for in the law, the new combined form does ask those filing it to "please explain, so that this Office will no longer expect to receive Reports" if legislative interests have terminated with the current quarter. It is not always clear, however, that an individual means to withdraw when he indicates that the specific bill or bills in which he was interested have ceased to be legislative issues. In some cases, such persons may wish to stay registered because they foresee the possibility of new, legislative interests. An answer which merely lists a past date of termination of interest, and which has been construed by CQ as a withdrawal, may not, therefore, be one.

Dates given below are for the effective termination of lobbying activity in most cases, and for the report of termination, in some cases. Report of termination, usually, is within three months of termination, but in some cases it is considerably later.

Withdrawal and termination dates given are in 1950, unless otherwise stated.

Dates of original registration, based mainly on the Justice Department-compiled indexes published by the House Select Committee on Lobbying Activities, likewise are for 1950 unless stated. In some cases, withdrawals were made by persons or groups which did not register but did file financial reports previous to or simultaneous with the termination-of-interest notice.

This list is based on statements filed before the House Clerk's cutoff date for inclusion in the Nov. 27 "Congressional Record" -- quarterly reports (which may have carried withdrawals) filed after that date were not available by CQ Almanac's deadline for this feature.
